Mr. Bill Walker: In his consideration of the increase in numbers, did my hon. Friend bear in mind the huge number of petitioners, the length of time that the Committee would take and the fact that there is a quorum for the Committee? Given that there is a quorum, it is more likely to be met on a regular basis with a larger number of people upon whom to call.

Mr. Michael Brown: That was obviously one of the problems in the mind of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in tabling the motion. The volume of work will be such that there will not always be nine or 11 Members present all the time. That is why it will be necessary to have a larger number, bearing in mind that the Members will have to go to France and all round the country and hold sessions long into the future because of the volume of petitions. These incredible beings at the end of the day are only human, and they will not always be able to attend. Therefore, it was decided to have a higher figure to take account of the fact that some will be absent.

I observe that the Government imagine that anything up to six may be away at any one time. That may well meet my hon. Friend's point.

As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary correctly indicated, the Minister of State is in his place, refreshed, and will have got the gist of the brief argument that I have been adducing. On that note, therefore, I will say no more, and look forward to his reply.

2.57 am

Mr. Andrew Rowe (Mid-Kent): I believe that the number of members on the Select Committee will need to be kept as small as is reasonable because the length of time for which the Committee will have to sit will be inordinately long. It would be quite improper to remove too many Members from the other business of the House. Therefore, I would be opposed to having too large a number on the Committee.

[Mr. Andrew Rowe]

As I understand it, there is no obligation on the Select Committee to put a term on its deliberations. It is entitled to continue as long as it feels it is necessary to do so to satisfy the petitioners who appear before it.

Mr. Bill Walker: My hon. Friend may not have heard quite clearly my intervention just now. The larger the number available, if a quorum of about three is accepted, the greater the opportunities for people to be absent.

Mr. Rowe: I think that there is considerable merit in allowing the members of the Committee to build up a coherence of understanding with the petitioners. That becomes difficult if large numbers of them are regularly absent. The more one persuades the Committee to meet as a smallish, coherent group, the better the deal the petitioner will receive.

The variety of petitons will be considerable. A large number of people of Kent rightly feel that it is too easily assumed that the creation of the tunnel will bring prosperity automatically to Kent. Earlier the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Dubs) said that there was a real possibility that Kent would be an overall loser rather than an overall gainer from the tunnel. We in Kent are as likely to suffer increased unemployment as increased employment. A body of petitioners will wish to make known its views about the various amendments to the Bill that might ameliorate that danger.

For far too long Kent has been the entry door to the United Kingdom for people and firms that have not waited even for a minute to see what the county itself could offer them. Instead, they have hurried on to inferior parts of the country that appear at first sight to offer a commercial advantage when they would have done much better by themselves and the people of Kent if they had stayed in our county.

The number of petitions may be reduced in the Joint Consultative Committee, of which the Minister of State is chairman, promises to continue its work right up to the opening of the tunnel so that the total impact of the new development on the county can be evaluated.

The Select Committee will have an important task to perform in sorting out the difference between petitions that are genuinely based on the tunnel and others. We have heard more than once in the debate the wholly misleading claim, for example, that the building of the missing link of the M20 is somehow tunnel-related. The missing link was the subject of my first parliamentary question as a Member of Parliament. I asked that it be reinstated in the road-building programme. That had nothing to do with the tunnel but with the fact that my consitutents had been clamouring for it for many years. They welcomed enormously the solemn pledge that it will be finished by, I think, 1989. That is reassuring. The fact that its cost is being bandied about by people who disapprove of the tunnel is irrelevant. The Select Committee will have to take careful note of the distinctions between such erroneous claims and others.

Another example is the tremendous need for a third crossing of the River Medway. It would be stretching credibility too far to say that we need it because of the tunnel proposal. We need it for other reasons, and I hope very much that we get it. That is the sort of thing that the Select Committee will have to evaluate.

The county as a whole also needs a great deal of extra road infrastructure so that it can stand a chance of competing with other parts of the United Kingdom that will benefit from the rapid transit of freight through the tunnel to London and further north. If we are to cope with the increased number of vehicles that will come into Kent, we shall require a better road system. Again, I do not think that all of that will be strictly tunnel-related. The Select Committee will need to consider that as well.

The Select Committee will need to be very flexible in its handling of petitions and petitioners. I made that point in the debate two days ago. While a Joint Consultative Committee quite rightly responds to public concern by altering certain aspects of a Bill, it is extremely difficult for petitioners to draft their petitions in detail in a form that meets their anxieties. It should be possible for them to put in a petition and to have it heard in slightly different form if that is the appropriate form at the time when the petition is heard.

I am serving on a private Bill Committee at the moment. I know that it is not a strict parallel—we have been told that by the Chair tonight—but there is no doubt that our petitioners have been ill-advised in some respects to pitch their objections in too precise and narrow a form. It has meant that some of the anxieties that they reasonably want to express cannot be expressed because they are not strictly covered in their petition. It would be quite inappropriate for a Select Committee, dealing with a matter of such tremendous concern, to narrow its interpretation of what is properly dealt with in a petitioner's petition to something that it too strictly defined.

Another group of petitioners that will come before the Select Committee comes from the agriculture industry. There is a clear sign that the compulsory purchase procedures associated with the Bill are likely to be oppressive to a number of farmers in Kent. Compulsory purchase procedures have been designed for the benefit of a private consortium. The rules suggest that the price offered has to be the open market value that would apply if the Channel tunnel were not being built and if the land were being sold in the normal way. The land will not be sold in the normal way. It is to be sold because of the tunnel. A number of petitioners will put in their petitions in the hope of obtaining a rather more equitable solution to the problem. Perhaps I should remind the House that the author of "Alice in Wonderland" was for 20 years a second permanent secretary at the Treasury. We can understand a great deal about Treasury procedure if we bear that piece of information in mind.

My point about the need for the Select Committee to be as flexible as possible in its handling of petitioners is exemplified by the danger that good agricultural land will be lost not simply because of the compulsory purchase of land needed for particular parts of the construction, but because the amount of trespass and interference with farming that appears these days to be the inevitable concomitant of residential or warehousing development will affect farms that will not be affected directly through compulsory purchase. Again, the Select Committee will need to take a sympathetic view of petitioners who wish to bring those matters to its attention.

Similarly—this is a further example of the elasticity of mind required of those who serve on the Committee—there will be a considerable body of petitioners concerned with such matters as plant health. The creation of the tunnel will, I suspect, almost certainly mean a considerable increase in the volume of agricultural produce entering this country. If the inspection procedures at the tunnel entrance are not satisfactory to ensure that that produce is not diseased, we may find that our record of good plant hygiene is threatened.

Another factor which concerns many of my constituents, and, I am sure, the constituents of many hon. Members is the danger of rabies. A group of petitions to be presented to the Select Committee will deal with the real anxiety that people feel about the possibility that the tunnel will make it easier for rabies to spread to this country.

I believe that it would be a mistake to enlarge the Committee too much, partly because it would then be difficult to secure a coherent view of the various petitions as they came in and partly because the Committee would have to sit for some time to give a fair hearing to petitioners, especially, dare I say, petitioners from Kent, who feel strongly that on this matter it is absolutely essential that their petitions receive a full and proper hearing.

Sir John Farr: I have been listening to my hon. Friend with great interest. He mentioned rabies, which is a very important issue. As he said, that danger has existed at the Channel ports for a number of years. How will the Select Committee comprise of people who can correctly interpret the skilled information which will be provided by witnesses during the Committee proceedings? It will require a certain amount of study on the part of several hon. Members on both sides of the House to be able to absorb the facts properly and to put two and two together to reach the right answer about the rabies threat. Does my hon. Friend agree that the task of selecting the Committee members should be performed by the wizard of Oz? It will be very difficult to find the right people.

Mr. Rowe: I can think of no hon. Member more like the wizard of Oz than the Chairman of the Committee of Selection. To that extent, I have some hope that that job will be performed satisfactorily. I am bound to say that lack of expertise has seldom been a reason for hon. Members failing to perform a duty. I hope that the Select Committee will call witnesses who will be able to inform the Committee precisely about the dangers and, perhaps more importantly, the nature of the precautions to obviate those dangers about which the House will need to know before it gives the Bill its Third Reading.

These matters are of fundamental importance. The possibility of rabies entering this country has existed ever since ships began to carry rats. However, that danger is more real with the creation of a fixed link. Therefore, it is essential that the Select Committee should call the right witnesses and report to the House on the best way to ensure that scourge stays away from our shores. I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) for raising that matter.

I conclude by re-emphasising the fact that the Select Committee should be free to spend as long as necessary to hear all the petitioners. It is important to the people of Kent that their petitions be heard in extenso, so that they are not only given the opportunity to air their anxieties and to suggest improvements to the Bill—and I believe that there is great scope for improving the Bill—but that they are seen to have been heard. There has been considerable anxiety about the amount of time given to lodge petitions being too short. Let us at least ensure that when petitions are lodged they are treated flexibly and heard in extenso.

3.15 am

Mr. Bill Walker (Tayside, North): My hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) has put clearly the situation as he sees it affecting his constituency. I find myself in a rather dangerous and delicate position. As hon. Members are aware, I represent a Scottish constituency. I have been struggling all evening to try to find reasons why I should support or oppose the Bill. I can honestly say that I have had a fairly detached view of it. The Channel tunnel seemed a long way from my constituency and from my constituents' interests.

From what I have heard this evening, I am in a dangerous position because I am beginning to think that there are so few like me in the House that we may well find ourselves on the Committee. That I look forward to with horror. So I must find some way between now and then of advising the Chairman of the Committee of Selection that some of my business interests will, I hope, mean that I can debar myself from selection.

Anyone who has listened to the many speeches that have been made this evening will realise that this Select Committee will be unique. As was said earlier, it will be moving into uncharted waters. There is no doubt that the people who will be affected by the Channel tunnel, the petitioners, will expect the House and the Committee, however it is composed, to give serious deliberation to their comments, remarks and views so that, whatever the outcome, they may feel that they have been dealt with honourably, fairly and justly. That is important.

It is all very well for hon. Members to jump on a particular bandwagon and make speeches about the advantages, imagined or real, that will affect them. The members of the Committee will have to be of a calibre and a type who are not debarred and there will be great difficulty in finding them. They will be called upon to act in this semi-judicial capacity in order to pass judgment on matters that are vital to the beautiful county of Kent.

I may at last have found an interest; thank goodness. My wife's family came from Kent. I hope that that debars me. I say that because when my wife's parents were alive I can remember spending many happy holidays in the beautiful county of Kent. My wife's first reaction to the Channel tunnel was to say, "Oh dear, what will they do to Kent?" It would be sad if, whatever happens as a result of the Committee being set up, the Committee did not take into consideration people's real and genuine fears.

If we are to believe, as I do, the comments made earlier by my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken), there will be not 100 or 200 petitioners, but thousands. That being so, the Committee will be sitting for a long time. The task that it will perform in this hybrid Bill will be one in which from day to day they will be unsure of exactly what they are doing. It is not difficult when going over ground already covered by other Committees, but if one is entering into an area of this magnitude, which will be new to everyone involved, there is no question but that we shall require a Committee which produces the right balance from within the House as well as people who are not disqualified. How can we achieve a balance that will produce a good Committee? Would we get it from a Committee of nine or from a Committee of 11, as amendment (a) suggests?

I have intervened once or twice during the debate. They were not frivolous interventions, although at times they might appear to anybody who was not interested in the proceedings to be something other than intentional attempts to get information and probe deeper. I have always believed that the more people who look at a problem, the more likely it is to get a balanced view. That is why we have juries of 12 in courts of law. Of course, when we have been required to set up courts, such as in Ulster, where problems have arisen and we have not had a jury of 12 there has been criticism that one cannot really expect to get a fair hearing. The petitioners must feel that they have had a fair hearing and must leave the Committee believing that they have been given a judgment that is honest and true.

I believe that, once the number of Members exceeds a certain point, we can have problems. Equally, when there is too small a number we have problems. The Government will argue that, in their judgment, nine is the right balance, especially when one considers their view that the quorum of the Committee should be three. I think that nine is not a good number. I believe that it would be better to have 12 and the nearest we have to that is 11.

You may well ask me, Mr. Deputy Speaker, why I did not table an amendment if I am interested in this matter. I hope that I have already answered that. I have been so far away and so detached from the problem that until tonight I had hardly given it a thought.

Therefore, I believe that 11 is a better number than nine. I believe that it would be better for the petitioners because they would have a greater opportunity of getting a fair hearing. It could be argued that with 11 rather than nine it would be more difficult to reach agreement. However, are we concerned with agreement or justice? I should have thought than in a semi-judicial situation we were primarily concerned with justice because of the wide range of matters about which the Committee will be required to hear from the petitioners.

One of those matters, mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent, is the value of land. There is no doubt that the value of land will go bananas, and it will be adversely affected in some cases. It will depend whether one wants to put up a construction which will benefit from the Channel tunnel or whether the land suffers from planning blight. Either of those cases is at the extreme end of the situation. No doubt, one will be delighted to sell land to those who will pay well over the odds for it, but equally there will be those who suffer from planning blight who will see the value of their property being adversely affected.

We are talking about the rights of individuals and groups. It is the duty of the House to protect their rights. That is absolutely essential. We can do that only if we produce a Committee that will be seen by the petitioners to be fair, just and honest.

Of course, many other matters will be looked at by the Committee such as trade, agriculture and health because the petitioners, in their different ways, will want to see whether they will be affected adversely or otherwise.

Sir John Farr: My hon. Friend is touching on an interesting point. In amendment (b) the Opposition, supported by others, have tabled an interesting suggestion which would take the membership of the Committee out of the hands of the Chairman of the Committee of Selection. A number of amendments in the name of the Leader of the Opposition have been selected by the Chair. Is it not a matter of great concern to the House that the Opposition are not moving the amendments? In my time in the House of Commons, whenever I have supported even one amendment, perhaps to the Finance Bill, I have been there with my Friends to move it. Here, vital amendments have been selected by the Chair, but, showing great discourtesy to the House, the Opposition are not present to move them. That is most culpable.

Mr. Walker: I am concerned that the amendments that have been selected have not been moved by those who tabled them. It does nothing for the standing of the House in the eyes of the public. There is no question but that politicians suffer substantially from the adverse publicity that frequently descends upon us because some politicians behave in a manner that the media judge not to be in accordance with the high standards that we preach.

Mr. Cash: Would my hon. Friend care to note the names of the right hon. Members who have put their names to the amendments? They include the Leader of the Opposition, the deputy Leader of the Opposition, the shadow Leader of the House, and a number of other persons who hold senior positions. Is this not an abuse of the procedure of the House?

Mr. Walker: I cannot say that I am happy about the situation, but, in the phrase frequently used in the House, one can say that they do not care. Quite why they would go to the trouble of tabling amendments and then judging that it would not be wise to be here to move them, let alone speak to them, is a question for them to answer outside the Chamber. The cynicism with which the public views politicians will not be helped by the fact that such situations arise.

The Opposition say that they care about jobs and the effect that unemployment has on their position in the polls, to which they appear to give credence. The public will look at the Committee and see the way in which it is constructed, and will realise that one amendment suggested an increase in the number of Committee members from nine to 11, and one dealt with how the members of the Committee would be nominated. When they find that the amendments have not been moved, they will realise that the Opposition did not table them for any reason to do with the way that business is conducted, or the way that the Committee will deal with the matter.

Mr. Stott: This motion has been debated for four hours.

Mr. Walker: The hon. Gentleman is twittering on about four hours, but he will know that I have not been on my feet for more than 10 minutes, which is a small contribution. I do not apologise for treading on corns if I am. I am a Scot, who is far away from Kent, and I am not all that concerned about whether we build a Channel tunnel. I am here because of my concern that the people of Kent and elsewhere who will be affected substantially by the proposals are satisfied that at least the House took seriously how the members of the Committee were to be chosen and appointed and how it was to function. The latter would also depend on the numbers. I am deeply concerned that Opposition Members are not here to speak to amendment (b), which is concerned with how the Committee members are to be chosen.

Sir John Farr: With respect to my hon. Friend, he is missing the point that I was making. It is not the fact of having tabled an amendment and not being here to move it. That is a discourtesy, but it happens every day. Two days ago at Question Time three hon. Members were not present when their questions were called.

It is a grave discourtesy, not simply to table the amendments and not be here, but to have them selected and not be here. The selection of an amendment by the Chair is a rare red letter day for a Back Bencher, but to have a handful selected by the Chair and not care sufficiently to be here to move them is a grave discourtesy to the House.

Mr. Stott: I have been here for four and a half hours. I have been here all the time.

Mr. Walker: My hon. Friend has spelt out clearly what he and the rest of us feel about what we judge to be discourtesy to the Chair. Opposition Members have not been here, although their amendments were selected. [Interruption.] Mr. Deputy Speaker, you will gather from the sedentary interventions from Opposition Members that we have trodden on a corn. Indeed, we have brought them back to life. Correction, Mr. Deputy Speaker: we have brought one back to life. The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) is not as alive as one would wish, but that is not surprising because he is with the Liberal party. They are never quite sure where they stand in any given situation. For most of the time they sleep when it matters. They agree with one thing and they agree with the other. Sleeping seems to be a satisfactory way of arriving at this middle-of-the-road situation. Of course, there is a danger, because those who sleep in the middle of the road may get run over.

Mr. Eric Forth: Perhaps my hon. Friend would agree that a sleeping position is perfectly safe and probably would not upset anyone.

Mr. Walker: I am sure that that is so. I expect that the attempt is made regularly by those who wish to leave everyone happy by not giving offence to anyone. It is a difficult position to achieve, and sometimes it leaves them in what might be described as a sad situation.

Mr. Greg Knight (Derby, North): For the past 10 minutes my hon Friend has given the House some reasons to consider in wondering whether we want to support the motion. Hon. Members have informed the House of the difficulties that the Select Committee will have.

I am seriously concerned about whether we should go ahead with this procedure, but I should like to know the consequences of my vote because I would not like to see the Bill lost. Could my hon. Friend tell the House what would happen if the House declined to support the motion and did not agree to set up a Select Committee? I should not like the Bill to be lost, but I am concerned about the disadvantages emphasised by many hon. Members who have spoken.

Mr. Walker: I would not attempt to answer that question because you would probably rule me out of, order Mr. Deputy-Speaker. Should by chance the vote go against the Government on the motion it would leave them in a less comfortable position than our Liberal friend across the Chamber.

Mr. Cash: Will my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) reflect on the fact that he is imitating Charles James Fox? A similar event occurred in 1780 or thereabouts. Charles James Fox said to Lord North, who was apparently asleep on the Bench, that he was making an important speech and the old Prime Minister was not listening. The old Prime Minister, unlike the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), woke up and said, "I wish to God I weren't."

Mr. Walker: My hon. Friend writes books of funny stories, and Members who have read them will know that one of the titles is something like "Hit me there again." I have the feeling that If I keep on talking someone will say "Hit me there again."

Amendment (b) is important. I would prefer — this may surprise some of my colleagues — to leave the nomination of members to the Committee of Selection. I think that, on the whole, the Committee conducts itself in a manner with which we can be satisfied. Choosing Committee members is difficult. On balance, the Committee has chosen right more than it has chosen wrong. On two occasions which I can think of the Government have been embarrassed when Committee members have been chosen. On those occasions the Government probably felt that the Selection Committee had not served them well. We must ask whether the Committee serves the House well. That is what matters. Administrations come and go, but the House remains. The procedures and conventions of the House are more important than the transient nature of any Administration, of whatever party.

I believe that the House would be well advised not to accept amendment (b). I should like to see amendment (a) accepted and amendment (b) rejected. I believe that the Selection Committee will be able to find nine members, or preferably 11, and I am confident that it will find members who cannot be debarred. My right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) would be an excellent choice as Chairman of the Committee. I am not being frivolous in saying that.

Many right hon. Members who have recent experience in government would also benefit from the trials and tribulations of the Committee. I would like to think that, if we were to enter uncharted waters, those at the helm were experienced in matters off the House, and that they would be pathfinders in a way that would make Back Benchers happy and comfortable. I do not put that forward in a frivolous way, although I find some humour in the thought of what it may do to those individuals who suddenly find themselves undertaking such a task. It is an important job. We must put forward people of substance and standing who are recognised and accepted both inside and outside Parliament as individuals who have shown, by their actions in political life, that they have independent minds and are prepared to take action that sometimes makes them unpopular with their colleagues.

3.37 am

The Minister of State, Department of Transport (Mr. David Mitchell): My hon. Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg), who opened the debate, has posed me a problem. One of the themes of his speech was that the views of the Front Bench on matters appertaining to the Committee and its membership should be ignored. Therefore, it was slightly difficult for me to consider my response to the debate. My hon. Friend suggested that many individuals' rights would be touched on, and he questioned whether all those whose rights would be affected would be able to petition. That important fact must be considered.

The House is not familiar with the procedures involved with a hybrid Bill, as hybrid Bills do not come forward often. Certainly, a hybrid Bill involving a project on such a scale as this has not previously come forward. In many ways, we are dealing with a unique occurrence. Therefore, there has been controversy about whether it would have been better to have a local planning inquiry instead of a hybrid Bill. I do not propose to take up that issue at this stage. What is important is that people in Kent whose rights as private individuals are to be affected should have the procedures of the House in respect of a hybrid Bill properly explained to them.

My Department, at my instigation, has produced a pamphlet entitled "The Channel Tunnel: How to make your voice heard". About 20,000 copies have been printed, circulated and made available throughout Kent, especially in council offices, public libraries and other public buildings of that sort. It has provided an opportunity for ordinary folk to acquire an understanding of the way in which the hybrid Bill procedure works and how, if they wish to petition, they should go about it.

The pamphlet has an introduction which provides an explanation of Parliament and the Bill. It then describes who will sit on the Select Committee, who can petition, what the individual can petition about, what is a petition, when the petition has to be in by, how a petition is delivered, how the Select Committee meets, what happens in the Select Committee and how much it costs to petition. There is then a step-by-step guide for those who want to petition and a further guide to the processes of the House and of the other place through which a hybrid Bill has to go. Finally, it has on the back a specimen draft of John Smith coming forward with the terms that he might set out in his petition.

It is not for me to teach my grandmother how to suck eggs, but it may be that there are some hon. Members who are not especially familiar with these procedures and who may even find the pamphlet, which has been produced as a layman's guide for the people of Kent, quite helpful. In assembling the information for it, I found that there was an enormous amount that I did not know. I commend the pamphlet to hon. Members——

Mr. Cash rose——

Mr. Mitchell: I give way to my hon. Friend, with whom in the past I have been involved in the preparation of a private Member's Bill, which means that we have battled together.

Mr. Cash: Everything that my hon. Friend has said, and everything that I have heard about the Government's conduct in this matter—I speak as someone who was a parliamentary agent for a long time — is quite remarkable and a great tribute to the fairness with which the Government have sought to deal with petitioners. Were it not for the late hour at which we are sitting, that is something that could be explained in more detail. It is a remarkable tribute to the Government that they have taken the steps that my hon. Friend has outlined, and he deserves personal congratulation for it.

Mr. Mitchell: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his generous words. It is not that we are seeking to stoke up the opposition, despite the hope of my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) that that might be so. We are trying to ensure that people in Kent are not disadvantaged by not knowing what their rights and opportunities are. It is a genuine attempt to seek to help.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sevenoaks (Mr. Wolfson) expressed concern about British Rail's line capacity in his area and the position of commuters. This led him to make a plea that someone who understands commuters' problems should serve on the Select Committee. Those who will make the selection will no doubt read and note his suggestion. British Rail's capacity is not constrained in the way in which he seemed to fear, however. The position is that the boat trains which now operate, especially from Victoria, will cease to run as soon as the Channel tunnel is open. This will mean extra capacity on the lines through the south-eastern network, without the problems which would prevent the operation of commuter services for my hon. Friend's constituents or for others going further down into Kent.

The hon. Member for West Bromwich, East (Mr. Snape) is busy conversing on the Opposition Front Bench. I do not know whether he wishes me to give way so that we can all hear his comments. I know that he is a profound supporter of British Rail, and I do not wish to prevent him from intervening. The hon. Gentleman was not talking loudly enough for me to hear, and I am not sure whether he intended that I should.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sevenoaks raised the question of the effect on jobs in Kent. He questioned whether an hon. Member representing Kent could serve on the Committee. It is not for me to form a judgment on that. It would not be right, in any way, for any Member whose constituency is in that part of Kent that will be effected by the Bill to be involved in the Committee. That would be inappropriate.

In the next seven years we will face not job losses but job shortages. There will be a shortage of people for the available jobs in this part of Kent. The House has not addressed itself to that matter and it is profoundly different from those discussed by most hon. Members. They have discussed the effect, seven years from now, on jobs in Dover.

I am the chairman of the joint consultative committee in Kent, and we have started to consider the problem—the availability of labour. We have asked the promoters to let us have some idea of the various skills that will be required and the numbers of people with those required skills. Thus, we will obtain a pattern of the labour required. We have asked the Department of Employment and the Manpower Services Commission to give us some idea of the number of people available in Kent who have the necessary skills to match the requirements of the developers.

Mr. Gale: A few moments ago my hon. Friend appeared to announce something that will be news to some of us. He said that the moment the tunnel opens, the boat train from Victoria will be cancelled. If that is correct, it is another demonstration of the job losses that will occur at the Channel ports. It confirms the grave fears of some of us from east Kent about the effect on the Channel ports.

Mr. Mitchell: It is one of the factors that have always been recognised and taken into account in British Rail's expectations. There is no point in running a train to meet a boat if it takes two hours longer to do that than it would to travel through the tunnel. My hon. Friend cannot be serious if he assumes that one can run empty trains down to the boats and full trains through the tunnel. No one will wish to go by train and take 2½ hours longer to complete the journey.

Mr. Gale: My hon. Friend is implying, not that nobody will want to travel by train and then by boat, but that nobody other than those in cars will want to go by boat. That is what most of us from east Kent have argued.

Mr. Mitchell: I am not in any way suggesting that British Rail will cut Dover or Folkestone from the railway network. There will not be sufficient traffic to warrant, as at present, sending trains direct to particular scheduled boat services. That is understandable, and has been understood throughout our discussions. If it comes as a surprise to my hon. Friend, I am prepared to consider that shock to his system.

Mr. Gale: It is no surprise, but it is confirmation of what we have been saying, which is that the Minister now recognises the devastating effect that the tunnel will have on the Channel ferries. That is on record as of now.

Mr. Mitchell: If my hon. Friend considers the matter carefully when he reads Hansard tomorrow, he will find that what I said is not particularly surprising.

Mr. Forth: Will my hon. Friend clarify a reference that he made to the time difference between a boat and the proposed tunnel crossing? Will he confirm that the record for a ferry crossing is about 57 minutes and that the new generation of ferries being developed will provide a faster, more efficient service? What is the real time difference in transit between a ferry and the proposed rail link? My hon. Friend may inadvertently have given the House the wrong impression.

Mr. Mitchell: I am not an expert on the precise timing of the ferry services. I understand that hovercraft take about three quarters of an hour, and that going by ship is considerably longer. Only the speed of hovercraft is remotely similar to that of travel through the proposed tunnel.

Mr. Rowe: My hon. Friend pointed out that the joint consultative committee has begun to consider the employment needs for the next seven years. He will be aware that Kent county council feels strongly that the joint consultative committee should remain in being until the tunnel opens because of the need to take account of planning. Does my hon. Friend intend to keep the committee in being in its present form, or in some modified form, until the tunnel opens?

Mr. Mitchell: It is for the members of the committee who are elected representatives of that part of Kent to conclude whether the committee's work needs to continue. I do not envisage continuing for as long as "The Mousetrap" has remained a regular show in the West End, but during the formative period I expect that we shall continue to have regular meetings, and then less frequent meetings to review progress and to ensure that the project is proceeding along the lines anticipated.

It may help the House if I indicate the range of subjects which the joint consultative committee is discussing at its meetings. The agenda of the last meeting covered matters arising from the previous meeting, the impact study that is being undertaken, the construction——

Mr. Aitken: I am thrilled to hear the Minister disclose details from the Dispatch Box about the committee's work. The committee, which the Minister cracks up to be a great event in terms of public information and consultation, is seen by the people of Kent as a secret committee from which the public and press are banned and to which Members of Parliament are not allowed to go. I accept that there is a circulation list for the minutes, but that is not equivalent to the free and open consultation and public communication that would reassure the people of Kent. I hope that the Minister will change the committee's ground rules.

Mr. Mitchell: It is for the members of the committee to decide whether to conduct their proceedings in the full glare of publicity or to act as a businesslike group, taking decisions and then fully explaining in the minutes that are circulated those decisions and why they have been reached. My hon. Friend implies that there is great secrecy about this committee. Once the minutes are sent to his council, it is not long before they reach him and other parties in the area, including the newspapers.

Sir John Farr: The Minister said that it was for the committee to decide how to proceed and whether to make its activities public. Would that include deciding, say, to allow the meetings to be open to the public, with the media, including radio and TV present, so that the public are kept fully informed of what is happening in what will prove to be an important PR exercise?

Mr. Mitchell: The purpose of this committee is not a PR exercise. It is to identify and seek solutions to problems in Kent. The Committee's next meeting, on 16 June, will be in public and will receive presentations from a series of groups in Kent whose members feel affected by the project, and we shall take account of the effect of having the press present at that meeting. I have no doubt that if the committee feels that it wants to change its way of working, it will do so.

Mr. Simon Hughes rose——

Hon. Members: The hon. Gentleman has woken up.

Mr. Hughes: I have not been asleep. I have been keeping a watching brief. Will the committee complete its work in time to be of use to the petitioners? When dealing with the previous Channel Tunnel Bill, the Kent impact study was completed several months before the matter went to the Select Committee. Will the committee produce the results of its economic and social studies—by, say, the production of an interim report—this month or by the beginning of July so that the benefits of its work, so far in secret, are made available to petitioners, rather than being produced several months after the closing date for petitioners to make their concerns known to the Select Committee?

Mr. Mitchell: I am sorry that the hon. Gentleman was asleep when I explained that the proceedings of the committee were not secret and that its minutes were sent to local authorities and the press. Indeed, I sought to spare the hon. Gentleman any embarrassment when he was snoring. I did not want to give way to him on the assumption that he wished to intervene. The hon. Gentleman asked when the committee would complete its work — [Interruption.] It is difficult to address the House when two Opposition Members are carrying on a conversation. If they want me to give way, I shall happily do so. If they do not, perhaps they will allow me to complete what I have to say.

The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) asked whether the committee would complete its work by the summer. Earlier, my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) asked whether the committee would continue to 1993. I told my hon. Friend that it was not the intention that the committee should complete its work hurriedly, that the work would go on, with the intensity of meetings determined by what the members of the committee felt was suitable as matters proceeded. Obviously, at the present formative stage, a great deal of work is being done and a great many studies are under way. Later on there will be more monitoring of the effect of the arrangements that have been agreed by the committee.

The impact study is being conducted in two parts. In the first part, we anticipate that a report will be before the committee at its next meeting. I hope that it will be approved then, but that is up to the members of the committee. [Interruption.] If Opposition Members cannot restrain themselves, is there any way in which I can either give way to them or get them to shut up, Mr. Deputy Speaker? The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey has raised a serious point and I am trying to give him a serious answer. There will be two stages in the impact study. The first one in the summer will be considered at the next meeting of the committee, and the next one will require consultants to be brought in and will take a considerably longer time to achieve its results. The fuller report will look at the long-term implications of the tunnel on Kent. The short-term one will be more concerned with the effects of construction and things of that sort, for which a great deal of information is already available.

Mr. Simon Hughes: I should like to ask a supplementary question about the interim report. If that report is agreed by the committee this month, will the Minister assure us that he and his offcials will raise no objection to its being released so that the material can be made available to petitioners in time for them to make use of it during the period of petition?

Mr. Mitchell: That is a perfectly reasonable suggestion, and I shall put it to the committee. I chair the committee. I do not dictate to it.

Mr. Franks: A few minutes ago my hon. Friend said that the committee had two options. If I remember his words, the options were that the committee could either conduct its business in the full glare of publicity, or, it could conduct its business in a businesslike way. Am I to understand from that that the two are mutually exclusive?

Mr. Mitchell: I think that my hon. Friend has had experience in his own business life of meetings that are more effective if they are conducted in private than if they are conducted in public. Most companies have boards, and my hon. Friend may sit on some company boards. It might generally, be felt that a board would not as effectively conduct its business in public as it would in private. Minutes of board meetings may well be circulated afterwards. The same thing is true of trade unions. Trade union meetings are not held in public, although what is agreed at meetings may well be circulated afterwards.

Sir John Farr: The motion says that the Committee will have the power to adjourn from place to place within the United Kingdom. Is my hon. Friend able to confirm reports that those places will include some of the ports? If the Committee's aim is to have more than one meeting in Dover, would it be possible for its proceedings to be heard on local radio?

Mr. Mitchell: I was referring to the joint consultative committee in Kent. My hon. Friend has asked me a question about where the Select Committee will hold its meetings. That is entirely a matter for the Select Committee. If members will decide where such meetings are to be held. If the Committee considered that it was appropriate to hold meetings in Kent—and I should not be at all surprised if it did—that would be a matter for it, not for the Government. We shall do nothing to prevent such meetings or to discourage the Committee from holding meetings.

Sir John Farr: I am most grateful to my hon. Friend. It is an important point, which I know has been raised before. He is saying, therefore, that there would be nothing to prevent the Select Committee, if its members thought fit, from going to Dover to hold a meeting, or a series of meetings, and that they could ask the local television and radio stations to transmit the proceedings live?

Mr. Mitchell: I do not think that I dare to trespass into the area of whether the Select Committee would have the power to invite local television into its proceedings, any more than television could be invited to transmit the activities of this House without the House having formed its judgment on the matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): I am pleased to hear the Minister say that, because one part of the committal motion with which we shall deal later deals specifically with the powers of the Select Committee.

Mr. Aitken: To return to the point that was raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Barrow and Furness (Mr. Franks) and my hon. Friend the Minister of State's reply to him, the Minister used the analogy of the boardroom and said that more business like meetings could take place in private. May I suggest to my hon. Friend that he is making an error of judgment when he equates the proceedings of what is popularly known as the Mitchell committee with the proceedings of the board room, because once again he is identifying the interests of the Eurotunnel consortium with the interests of the Government. The interests of the Eurotunnel consortium and the interests of the public are two different things.

The best course that the Mitchell committee can adopt to redeem its reputation as an excessively secretive set-up —which is how it is perceived in Kent, whether my hon. Friend likes to admit it or not—is at least to say that part of the committee's proceedings should be held in private and part in public, instead of continuing with the present closed shop attitude that the press, the public, Members of Parliament and others should be completely excluded, apart from having access to what are now turning out to be, effectively, doctored minutes. In terms of public presentation, that is unacceptable.

Mr. Mitchell: I have to take issue with my hon. Friend's reference to "doctored minutes". That is not the way in which the committee will proceed. Certainly it is not the way in which the elected representatives in my hon. Friends local authority or in the other local authorities in Kent would allow matters to proceed. I hope that after consideration my hon. Friend will withdraw that remark.

Mr. Cash: I am a little mystified by the recent exchange. I hope that I did not hear my hon. Friend the Minister say that these proceedings will be held in private, because it is axiomatic with regad to private Bill matters that the proceedings should be held in public. I should be very surprised to hear anything to the contrary.

Mr. Mitchell: My hon. Friend is under a misapprehension. Two separate matters are being discussed. The first is the question of a joint consultative committee, which has been meeting in Kent. It consists of representatives of local authorities in Kent, the Department of the Environment, the Department of Transport, the promoters and British Rail. We have been discussing whether that committee should meet in public or in private. It is entirely for the Select Committee to make its own arrangements about its proceedings.

Mr. Franks: May I take my hon. Friend back to his answer to my earlier question, when he drew a parallel between the possibility of the committee sitting in private and boards of private or public companies or trade union branches meeting in private? There is fundamental difference between the two. A board meeting, or a meeting of a trade union or similar organisation, is essentially a meeting of a private organisation, which is perfectly entitled to meet in private. The committee is considering public business and, therefore, should meet in public.

Mr. Mitchell: Of course that is true of the Select Committee. I am not discussing that. We are talking about what the representatives of local authorities in Kent decide is the most effective way in which to conduct their proceedings.

Mr. Franks: Local authorities are public authorities. They represent the public. Therefore, those meetings should be held in public.

Mr. Mitchell: That is a matter for the elected representatives in that area to decide. I have not sought to dictate to them.

Mr. Simon Hughes: As a result of the local elections in May, the Liberal party became the minority administration in Maidstone, which was the first change from a completely Conservative-controlled set of local authorities. In presentation terms the problem was greater when all the councils were controlled by the same party. Is there now more than one-party representation on the committee? That at least might make it more likely for information to come into the public domain.

Mr. Mitchell: There are no party representatives as such on the committee. It consists of the leaders or chairmen of councils, together with the chief executives. I have no detailed knowledge of their politics, and it is not my area of responsibility. It is for the district councils to decide whom they choose to represent them. There are two representatives from each council — one an elected representative, normally the leader or chairman, and the other his chief executive. At official level, the chief executives act as a working group between the meetings of the committee. That is a reasonable and effective way in which to conduct business.

Mr. Franks: I am sorry to pursue this point, but I remind the Minister that, last Session, Parliament passed the Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985. Meetings that directly affect local authorities should be held in public.

Mr. Mitchell: My hon. Friend has a special interest in the matter, and I note what he says. I have no doubt that members of the committee will note it, too. It is not for me to dictate to them how we should conduct our proceedings. Nevertheless, I shall keep in mind the points that my hon. Friend made.

Mr. Aitken: My hon. Friend will recall that I asked whether a Member of Parliament could attend the committee's meetings, and he said that that would be unacceptable. Was that a decision of the committee and, if so, was it recorded? If not, is it a clear policy that local Members of Parliament are excluded from the committee? What is the history of the decision to exclude Members of Parliament from the committee?

Mr. Mitchell: If my recollection serves me right, my hon. Friend asked me whether I believed that he would be an appropriate person to attend the committee as an additional observer. I do not remember the exact circumstances. I did not put it to the committee. He asked me for an opinion, and I gave him one.

The committee is made up of representatives from the local authorities and from the Kent county council. My hon. Friend is not the elected representative of his local authority. If he is so elected, of course he will be entitled to attend, and, it would be right and proper that he should do so.

Mr. Aitken: Can Members of Parliament go to the committee or not?

Mr. Mitchell: The Committee has been made up from the county council, district council, Department of the Environment, British Rail and the promoters, and my hon. Friend does not fall into any of those categories. What we have sought to do is to get elected local representatives and, in this context, they are the district councils there represented. That has been well accepted in Kent as a reasonable way of proceeding.

Mr. Aitken: By whom? Who has accepted it?

Mr. Mitchell: By the councils concerned.

Mr. Aitken: My hon. Friend is running into very heavy weather here. This simply is not right. I should like to know this not on behalf of myself but on behalf of any Kent Member of Parliament who wishes to attend the consultative committee. The understanding at present is that they are not welcome at the committee. What is the precise position? If it is unclear, as it appears to be, may we please have it put to the committee in a simple request? If a Member of Parliament wishes to attend any meeting of the committee, is he to be excluded, which appears to be the present position, or is he to be welcomed as an observer and contributor to the discussions?

Mr. Mitchell: No such request has been made to the committee. It is, therefore, impossible for me to give an answer to my hon. Friend now in the form in which he asks for it. My hon. Friend will know that every Member representing a Kent constituency has had access to me at any time that he has wished to discuss matters. I have gone out of my way to issue invitations and enable Members who represent Kent to ensure that any items that they want to be put on the agenda are put on. My hon. Friend is, if I may say so, being a little unfair.

I was trying to explain to the House the sort of things that the committee has been considering. I was asked about the impact study, the construction employment, who will be employed, what skills are required and whether those skills are available. At the next meeting the Department of Employment will have a report from the Manpower Services Commission on what skills are available to fill the requirements of the developers in terms of construction employment. My hon. Friends the Members for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) and for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken), who are deeply concerned about unemployment, will be interested to know that we are seeking to discover whether in their constituencies there are people with the required skills who would wish to take up the employment opportunities.

As to environmentally sensitive issues a range of these was discussed at the last meeting—electricity supplies, whether the cable should be overhead or underground, the Dollands Moor site and things of that kind.

With regard to spoil disposal, we had 65 different propositions on where the spoil might be dumped. There is a problem with the spoil because some has salt on it, and we do not know the extent of that. This puts a limit on where one can dump the spoil. If it has salt in it, it will turn the water table briny, which will not be acceptable to the local water authorities or residents.

There is a paper from British Rail about the train tunnels on the route between Folkestone and Dover. We discussed the arrangements for the public presentation of the different local groups, about which I spoke earlier, road infrastructure and compensation arrangements. I give that list to the House so that hon. Members may have an idea of the range of work that the local committee is doing. I hope it will be felt that that is a useful way of proceeding.

I was dealing with the point raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Sevenoaks. He wondered whether it would be right for people to serve on the committee who represented other areas in which employment might be provided. We estimate that £700 million worth of orders for industry will be placed by the Channel Tunnel Group away from the construction. In addition, £200 million worth of orders will be provided by British Rail. That will mean a substantial amount of work and jobs.

The hon. Member for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds) is not here; at the moment his place is occupied by my hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins). The hon. Member for Warley, East is well known for appearing on the stage in different guises; I am not sure whether he is putting on a new act for us now. He suggested that few jobs would be created away from Kent. He is entirely wrong. A substantial number of jobs will be created elsewhere in the manufacture of the shuttle trains to go through the tunnel and the British Rail rolling stock.

Mr. Robert Atkins (South Ribble): On behalf of the hon. Member for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds), may I thank the Minister for that most interesting information?

Mr. Mitchell: The hon. Member for Warley, East claimed that there would be a jobs benefit only during construction. As I said to the deputy Member for Warley, East, that is entirely wrong. There will be additional jobs during construction, but once the tunnel is open it will have a profound impact on industry in the north, in the midlands, in Scotland, in the north-east and on Merseyside. Manufacturers in those parts of the country will be able to get their goods into the markets of Europe more cheaply, more efficiently, more quickly and more reliably. Therefore, they will be able to compete more successfully. Successful competition is the key to employment in those areas.

The hon. Member for Warley, East also expressed concern about rabies and referred to pets being asleep on trains. The danger with rabies arises not from people bring pets over on ferries or trains but from people bringing pets over on small boats to our marinas and letting them off on shore. That is a more widespread problem.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Minister is dealing in detail with points that were raised during the Second Reading debate. I hope that he will not make more than a passing reference to a debate that we have already disposed of.

Mr. Mitchell: I assure you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that I am dealing not with matters raised on Second Reading but with matters that were raised during this debate. I have a separate set of notes on the points that hon. Members have raised.

The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey sought to make a case for a larger Committee to ensure that those serving on it adequately represented all groups in the House. My understanding is that the normal number serving on such a Committee would be eight, but the proposition on the Order Paper is for nine, which is to take account of the point that he has raised. I hope that he thinks that satisfactory. The House likes to move by precedent, and the advantage of that is that people have some indication of where they stand.

Mr. Simon Hughes: I think that the Minister will accept the point made by the hon. Member for Tiverton (Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop) that both in procedure and in the nature of the Bill there is no precedent because of the importance commercially and from other aspects of the prosposition in the Bill. There is, therefore, a demand from both sides of the House that it is not only the precedent that is considered but the importance of the task before us.

Mr. Mitchell: I do not dispute that, but I think that in terms of the task it is better to have a smaller rather than a larger Committee.

My hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) has sat throughout today's debates with great patience, and he caught the eye of Mr. Deputy Speaker earlier this morning. He wanted to know why we did not choose a road-rail mixed tunnel as was originally proposed by the Sea Containers Group. He suggested that members of the Committee should have the expertise to call for papers and to consider that question.

The original format proposed by the Sea Containers Group — Jim Sherwood's company — had a touch of genius about it: one tunnel each way to carry both drive through vehicles and the railway line. There were many advantages to that—there would be only two tunnels to bore with a small narrow service tunnel between instead of four tunnels. The investment would have been more financially rewarding. In addition, the soil dispersal problem would have been considerably less. However, when we examined the proposal in the railway safety inspectorate we could not accept it as a safe way to proceed. I could detain the House by going into the precise details of why the inspectorate did not judge it to be safe, but I think that at this hour the House would not wish me to do so.

Sir John Farr: Do my hon. Friend's advisers feel that it will ever be possible, if we go ahead with the planned tunnel, for a road link to be attached to or run in tandem with it?

Mr. Mitchell: We did not consider it safe to have a railway running through the same tunnel as road vehicles, with a wide space beside the train and nothing to stop it spreading sideways if there was a derailment. I cannot speak for what might be done in future, but it was the fact that the rail track would have run level with the road that created the dangers that the inspectorate found unacceptable.

My hon. Friend also asked about defence expertise, shipping, ferries and the reinforcement of NATO. It would obviously be much cheaper to mothball some vessels than not to proceed with the tunnel if we are concerned simply with the question of military reinforcements for NATO. He also asked about sabotage. I am not at all sure that there are in the House potential members of the Select Committee who would have knowledge and expertise about sabotage.

Mr. Lawrence: I am not volunteering to be available, but on this question of availability, can my hon. Friend the Minister tell the House whether the Special Standing Committee is expected to sit right through the summer recess?

Mr. Mitchell: That is a matter for the Select Committee to decide. There is, I understand, nothing to prevent the Committee from sitting during the recess if it wishes. However, the Committee members might not choose to sit in the recess. That would be a matter for the Committee members.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: What will happen if the Select Committee reports to the House that it is unable to complete in a reasonable time its business of listening to the petitions? What effect would that have on the progress of the substantive Bill?

Mr. Mitchell: I am not in a position to answer my hon. Friend's point, as we do not know how many petitions there will be or how the Committee will wish to proceed with its handling of the petitions. We do not know whether the petitions will be grouped together. I am sorry to tell my hon. Friend that this matter will unfold in due course.

Mr. Simon Hughes: Can the Minister revise the estimate of time that he believes that the Select Committee will need to consider the petitions? He will be aware that in the report of the Standing Orders Committee an appendix was produced which laid out the possible timetable. This set out a six-week period for the Select Committee proceedings. It was estimated to finish on 24 July. Can the Minister now confirm that it is more likely that the Select Committee, whatever timetable it agrees, will take much longer than six weeks? Is he aware that his Department's advice means that it is inevitable that the Committee will need to continue its work at the end of the summer recess and will not be able to complete it before then?

Mr. Mitchell: The hon. Gentleman may be correct in suggesting that the Committee may not conclude its deliberations before the summer recess. I would not be in the least bit surprised by that. However, that is a matter for the Committee, and until the number and groups of petitions are known it is not possible to give a realistic answer to the hon. Gentleman. I would not like to mislead the hon. Gentleman.

The House has had a substantial debate on this matter. Hon. Members have raised many points, but the hour is late and I think that we should make progress. I can tell my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie), who is stalwartly fighting for her constituents who work at British Rail Engineering Ltd. which has two major works in Derby, that the scale of potential orders is substantial. I shall not detain the House by spelling out the extent of the orders.

I was glad to find myself in agreement with my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South on at least one occasion. He suggested that there was a possibility that he would be precluded from sitting on the Select Committee because he might be considered to be an interested party. I think that he and I find ourselves in full agreement on that.

Mr. Aitken: I do not wish to make a Sherman-style declaration "If nominated, I will not serve", or whatever that declaration was. However, should by any chance the call come, I am more than willing—I may be the only hon. Member who is willing—loyally to do my duty on behalf of the House.

Mr. Mitchell: My hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent made a number of very important points. I hope that he will forgive me if I write to him about them as I am anxious to speed up the proceedings.

The Government see no reason or justification for increasing the number of members of the Select Committee from nine to 11. The usual number for a hybrid Bill Committee is eight or nine. For the 1974 Channel Tunnel Bill the Select Committee was eight. The Government oppose any needless increase in the numbers involved in the proceedings of the Select Committee. Therefore, I suggest that the House would be wise to accept the motion as it stands on the Order Paper and to reject the amendments. Accordingly, I invite the House to do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I remind the House of the procedure. We are dealing first with amendment (a). Does any hon. Member wish formally to move amendment (a)?

Amendment (a) proposed, in line 2, leave out 'nine' and insert 'eleven'.—[Mr. Douglas Hogg.]

Mr. David Mitchell: I beg to move,

That there shall stand referred to the Select Committee—

(a) any Petition against the Bill presented by being deposited in the Private Bill Office at any time not later than 17th June, and

(b) any Petition which has been presented by being deposited in the Private Bill Office and in which the Petitioners complain of any amendment as proposed in any Petition against the Bill or in the filled-up Bill or of any matter which has arisen during the progress of the Bill before the said Committee, being a Petition in which the Petitioners pray to be heard by themselves, their Counsel or Agents.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this it will be convenient to debate amendments (c), (d), (e) and (f).

Mr. Mitchell: The House has already decided that the Select Committee should comprise nine members rather than 11, and it has also decided that all Committee members should be nominated by the Committee of Selection. The purpose of lines four to 12 of the motion is to refer to the Select Committee thus established two kinds of petition.

The first kind of petition is dealt with in paragraph (a). They are petitions against the Bill. Any petition against the Bill is referred to the Committee, provided that it is presented by the 17 June in the Private Bill Office in the usual way. This date is eight weeks and four days after 18 April, the date on which notices were issued in national and local papers.

For the Channel Tunnel Bill 1973 the interval was exactly eight weeks, including Christmas. The average interval for hybrid Bills in the past 30 years has been six weeks. For private Bills, Standing Orders lay down a standard interval of eight weeks; from 4 December to 30 January, which also includes Christmas. Therefore, I am sure the House will realise that the Government have given slightly more time than is necessary under the normal procedure.

The second kind of petition, which is dealt with in paragraph (b), is a petition complaining against alteration of the Bill or indeed of any of the matters that have arisen during the progress of the Bill before the Committee. This sort of petition is subject to no closing date.

The final line refers to petitions in which petitioners pray to be heard by themselves, their counsel or their agents, and it refers also to the provisions in lines 17 to 18 in the next paragraph, which has not yet been discussed.

That is all that I have to say at this stage. I shall be happy to listen to the debate and to advise the House on some of the amendments at a later stage.

Mr. Franks: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. May I raise a point of order of which I have given you prior notice, namely, the possible breach of privilege and contempt of the House by the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell).

Before the commencement of the debate on the committal motion, the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) made the point in a point of order that my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) was allegedly seeking to organise a filibuster, and as a consequence the hon. Member for Linlithgow would miss the opportunity to speak to the motion in his name at 9.30 am. I believe that if the hon. Member for Walsall, North had stayed to listen to the debate it would have been crystal clear to him that it has been a genuine debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. What is the hon. Member's point of order?

Mr. Franks: The point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker, relates to my understanding that the hon. Member for Linlithgow—I declare that I have the second motion for debate tomorrow—has booked a room in the House for 9.30 am. If what I am told is correct, he intends to make to the media the speech that he could and would have made to the House of Commons. If that is the case, it must surely be a contempt of the House that a speech that should be made to the House, and could possibly still be made, will be made to the media rather than to hon. Members.

I would ask you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, whether inquiries could be made of the hon. Member to ascertain whether what I have been reliably informed of is correct, and, if it is correct, whether the question of contempt could be considered.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It seems clear from what the hon. Member has said that he is referring to a private meeting in the House, which has nothing to do with the Chair.

Mr. Franks: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Should these proceedings terminate in time for the hon. Member for Linlithgow to make a speech at 9.30 am——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member has raised this matter before and he has already had an answer from the Chair. We cannot deal now with hypothetical questions. We really must get on with the business before us. Did the Minister give way to the hon. Member? I am not quite sure.

Mr. Mitchell: I had finished what I was saying when the point of order was raised.

4.55 am

Mr. Simon Hughes: I seek leave to move amendment (c).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I remind the hon. Member and the House—I know that the procedure is not familiar to the House—that he does not move the amendment at this stage. It is perfectly in order for him to speak to the amendment or to any other amendments which have been selected.

Mr. Hughes: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Since the instruction was given six or so hours ago, I had forgotten the specific procedure.

I wish to speak to the four amendments, especially the amendment standing in the name of my right hon. and hon. Friends and others and myself. The four amendments relating to the time for petitioning are in descending order. The House will be aware that, the Second Reading having been granted by the House today in parliamentary terms but yesterday in chronological terms—5 June—the date that stands on the Order Paper for the end of the period for petitioners to present their petitions is 17 June—a period of 12 days. That is the Government's proposal. It is commonly understood that that is an insufficient period given the number of interested people who wish to present petitions and who can formally do so only in the 12 days that are set down.

My right hon. and hon. Friends and myself tabled an amendment proposing that the period for petitioning should be eight weeks from 5 June and should therefore end on 31 July. There are other options by way of amendment on the Order Paper. There is an amendment in the name of the Leader of the Opposition and others that the date for petitioning should be extended to 17 July. There is an amendment in the name of the right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan) and others that the time for petitioning should be extended until 27 June. There is a subsidiary amendment, also in the name of the right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks and others, which would permit, in certain circumstances, petitions to be presented after 27 June. That amendment, which has to be taken with the previous amendment, relates to different sorts of petitions.

The House has been presented with a range of options which put eight weeks as the maximum period for petitioning, and that is the position which my right hon. and hon. Friends have taken. If all the amendments failed, petitioners would have only 12 days in which to make their case. The Minister said in his reply that he would look favourably on the option presented by way of amendment by the right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks and others which appeared, if I recollect correctly, to find general favour, among those Kentish Members who spoke, as a better option than the present deadline of 17 June. I make it clear that any extension is better than none. However, I make a serious case to the Minister in favour of the option of the last available date—31 July. He undertook to listen carefully to the reasons for that, and no doubt he will do so now.

As has generally been accepted—often the House looks for guidance on procedural matters to the hon. Member for Tiverton (Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop), who made points on the subject earlier—there is no precedent for the Bill and its procedures which is ideal and which can be sited precisely and exactly. There are precedents that are relevant, but because this is a hybrid Bill as opposed to a private Bill, although more private than public, as was said on Wednesday night, we cannot look specifically to the procedure for private Bills. You will be aware, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that, had it been a private Bill, presentation would have had to take place by 27 November. It was the Government's option that they decided to introduce the Bill to the House only some seven months after that, on 17 April. They had to seek permission of the House, by way of the Standing Orders Committee, to have dispensation from the normal timetable.

The House will remember that that Committee announced in its report in May that it could make no recommendation to the House. That led to the matter coming back to the House this week, when the House agreed after an important and strongly argued debate that the Standing Orders should be dispensed with and that there should be the possibility of a shorter period being provided given the late introduction of the Bill by the Government.

That means that there has already been a breach of the normal procedures. I am not saying that that is without precedent because it is clear that such a precedent exists, but the procedures that are laid down have not been followed and there has already been a shortening of the procedures that would have been expected.

Mr. David Mitchell: Is the hon. Gentleman saying that anyone will have less time than he would have under the normal procedure?

Mr. Hughes: I shall deal with that by taking matters chronologically.

Mr. Gale: As the hon. Gentleman will have gathered from the fact that I signed an amendment not dissimilar from the one which stands in his name and that of his colleagues, I have a great deal of sympathy with what he is saying. The hon. Gentleman has referred to the motion that was carried on Tuesday night and has said that at present petitioners will have 12 days in which to lodge their petitions. I think that he will recall that I raised that issue on Tuesday evening, when my hon. Friend the Minister of State offered to clarify the position in writing. On Tuesday we carried the following:

"That in the event of the Bill being read a second time, the earliest date which, in any motion for the committal of the Bill to a Select Committee, may be specified as the date by which a Petition against the Bill must be presented in order to stand referred to the Committee shall be 17th June."

That is the earliest date. The motion before us reads:

"(a) any petition against the Bill presented by being deposited in the Private Bill Office at any time not later than 17th June".

As I said on Tuesday, that is not 12 days; it is only one day.

Mr. Hughes: I remember the intervention that the hon. Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) made on Tuesday. He has a valid argument because the two motions do not say the same thing. The motion that was carried said that 17 June shall be the last date and the motion before us, if unamended, provides that the first date would be the last date. That is clearly ludicrous. I think that the hon. Gentleman will agree that, Second Reading having been given to the Bill on 5 June, petitioners are alerted to the fact that they have 12 days to 17 June, but, if the motion is agreed to and not amended, petitioners will be alerted to the fact that 12 days is the maximum period available to them. This means that technically there is only one day for the lodging of petitions. That would present difficulties procedurally, let alone substantive difficulties, for those who had to get their tackle in order.

It was probably for that reason more than others that the Minister accepted implicity and not explicity — as I recollect, he did not refer explicity to the question asked by the hon. Member for Thanet, North—that he would look favourably on a amendment which would open the period, but such an amendment would open it by only another 10 days. That is unsatisfactory given precedent and unsatisfactory given the important and substantial number of people who wish to present petitions, but who are not yet clear about the procedural rules for so doing.

Mr. Cash: The hon. Gentleman may have been asleep when the Minister was giving an accurate description of what has been going on over the past few months in communicating with potential petitioners. It ought to be on record, now that the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) is awake and with us again, that the Government have taken considerable steps to make sure that people are fully aware of their rights. They ought to be congratulated rather than subject to the carping criticism which is beginning to emerge.

The hon. Gentleman has referred to the application of precedent, but he has got it slightly wrong. As I understand it, this is a hybrid Bill to which the private Bill Standing Orders apply, but in other respects it is a public Bill. When one is dealing with the principle and precedent, one has to study the Bill to see whether private Bill Standing Orders apply and if they do—it is not a matter of choice or applying precedents—one must have a dispensation on from the Standing Orders Committee.

Mr. Hughes: The first part of that long intervention does not merit comment. The hon. Gentleman's second point repeats what I have said before, that the procedural matters, although grounded in the procedure for private Bills, are subject to the Orders of the House. That is the subject of this debate.

The relevant considerations of this matter go back to the report of the Transport Committee on 2 December 1985 — the first relevant document. In paragraph 27 the Committee said:

"Unless the House has given any indication or instruction to the contrary, the second reading of a hybrid bill is considered to remove from the promoters the onus of proving the expediency of the bill. . . . At the beginning of the proceedings on the Channel Tunnel Bill 1974, Counsel for the Secretary of State for the Environment stated that the Secretary of State was 'most anxious that the Petitioners should have all reasonable opportunity to put forward the points which concern them, providing that such points can properly be taken in proceedings of this nature. That being so, the Secretary of State has decided . . . to take no formal objections to the locus of any of the Petitioners.'"

The Committee recommended that

"this precedent be followed, that the fullest possible latitude again be allowed to petitioners and that all those whose petitions conform to the basic requirement of relevancy be allowed to be heard."

That recommendation was taken up by the Secretary of State for Transport in the Adjournment debate on 9 December 1985, when the matter first came substantively before the House. It would be useful to quote, selectively, the Secretary of State's views on what should happen:

"There will be a hybrid Bill, which will give the promoters all the necessary powers. . . .

Although the decision has to be taken by Parliament, we want maximum local consultation. The location of the portal of any link is dictated by geography. So the matters to be considered and consulted upon locally are principally, but not exclusively, first, the precise effects of the link on those immediately affected, on their properties and amenities, secondly, the effect on the local economy in terms of jobs gained and lost, in construction and upon opening, and, more importantly, the employment likely to be gained by this mammoth transport development—perhaps the biggest communications artery in Europe. . . . Thirdly, there is the effect on the natural environment. . . Fourthly, there are the communications needs of the area as a result of the link . . . and, fifthly, the effect any structure that would be built in the channel would have on the safety of shipping and the freedom of navigation."

Those were the matters perceived by the Secretary of State as being relevant. On the procedural points the Secretary of State said:

"There will be further consultations and opportunities for comment on a firm proposal. . . .

The hybrid Bill procedure contains every opportunity for those affected to be heard, including the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) with his psychological problem."

That is not specifically relevant. The Secretary of State continued:

"The procedure is well known to the House. It is comparable to the private Bill procedure, which has always been used for building railways and similarly requires no public inquiry. It was used when similar proposals were produced in 1974. The Select Committee recommended that we should follow the precedent of the 1974 Channel Tunnel Bill. . . . Subject to the rulings of the Select Committee, I would expect that those eligible would include individuals whose private interests are affected—those representing local trades, businesses and other local interests which may be adversely affected, those representing amenity, ecology, educational and recreational interests who believe that their interests are adversely affected to a material degree, and local authorities in any affected areas."—[Official Report, 9 December 1985; Vol. 88, c. 643-45.]

The Secretary of State undertook to allow the time that precedent provided under the previous Channel Tunnel Bill, and made his view known that there were groups whose interests were affected which should have a chance of making their views clear.

The third relevant document——

Mr. Neale: This is a filibuster.

Mr. Hughes: No, it is not a filibuster. It is a matter of great importance and the hon. Member for Cornwall, North (Mr. Neale) will be aware that, just as tin mining is vital to his constituents and county, so the most important matter to the people of Kent is that they should have their views heard. It is important that the Secretary of State's undertakings are honoured.

The Secretary of State made a speech to the Franco British Society on 14 May an extract from which reads:

"I must ask our French friends to understand that we face a different situation to that in France, and to be a little patient while the legislation goes through Parliament. Against the background I have outlined, I am sure they can see that the process of debate must be allowed to consider and examine these things. There are of course the environmental, ecological and employment difficulties about the Tunnel—we all know and respect them. But underneath them there are these most intangible, if less logical, emotional difficulties present. The process of persuading people that their fears are groundless is nowhere more suitably exercised than in Parliament, with all its complex legislative processes. I have no doubt the Bill will emerge onto the Statute Book in the end. We must not be impatient at its slow progress.

I firmly believe that it is necessary to allow the doubters and the objectors the full panoply of Parliamentary opportunities, and to respond to their objections, whether they be personal, political or emotional with reasoned answers. Nor must we be seen to be stampeding the Bill through Parliament."

Given that the Government decided not to have a public inquiry and that they had to seek dispensation from the House regarding the Standing Orders, the impression is given that matters will proceed in a stampeding manner unless people are given a proper opportunity to put their case. The Secretary of State has made it clear that it is important for people to have a chance to put their view within the procedures that Parliament provides. Those procedures involve petitioning a Select Committee.

Clearly the Government think that that procedure should be used. As the Minister said on Tuesday, the Department of Transport has produced and circulated in Kent a leaflet which gives people guidance about their rights as petitioners, and which they can fill in. I understand that several of those leaflets have been returned to the Table Office but that the Table Office has not clarified whether the leaflet on which people make clear their request to petition has yet been accepted as a valid method of registering a desire to petition. Will the Minister clarify whether those who returned the forms are accepted to be valid petitioners, because they as yet do not know and the Table Office has not as yet given any ruling?

Mr. Aitken: If by chance the Private Bill Office said, "No, we do not accept petitions that have followed precisely the words used in the leaflet issued by the Department of Transport", that would provoke in Kent a row of earthquake proportions. It would be thought that the Government were rejecting what they had themselves put forward as the perfect format for petitioning. There must be an element of common sense and flexibility in this matter, and I hope that the Minister will give the assurance that any petitioner who has followed the guidlines in the leaflet will have his petition accepted.

Mr. Hughes: The hon. Member will be aware that the leaflet came from the Government, whereas its acceptance is a matter for Parliament. We need a clear indication now that the relevant parliamentary officers will accept all the forms—those now in and those yet to be received—as being valid registration requests for petitions. It is important for the people concerned to know that the leaflet guidance provides an appropriate means for them to lodge requests to have their views heard.

Mr. David Mitchell: It may save unnecessary debate if I say that we cleared the leaflets with the Clerks of the House before the text went to the printer. I should be most surprised if there were any circumstance in which they were not satisfid with petitions returned in the form that went to the printer.

Mr. Hughes: I am grateful for that comment. I was told yesterday that there had been no official confirmation from the Officers of the House that they would be acceptable.

Mr. Mitchell: I cannot speak for the officials of the House, but I have given the background and one can have reasonable confidence about the position from that.

Mr. Hughes: I am grateful for that assurance.

The argument is whether the petitioners should have eight weeks or less time. We have for consideration two dates. They have not been plucked out of the air. They are based on precedent or on arguments that have been put forward. Those two dates appear in the amendments tabled by my right hon. Friend the Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) and by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Cash: The hon. Gentleman will know from his research that in comparable circumstances with a private Bill the measure would be deposited on 27 November and the closing date for petitions to be deposited would be 30 January in the ensuring year, which is eight weeks.

This measure was ordered to be printed on 17 April, was available in the Vote Office on 18 April and the date in the motion by which petitions must be deposited is 17 June. That is nearly nine weeks, which is longer than would have been available were it a private Bill.

Mr. Hughes: I will seek to deal with that point and with the other points because they are important.

It has been accepted that this is a most exceptional, if not unique, Bill. Given what the Secretary of State said about granting the maximum latitude to petitioners, that militates in favour of the maximum period. As the hon. Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) has said, it is quite correct that the period from the date of the printing of the Bill and its First Reading to the date proposed by the Government is eight weeks. None the less, an argument was advanced, as the hon. Member for Stafford will recall, in the Select Committee on Standing Orders by the only two petitioners at that time, the Dover Harbour Board and Sealink UK Ltd., that the period for depositing petitions should be eight weeks from the Second Reading of the Bill.

It could be argued and the Government's original position was that eight weeks from the First Reading and publication of the Bill was sufficient. My argument was advanced not as a matter of procedure but because I am aware of the enormous number of people and organisations who wish to present their cases and to ensure that, procedurally, they do it properly. They also wish to make sure that once Second Reading is granted they present their cases in due time and that there are no hiccups. Those people want the maximum opportunity in accordance with the latitude that the Secretary of State said he would give.

If one is procedurally and precisely following the only precedent that is nearly appropriate, which is the one of 1973-74, then the House will be aware that the Channel Tunnel Bill was introduced and given its Second Reading on 5 December 1973 and petitions against the Bill were ordered to be deposited by 15 January 1974—almost six weeks. That period is almost exactly in accord with the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition and his colleagues. We argue that a longer period is important and necessary for a combination of the two reasons: first, that this is a more important and more complicated Bill; and, secondly, because in 1973 documents like the Kent impact study had been produced some eight months beforehand and had been available for petitioners to digest.

As the hon. Member for Stafford and other hon. Members will be aware, one of the complaints this time is that the environmental impact statement has not yet been produced and is unlikely to be produced except in an interim form. I raised that matter with the Secretary of State. That statement will be the result of what is called the Mitchell committee's deliberations if the committee agrees to produce it some time later this month. Therefore, the normal access to information that would be expected, particularly for a Bill of this importance and complexity, and that was granted in 1973-74 has not been granted on this occasion.

As the hon. Member for Stafford and other hon. Members will know, complaints have been made that, for example, the Council for the Protection of Rural England and others wanted to have access to copies of maps in order to make points in petitions. Those maps were only made available on 15 or 16 May, and there are several reasons why information has either not been available at all, which makes life more difficult for petitioners, or has been made available belatedly. On the substantial matters of environmental and economic and local importance, given now that it is clear that there is likely to be a large number of petitioners, it is important that the spirit of the Secretary of State's remarks is carried through by the decision of the House that the maximum period be granted.

My final point is one which might be made against an argument that 29 July is the right date. It could be argued that the setting of that date is an attempt to kill the Bill. That is not the case, for the following reasons. By its very nature, this Bill will carry over into the next Session of Parliament. It was always expected that it would take two Sessions. That being the case, it is not imperative—indeed, it has never been envisaged—that the procedure in this House, let alone in the other place, should be completed before the end of this Session of Parliament.

The normal precedent is that when the Select Committee procedure has been decided upon there is a period for negotiations between the promoters of the Bill and the other interested parties before the petitioners put their case to the Select Committee. Therefore, it would be possible and appropriate for the summer recess to be used for the negotiations. That would considerably shorten the time taken in the Select Committee and the time taken by the Select Committee.

As the Minister of State said in response to a question about an hour and a half ago, it is now highly likely that the original Government plan for the timetable, of six weeks in Select Committee, is far from realistic and that unless there is a period for both sides to reconcile the matters that can be reconciled, the Select Committee proceedings, even if the Select Committee meets for a considerable period, will take much longer than six weeks.

In certain circumstances, the Select Committee could meet during the summer recess. I am aware that in order to do so the end date for petitions would have had to pass, that the motion of the Select Committee on Selection as to the composition of the Select Committee would have had to take place, and that the Select Committee would have had to meet before the recess to decide on its procedure. I am not arguing that that is likely to be achieved between 29 July and the summer recess, because in all probability the House will rise at about that date. However, it is certainly a procedurally sound precedent to allow time between the end of the period for petitions and the start of the hearings before the Select Committee. That would shorten the proceedings while giving time for the people of Kent and the interested bodies in Kent and beyond not only to make their case but to deal with the promoters on the issues raised by their petitions and by the Bill. It would still permit time for the matter to be dealt with by the Select Committee in the autumn, for the matter then to proceed in the normal way to Standing Committee and to the other place, and for the Bill to complete all its stages during the next Session of Parliament, as was always envisaged.

The proceedings may be completed a month or two later than the Government hope, but I believe that that would be not a loss but a gain. It would allow the people of Kent, who in their thousands clearly feel that they are not being listened to and that the Government are moving too quickly, to have an opportunity properly to put their case.

I hope that the House will act on the request that was made to the Select Committee on Standing Orders in May: that eight weeks should be granted from Second Reading to the petitioners whose petition was then established. In accepting that request, I hope that the House will reject the other, lesser amendments and will recognise the importance of the Bill. I hope too, that the Government will back away from appearing to wish to steamroller the Bill through Parliament in the face of the objectors and the valid concerns of thousands of people and that they will accept that, having obtained their Second Reading a few hours ago, they can afford to allow the people of Kent and beyond to put their anxieties properly before the Committee set up by the House. As the Secretary of State said, the period that would provide maximum latitude is eight weeks, as advocated in the amendment of my right hon. and hon. Friends and myself.

5.28 am

Mr. Leon Brittan (Richmond, Yorks): I hope that I shall be forgiven if I do not take up the argument of the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes). The reason for not doing so is not out of discourtesy to him but because the approach that I invite the House to bring to bear, as set out in amendments (e) and (f), is based upon a different set of considerations from those which seem to motivate the hon. Gentleman.

I am concerned not so much with the question of precedent—who said what, and when, or who did what on the last occasion — but with the fundamental and simple question of fairness to which I referred on raising these issues when we debated them last Tuesday. My only concern is for a fair opportunity to be given to the people who wish to object to the whole or part of the Government's proposals and for a fair opportunity to be given to Parliament to consider those objections.

If that is the principle that one brings to bear, to which conclusion should one come? Some of the more extravagant criticisms of the Government have exploded in the faces of those who made them. The reality is that the Bill has been available publicly for some time, and for those interested groups and organised, corporate bodies which have a legitimate, vested interest in the outcome of the matter, there is no problem with the Government's timetable. None the less, as I said on Tuesday, it seems clear that for the private individual, who may not be aware of the precise distinctions between what one can do when the Bill is published, when the general scheme is formulated and after Second Reading, some further latitude is desirable ever and above that provided in the motion which stands in the Government's name.

With those considerations in mind, I embarked on discussions, primarily with my hon. and learned Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry—the hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard)—who has been assiduous in ensuring that the interests of his constituents are put before the House and within Government. As a result of discussions as to what was necessary and proper for the people of Kent, my view is reflected in the amendment that stands in my name and inititally in the name of my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) and several other hon. Members.

It is a balance. Of course, no one suggests that if a week or a slightly longer period were added to that reflected in my amendment, the scheme would come to an end. Of course not. None the less, it is reasonable that the matter should be proceeded with at reasonable speed, and the extra time provided for the presentation of petitions should be no more than is necessary. I cannot pretend to be an expert on the state of public opinion in Kent or on the readiness of individuals in Kent to present their petitions, but I cannot help reflecting on the current tifnetables that are offered.

When my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South joined me in putting forward the dates that appear in amendments (e) and (f), which emerged from discussions with my hon. and learned Friend the Under-Secretary of State, we discovered quickly that the amendments attracted considerable support in the House. It is notable that a large proportion of the names appended to the amendments are the Members of Parliament who represent Kentish constituencies, such as my hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone (Sir J. Wells), my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Rees), my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) as well as others. Therefore, it is reasonable to conclude that that shows some consensus as to what is necessary and acceptable.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My hon. Friend has picked up another interesting point. When one examines the names of those who subscribed to the amendment, one sees an unusual number of lawyers. Perhaps that also shows the concern of many hon. Members who must deal with legal problems. Inevitably, when one deals with matters of this complexity, it takes a long time for some constituents to ascertain what their legal rights are, how to proceed and, especially, bring them before the House.

Mr. Brittan: I am sure that is the case.

I remain of the view that the timetable envisaged in amendments (e) and (f) is right and would be generally acceptable. I welcome the fact that, although on Tuesday we were not debating it directly, it was the centre of discussion. My hon. Friend the Minister of State, in answering the debate, spoke extremely sympathetically abou it—so sympathetically, I think, that the House and country understood what he said to mean, that the Government regarded the amended timetable as acceptable. I hope that in reaching that conclusion I was not assuming too much and that that will be ratified and confirmed when he replies to the debate.

Again, I commend the amendments to the House.

5.35 am

Mr. Michael Stern (Bristol, North-West): I do not claim to be an expert on procedure, and I come to this aspect of the debate—the question of timing—with a relatively fresh outlook.

Discussed in terms of purely Kentish interests, it may well be that there has been a great deal of publicity on the effects of the Bill and, therefore, that for most people, although not all, the opportunity to develop the idea of petitioning against the Bill or for the Bill and submitting that petition in time has probably been given. However, the Bill has a much wider context, and I think it is extremely unlikely with regard to small groups of individuals particularly outside the area immediately affected by the construction of the tunnel, that the opportunity has yet been given to the extent promised by the Government in the course of the discussions on the Bill.

[Mr. Michael Stern]

For many people like myself who are unfamiliar with the procedure on a private Bill or a hybrid Bill, there may well have been a temptation to defer thinking about whether to petition until the relevant procedure was laid down by Parliament, as is being done now. There are the difficulties that will then be faced by, say, a group of workers in the port of Avonmouth in my constituency who have a genuine interest in the implications of the Bill but who nevertheless have never before had to face a private Bill procedure. They may, therefore, later today—by which I mean in normal rather than parliamentary terms—well get together and say, "we shall go along to see our MP tonight and discuss with him how best we can put forward a petition".

Let us look at the problem that they face under the procedure outlined. They have 11 days in which to decide whether to petition, what the basis of their petition is to be and, if it is to be heard, whether they wish to be heard themselves or to appoint an agent to appear on their behalf. If they decide that they wish to appoint an agent, they have to decide whom they wish to appoint, and who appoints him. They have to prepare the petition and agree among themselves what should appear in it.

Let us remember that they do not have the exhaustive office facilities that are available to hon. Members.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My hon. Friend has been reciting the difficulties that stand in the way of his constituents. He must not forget that the petition has to be in the proper form. I anticipate that many people who wish to make a petition will have difficulty in obtaining the proper form in which to make it. As I understand the motion and the amendments, if the petition is not in the proper form the petitioners will not be able to present their arguments.

Mr. Stern: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for making that point. Someone unfamiliar with the procedure may not have known before this debate that such a proper form existed.

To complete my description of the difficulties to be handled in the 11-day period, may I point out that if the petitioners do not have office facilities they will have to find some place in which the documents can be typed and copied? The petition will have to be submitted by the stated date. Of the 11-day period specified, two days are Sundays. If I may be forgiven a slight element of sour grapes, we have made sure in the House recently that none of the procedures that I have mentioned may be carried out on two of the days in the 11-day period.

The Bill will affect the whole country and not just Kent. We should be concerned about making available to all the people their rights as citizens to make representations on this important measure, although I accept that the procedures as normally laid down have been carried out and that there has been a slight extension of the time normally given. The normal procedures are designed for Bills about which there is adequate publicity to enable people to make their representations.

There is a widening realisation of the implications of the Bill. I can assure the Minister that six months ago the Channel tunnel was not being discussed in the pubs and clubs of Avonmouth; now it is. That discussion is broadening all the time. My hon. Friends from outside the area know how their postbag has been developing on the issue. They are now getting letters from people who did not realise until recently the extent to which they would be affected.

Because of the growing number of people who feel, rightly or wrongly, that they may be affected by the Bill, to give 11 days, of which two are dead days, for them to read reports about the procedure to be followed and then to go through that procedure may seem reasonable according to precedent, but in my view it cannot be considered reasonable.

5.43 am

Mr. Aitken: I take as my text for these brief remarks the last words of my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern). I agree that the test of the matter and of this group of amendments is what is reasonable. We can go up hill and down dale on the subject of precedents. I speak with experience when I say that, because I went up hill and down dale in front of the Standing Orders Committee last month, and I went up hill and down dale two nights ago in the House. At the end of it all, I suspect that neither I, the House nor the Standing Orders Committee could make head or tail of the precedents.

The common sense judgment was put very well by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House when he spoke in the debate on 3 June. He said:

> "Valuable though precedent is as a guide in this unfamiliar area, the House, I am sure, would not wish to proceed except on the basis of fair arrangements for those who might wish to oppose the Bill's effects on them. The Government believe that those whose interests may be affected by the Bill should have an opportunity to marshall their arguments effectively, as they would have if affected by a private Bill."—[Official Report, 3 June 1986; Vol. 98, c. 837.]

I think that we can all say "Hear, hear" to that.

Two precise amendments have been tabled. Amendment (c) in the name of the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) and other Liberal Members would provide an eight-week period for petitions from the date of Second Reading. The hon. Gentleman has one eminent and learned supporter of his view, Mr. Joe Durkin, the parliamentary agent for the petitioners, who argued exactly that point in front of the Standing Orders Committee.

The second precedent is that set by the previous Channel Tunnel Bill, the detail of which I discussed at some length in our debate on Tuesday, and which provides for six weeks from the date of Second Reading.

The third proposal is that of my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan) for a period of three weeks and two days from the date of Second Reading. Impressed as I was by the arguments put forward by my right hon. and learned Friend, I feel that I must pay a tribute elsewhere. One might say that the voice might be the voice of Richmond, but the hands were the hands of my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. He has had a very difficult task to fulfil. These days he is often referred to in the House by the adjective "assiduous". It sounds almost like something from a book on trees—an assiduous or deciduous tree. He certainly is assiduous, but as his parliamentary neighbour I know that the people of Folkestone are fortunate to have such a first-class Member of Parliament. He has fought for them behind the scenes just as effectively, if not more so, than those of us who have the privilege of the freedom of the Back Benches to fight our battles up front.

My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks and I are on the same side. We are trying to obtain a fair and sensible deal for our constituents. I should have preferred the amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey for an eight-week period, or that we should follow the Anthony Crosland Bill precedent for a six-week period. However, we have a three-week period, which makes some sense in terms of straight fair play.

If we had stuck to the Government's proposal for a 12-day period, we would have been in great danger of being unfair to our constituents. I know that there are all sorts of arguments showing that a 12-day period is in line with what has been done before. However, nothing in the Bill has ever been done before because we have never had a Bill quite like it. We are into new territory. Indeed, constant new developments make a sensible petitioning period absolutely essential.

My hon. Friend the Minister may not have realised quite what a hostage to fortune he delivered at about 4 am. this morning, when he announced that the boat trains from Victoria to the Channel ports would cease from the date that the tunnel opens. That ministerial statement will cause consternation, if not uproar, in the Channel ports. I am sure that remark will be the subject of many clauses in many petitions. That is the last thing that the people of Kent want to see British Rail ordered to do by a Minister.

Mr. David Mitchell: I must protest. My hon. Friend has completely misunderstood the position if he believes in any way that I have powers to instruct British Rail what services to run or that I would dream of doing that, especially in such a sensitive matter. I understand that British Rail does not consider that it would be commercially worth its while running boat trains in addition to the other trains to Dover, especially when it can run trains directly through the tunnel. That is a commercial matter for British Rail to decide.

Mr. Aitken: The so-called commercial matters lack all sensitivity and political common sense. That announcement will cause the people of Kent to express their feelings on the matter through the petitioning process. It only goes to show that there is a need for a fair and adequate petitioning process on a subject as new and as newsworthy as the cancellation of boat trains. At least there is now a reasonable period in which to petition.

I do not want to labour the point unduly. My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe, aided by his capable amanuensis, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks, did a good job, and I am pleased to support them on that point.

These amendments make sense. They will make for fair play. Although they do not go as far as some hon. Members would have wanted to go—and I certainly wanted more—on the principle that half a loaf is better than no bread and that three weeks is still not as good as six weeks, at least it is half of what we wanted. I am happy that the Government seem inclined to accept the amendment, and I will support it.

5.51 am

Mr. Cash: All hon. Members have great sympathy for the people of Kent having regard to the proposals in the Bill. I believe that that has been clearly revealed in the debates. Perhaps the voting figures have suggested otherwise. However, there is considerable sympathy for the people whose lives could be disrupted by the Bill's proposals, however important those proposals may be.

I support the Bill not simply because I believe that great benefits will be derived from it. Indeed, in my constituency British Reinforced Concrete has every possibility of gaining a considerable slice of the contracts, which will be good for the job prospects of my constituents. However, I appreciate that there are difficulties and I associate myself with the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) about my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard).

I would like to commence my remarks on these amendments by considering what would happen if a petition was presented after time. This is the crunch point because, if someone found that he was to be adversely affected and did not have an adequate opportunity to get his act together and presented a petition after the due date had passed, certain consequences would follow.

It would be useful to put on the record what those consequences would be. As I think that some people might care to read the report of the proceedings who otherwise might find that they would have to seek help elsewhere, it may be helpful if I give the page references from "Erskine May" which deal with these matters. Page 948 of the 20th edition of "Erskine May" states

> "If a petition be presented after the time limit, the only mode by which the petitioners can obtain a hearing is by presenting a petition, praying that the standing orders be dispensed with in their case, and that they may be heard by the committee. The petition will stand referred to the Standing Orders Committee; and if the petitioners are able to show"— and this is the important point—

> "any special circumstances which entitle them to indulgence and, particularly, that they have not been guilty of laches,"— that means undue delay—

> "the standing orders may be dispensed with."

Various precedents are given to support that proposition which are set out in a footnote which I shall not worry the House with. A number of occasions are specified, one of which was in 1905, where these matters have been dealt with.

The important point is that, even if somebody were to go over the time limit, there is the power in the hands of the Standing Orders Committee to dispense with the Standing Orders in question. By "Standing Orders" we are talking about the Standing Orders relating to private Bills, in relation to which petitions have to be deposited, and, of course, that is the crucial question on this point.

I thought that it would be useful also to refer to what is really at stake in a matter of this kind——

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My hon. Friend has helpfully told the House that there is a power to dispense with the time limits, but I take it that that is a discretionary power which is not subject to very clear definitional tests. If that is right, he will agree that the individual petitioner who is out of time might be very reluctant to make an application to the relevant Standing Committee for dispensation, and, in any event, he might find it necessary to instruct counsel.

Mr. Cash: I have great sympathy with what my hon. Friend is saying and I have great sympathy with the proposals set out in the amendment to jog the time forward by a number of weeks.

I said earlier when I intervened in the speech made by the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) that the Bill was published on, I think, 17 April and that therefore it would have been available in the Vote Office on 18 April and that the date specified in the Government's motion of 18 June would give something over eight weeks.

Notwithstanding that point, the fact is that a crucial question arises from the Standing Orders on private Bills. I was advising shiprepairers on the Aircraft and Shipbuilding Industries Act 1977. A relevant point arose in the House of Lords on the Standing Orders and we were able to show that the Government agent had not put the requirement under Standing Orders that people should be shown to be able to object to the proposals in the hybrid Bill. The fact that that was not there was highly relevant. The Government agents argued it out and the shiprepairers got out of nationalisation.

The point that I want to make here is that, under the private Bill Standing Orders, they are all linked to dates which go back to 27 November and then 4 December, and, I think, 10 December after that. Stipulations are given as to when the advertisements must appear in the London Gazette and the local newspapers.

We must be realistic, because those people simply do not have access to the sort of facilities that we have in the House. Some people do not even have the foggiest idea about any Bill, let alone a hybrid Bill, which is a mystery to all of us because those things are extremely arcane and mysterious. But Standing Orders specify that the notices have to be published precisely in order to ensure that persons who live in a locality shall have adequate notice not only of the contents of the Bill but of their right to object to it. In that advertisement — this can all be checked—it gives the address of the parliamentary agent concerned, in this case the Government agent, and the address of the Private Bill Office in the House of Commons. They are then recommended to take appropriate action.

Mr. Wolfson: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for emphasising the fact that, in many cases, we are dealing with private individuals who, as my hon. Friend said, do not have access to the facilities we have here. I think that it is important to give the maximum time to those petitioners, or would-be petitioners. Following each stage of debate in the House, there is an opportunity for publicity in the local newspapers and further discussion on television or radio which alerts people to action that they might not otherwise have become aware of, despite the advertisements; hence the need for more time.

Mr. Cash: I understand what my hon. Friend has said. People simply do not know. Our procedures should be all about providing fairness for people in those circumstances. I think that it was Maine who said that justice is to be found in the interstices of procedure, and we should bear that in mind. After all, the whole procedure on private Bills and the right to petition, which I hope I shall explain shortly, will give some indication as to what is involved for the private individual. The right to petition is an important inherent constitutional right which is given to people in our democracy.

Mr. Aitken: Before we get into the interstices of procedure, I wonder whether, because he is such an expert in this area, I can ask my hon. Friend's advice about one aspect of the interstices of the newspaper advertisements placed by the Department of Transport. My hon. Friend has been rightly stressing the importance of placing the correct advertisements in local newspapers. In an exchange between myself and my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury (Mr. Crouch) in the early hours of Wednesday morning I said that I was interested in an advertisement which had been placed in the "Canterbury Times" on April 28. My hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury shouted back that there was no such newspaper.

I was slightly thrown by that simply because I had taken the name of the "Canterbury Times" from the written parliamentary answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State. The answer said, in listing all the advertisements that had been placed in local newspapers, that an advertisement about how to petition had been placed in the "Canterbury Times" on 28 April. Faced with the information that no such paper existed, I checked the matter and have found that no such paper exists.

Therefore we are faced with the case of the disappearing newspaper or the phantom advertisement. That may be the subject of a searching inquiry, bringing in the Ombudsman and others, into the interstices of the Department of Transport. I think that we should be told more about this matter. I simply want my hon. Friend's guidance on the significance of the phantom advertisement or the missing newspaper because, clearly, a dereliction of duty occurred and we would like to know what advertisement appeared in what newspaper and what is the significance of the omission.

Mr. Cash: Now that the right hon. Member for Mole Valley (Mr. Baker) has been transferred from the Department of the Environment to the Department of Education and Science, perhaps we will not have the chance to ask him that question because the Department of the Environment primarily has responsibility for matters relating to the conduct of local government Bills where so many of these things crop up.

The mystery to which my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South refers is the kind of matter that G. K. Chesterton's Father Brown should address. That is the sort of person who would be able to track down such a paper. There is a substantive and crucial point here. If notices are not put in local newspapers, people do not know what is going on. Under Standing Orders, they are required to place petitions not as a matter of choice but as a matter of requirement of the House, a practice hallowed for over a century. If the advertisements are not placed, local people do not know what is going on.

Sir John Farr: Perhaps I can help my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South over his inquiries about the "Canterbury Times". It could be that the Department in question could have sent the advertisement to the "Canterbury Times" in Auckland, New Zealand.

Mr. Cash: I am grateful for that Antipodean note. We shall have a certain amount of difficulty in paying the air fares of those who feel that they should be petitioning against the Channel tunnel because of fear that it might suddenly emerge in New Zealand. However, this is an important point that should be taken on board.

The examiners have examined the Bill to see whether there has been compliance with Standing Orders, and, as I understand it, it has been agreed that they have been. That means that it is a fait accompli, and the end of the subject. There is substantial case law, with which I shall not weary the House, in the case of Pickin v British Railways Board in the House of Lords. It stipulates that once the examiners have completed their procedures, that is it for present purposes.

The question whether the petitioners know has to be weighed against the extremely detailed information that the Department of Transport has made available. It would be unfair, in relying on the Standing Orders in "Erskine May", to overlook the fact that the Department has made available to people, and deserves congratulation for so doing, an immense amount of information. I have some doubt as to whether we could use the argument that people did not know what was going on.

When we are considering whether there is a case, in fairness, we have to look at it at two levels. One is the general public awareness, and the other is the right of the person to present a petition and to be heard on it before the Committee. However we look at the broad picture of public awareness — and we should be grateful to the Government for making the information available — the reality is that this is a procedural question. When the matter comes, if it does, before the Select Committee on Standing Orders, or before the Committee considering the Bill, it will not be reasonable for the Government to argue that, as so much material had been made available, nobody need worry any more. The consequence of a person not having complied with the Standing Order or not having got his petition in on time is likely to be fatal to his right to be heard. We should take that important point seriously.

If I were to suggest which of the various options presented to us by the amendments we should go for, I would go for the one in the name of my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks, (Mr. Brittan). That provides that bit more in the way of time and fairness for the petitioners, and balances the postion fairly well.

Mr. Hughes: I do not believe that the hon. Gentleman intended to mislead the House, However, my understanding of the Standing Orders Committee report is that the examiners of petitions for private Bills reported, in the case of this Bill, that:

"Standing Orders . . . are applicable . . . and have not been complied with in respect of the time prescribed."

I stress that it says

"have not been complied with in respect of the time prescribed."

It was obviously for that reason that the matters went to the Standing Orders Committee and then came to the House.

I hope that the hon. Gentleman will accept that if the campaign groups and those who are interested, and the representative bodies in Kent and beyond, say that the time prescribed is not sufficient, that is a good test of whether the time should be extended. They are arguing, as I understand it, for eight weeks from Second Reading, and not for the lesser period that was proposed by the right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan).

Mr. Cash: I have sympathy with the general arguments that have been expressed in the House on these matters. With regard to non-compliance with Standing Orders, the hon. Gentleman will find that there could not be anything otherwise. I have not been involved with this issue to any great extent until this evening, but my surmise is that it simply means non-compliance with those Standing Orders that could not be complied with because the private Bill Standing Order refers to 27 November. One cannot comply with Standing Orders where the Bill has been put on deposit on 27 November and was published only on 18 April. That is strict non-compliance in any event, and it applies to all hybrid Bills.

The point that I was making concerned other questions that might arise in relation to non-compliance. I went on to deal with two levels of concern. One of those is public awareness. The Government have gone further than one might reasonably have expected. They deserve congratulation.

The other question is the strict justice of the matter in relation to the prescription of Standing Orders. If someone did not have the full rights afforded him under the private Bill Standing Orders, he would be severely prejudiced. He would not be heard unless in turn the Committee was prepared to dispense with the Standing Orders by way of special indulgence, subject to the criteria that I mentioned, including the fact that the person concerned had not been involved in undue delay.

Several other points ought to be made. Appearances before the Select Committee are mentioned in amendment (f) in the name of my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan). The question of appearances may also arise. All that I am about to say is directly relevant to whether people appear on time. If they do not appear on time, they will suffer the consequences of failing to do so and they are liable to be shut out. "Erskine May" says on page 1014:

"If parties have neglected to enter their appearance at the proper time, they will not be entitled to be heard."

It goes on to say:

"In some special cases . . . indulgence has been granted to them."

It quotes a number of instances in the 19th century.

It is not, however, simply a question of whether a petition has been handed in, but whether the person has appeared in accordance with Standing Orders. Complex matters must be complied with. It is important that people should know that they are on the line — that they are liable not to be heard if they fail to comply with the requirements.

That brings me back to the question of complexity, and information and the sorts of procedures with which people must comply in the time that is allotted. I said earlier, when I referred to notices, that by the time the period which is required under, I think, Standing Orders 4 and 11, dealing with Private Bills, is added on, we will be well into December — taking it forward from 27 November — within which period the various local advertisements in the London Gazette and, in the case of Northern Ireland, the Belfast Gazette—although that would not apply in this case —must be complied with.

[Mr. Cash]

When one subtracts that period—in other words, the period in which strictly required information is made available to the public—from 30 January and compares it with the period between 18 April and 17 June, one begins to observe a distortion which is against the interests of individual petitioners. That causes me some concern. That is why I agree with the amendment put forward by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks.

Against that background, it is important to bear in mind what it is that people who could be affected would be expected to know about, assuming that they got the notice in the newspapers in the proper manner. I have referred to the importance of the right to petition. Perhaps it would be helpful if I quoted from page 858 of "Erskine May". It states:

"The right of petitioning the Crown and Parliament for redress of grievances is acknowledged as a fundamental principle of the constitution"— we cannot get anything clearer than that

"It has been uninterruptedly exercised from very early times and has had a profound effect in determining the main forms of parliamentary procedure."

The requirement which is imposed under the Standing Orders on petitioners in terms of their right to be heard is set out on page 949 of "Erskine May". It describes the locus standi of petitioners against private Bills. That is an arcane and difficult subject. I do not believe that those who want to petition would be able to get their act together in the relatively short time that is provided at the moment —that, is, up to 17 June.

There are complex questions involving individuals, remoteness, injurious affection, and a stack of extraordinary expressions which go way back to the 19th century but which none the less have a direct bearing on the individual rights of people. We must have regard to the relatively late hour — it is not as late as some hon. Members may wish—when we consider that individuals should have every opportunity not only to be heard but to have the maximum time that the Government are prepared to give.

I hope that the Minister, in his reply, will allow a little more time for those petitioners. It is not a long time. I think that it is only 10 days. When one considers the fact that the Government — according to the informal papers which the Government have supplied—is taking the Bill through to December 1986 and the following Session, I would not have thought that 10 days was a lot to ask. Surely 10 days is not such a great deal to ask of the Government at this stage.

I happen to be much in favour of the principle behind the Bill and the proposals in it, but I think that we as a Parliament have a duty to ensure that people are seen to be treated fairly. For the sake of 10 days—that is all that it boils down to—it would be reasonable for the Government to make a concession. As a member of the party which is in government, I believe that the Government would gain a great deal of credit by so doing. They would be seen not to be intransigent and inflexible. Instead, they would be recognised as being reasonable and fair. This is something that we must seek to do.

I have referred to the Standing Orders which prescribe the right of persons to be heard and perhaps it would be useful, if not a little lengthy, to go into them, they having a direct bearing upon the time that is made available to petitioners for the important reasons that I have already given. If the petitioners do not have sufficient time, they will be shut out, or they may fail to get their petition in in time. If they fail to get in their appearance, they will be shut out with the most dire consequences for themselves. How invidious it would be for some persons to have put in individual locus standi objections and petitioners and for others to find that they could not get in. What an unfairness that would be.

Petitioning against a Bill can cut the other way. There is another procedure, to which I have not referred, on which those who are present might care to reflect. The 20th edition of "Erskine May" is a mighty volume and it informs us that there is a procedure that is known as petitions against alterations, which provides an opportunity for those who do not want a Bill to be altered to deposit a petition.

There are some theological arguments on whether a petition against alterations can be deposited in respect of hybrid Bills. The balance of opinion, however, is that petitions against alterations may be deposited against them. Such petitioners may, too, have need of the time that is available. We do not know how they would react if they were to be provided with such an opportunity.

I am confining myself as best I can to the Standing Orders that relate to private business, which is germane as we are considering procedural issues. There is a range of criteria laid down in Standing Orders with which persons are required to comply, otherwise they may be shut out of the right to be heard. Standing Order No. 92 states:

"It shall be competent to the Court of Referees, if they think fit, to admit petitioners to be heard upon their petitions against a private bill, on the ground of competition."

This matter arose during the passage of the railway Bills — my great grandfather was chairman of the London-Brighton railway back in 1832. I believe that the Standing Orders that relate to competition were much used in those days when everyone was competing with one another. I have not yet heard of a potential rival or competitor to the Channel tunnel, but one never knows. Indeed alternative routes may be offered which could compete with the Channel Tunnel Bill.

Individuals may be affected by the provisions under Standing Order No. 93 and members of companies are also affected by them. The Standing Order reads:

"Where a bill is promoted by an incorporated company, society, association or partnership, members thereof shall not be entitled to be heard before the committee against the bill, unless their interests as affected thereby are distinct from the general interests of the company, society, association or partnership."

It allows a locus standi to associations. An association can petition against a Bill alleging that its trade — most important to those genuinely aggrieved by the proposals in a bill—business or interests

"will be injuriously affected by the provisions contained therein."

It allows discretion to the Court of Referees to admit the petitioners to be heard on these allegations.

Standing Order No. 95—this should be read carefully because one does not want to be caught out—states:

"Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing paragraph, where any society, association or other body sufficiently representing amenity, educational, travel or recreational interests, petition against a bill, alleging that the interests they represent will be adversely affected to a material extent by the provisions contained in the bill,"

the Court of Referees has the discretion to admit those petitioners to be heard.

Within the time scale prescribed it would be possible for persons who fell within the provisions of Standing Order No. 95 to discover that they were shut out if they had not made their case in the proper prescribed form in which petitions must be deposited.

There is the locus standi for local authorites and inhabitants. Local authorities have locus standi in relation to other Standing Orders.

Mr. Michael Brown: My hon. Friend made an important point about the rights of petitioners to petition against an additional petition. I followed what my hon. Friend said on that matter and indeed that proposition is before a private Bill Committee of which I am a member. To demonstrate to the House how such petitions can occur, I have before me—for obvious reasons I shall not refer to any detail except the title—the London Docklands Railway (City Extension) Bill additional provision, which is a set of amendments brought forward by the promoters; and I also have before me the petition against the additional provision. Therefore, I confirm what my hon. Friend has said, and that procedure is in use in a private Bill Committee at this time.

Mr. Cash: I am grateful to my hon. Friend, as he has provided me with another provision, the one relating to additional provision. I was referring to petitions against alterations. If that has not confused everyone, I do not know what will.

These matters are complex and arcane, but they are important. What I say is of great importance to the individual petitioners. Contrary to the assertions of the Opposition and some newspapers that this is a filibuster, I hope that our proceedings will give some useful advice to petitioners about their rights. Through these proceedings we are providing them with information which will be of considerable benefit to them. I challenge any hon. Member whose house was about to be bulldozed, sterilised or afflected by nuclear waste—

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Does my hon. Friend understand that hon. Members who represent constituencies which may be affected by nuclear waste see a parallel here? We are here to ensure that the people of Kent get a fair deal partly to make the point that the people of Lincolnshire should get a fair deal, should the Government be so ill advised as to suggest that Fulbeck should see low-level waste. We shall not put up with that.

Mr. Cash: I am sure that you would not like me to be diverted down the nuclear path, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Regarding my earlier remark about the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey, who was asleep at the time, I now realise that I am in the position of the Fox-North coalition of the late 18th century in this unholy alliance of the nuclear and Channel tunnel defeaters, while I support the Bill's proposals.

Although I am in favour of the proposals in the Bill, I am absolutely in favour of people having every right given to them in our Standing Orders, within our parliamentary democracy and within this Parliament to enable them to petition within a reasonable time so as not to feel unfairly shut out. The real question is one of fairness. We must ensure that those people are given the information that they deserve.

I have slightly lost track of the time, so I am not certain how long I have to go.

Mr. Simon Hughes: As the hon. Gentleman has far exceeded the time that I took to open the debate, he will perhaps allow me to remind him that he has spoken for more than 40 minutes. If—and I deny this entirely—I seemed to drop off earlier, on reflection I would rather have done so more recently as, although these procedural matters may be of some importance, they are not the most gripping contribution for the other hon. Members present.

Mr. Cash: I take the hon. Gentleman's point, but when he sees the remark that I made when he was asleep he will see the poignancy and irony in the remark that he has just made.

During the debate serious matters have been canvassed. Although it is now 6.33 am, we are having a serious discussion about matters directly relevant to potential petitioners in Kent, and I hope that all opportunities will be open to them to enable them to be fairly heard so that they will not feel harshly treated, although they may not like the proposals in the Bill. If their petitions are in the proper form, as prescribed by the Standing Orders, they will be heard. They will discover that they get a fair hearing from this House, and they will have the opportunity to seek amendments—I have a suspicion that amendments will be made—to improve the Bill.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I support the claim that we should enlarge the time within which petitions may be deposited. I agree with the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) about precedent. Precedent is totally irrelevant in this case, partly because we should be dealing with justice—while what was done in the past may be a guide to justice, it is not necessarily a sure guide—and partly because what we are discussing is so extensive in its scope that nothing that has happened in the past is of the slightest help to what we should do today.

The measure now before us will be of enormous consequence to the people of Kent and throughout the United Kingdom. To talk about having a few days in which to lodge a petition is nonsense. My hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) talked about the date on which the Bill was first published. Though an interesting date to consider, it is not a helpful date from which to start.

We should start from the date of Second Reading. It is possible, even in this Parliament, that a measure will not achieve a Second Reading, and no sensible man should invest in a petition, backed by counsel, solicitors and the rest, until the Bill has achieved its Second Reading, which in this case was only a few hours ago.

Mr. Cash: My hon. Friend will agree that, the Bill having received its Second Reading only a few hours ago, it would be cutting it fine even to agree to the date in the amendment standing in the name of my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan). In fairness, we must consider the date on which the advertisements first appeared, because that was notice to the public locally through the London Gazette. That combined with the date of 18 April, enables us to argue with justification that 27 June would be a considerable improvement on the 17 June, as specified in the motion.

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend is differentiating between the solicitor and the barrister. In these matters the barrister takes a broad brush approach. We start from the fact that only a few hours ago the Bill got its Second Reading. If

[Mr. Hogg]

I were a petitioner somewhere in Kent I should not instruct somebody like me to draft a petition unless and until the measure got its Second Reading. It would be a waste of money to do otherwise.

The time from which the horses start to run is the time when the Bill receives its Second Reading. In the committal motion we are considering a few days. That short a period is unwise because, as my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford pointed out, this matter affects people's rights. Moreover, if those people get it wrong, they will not have a chance to make their case. We are talking about matters which can be affected by small errors.

It is strange that we should be talking about a few days. People have to see the advertisement to know that they have a right to petition. They have then to see their lawyers, raise money, draft the petition in the prescribed form, lodge it. if any of those things goes wrong, the petitioner is shut out. All that argues for plenty of time. In one place it is suggested that the date should be 17 June, while in another that it should be the 27 June or 31 July. Those dates are nonsense. People should have months in which to lodge petitions. A few days seems absurd. I rather agree with the remark of my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South about half a loaf.

If the best that we can persuade the Goernment to accept is 27 June, I will go along with that date because I am in favour of an extension of time. The basic proposition that we should make in the debate is that people's rights should be protected. When we come to that proposition, precedent matters not at all. We need to be realistic and we need to try to meet the justice of individual cases. I hope that we will be as generous as possible about the time by which petitions must be lodged.

Mr. Gale: I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg) for his robust advocacy on behalf of the people of north-east Kent. My potato growers do not want the tunnel any more than his Lincolnshire potato growers want nuclear waste. I hope that it will be possible for Kent Members to return some of the compliment that he has paid to us tonight.

The people of north-east Kent will regard this long debate not as a filibuster, but as a genuine defence of their legitimate rights. Apart from a natural break which my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) is taking at the moment, he and my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkstone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) have been in the Chamber non-stop for 15 hours on behalf of the people of Kent.

My hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) confused the House sufficiently with quotations from "Erskine May" to demonstrate the great complexity of the issue. It is unreasonable to suppose that the ordinary person, who certainly wishes to make known his or her protest against the Bill, should have even the remotest grasp of these complex proceedings.

Mr. Cash: I hope that my hon. Friend will accept that the points I made were intended not to confuse but to illustrate the fact that confusion once confounded can become confoundedly difficult to unravel.

Mr. Gale: I take that point entirely. When I was a radio journalist we used to use a device called vox pop. We took a microphone into the street and asked people for instant impressions on a variety of subjects. Heaven knows that enough people in this place would come running to a microphone if one were offered. If one were to do that outside the Chamber and ask, say, 10 hon. Members who voted for the procedural motion on Tuesday or, indeed, for Second Reading yesterday, to stand in front of a microphone and describe in some detail the hybrid Bill procedure, if those hon. Members had not been in the Chamber for most of the night—as many hon. Members have not—one would probably get 10 different views on the hybrid Bill procedure. If hon. Members have a less than adequate grasp of the procedures that we are debating, how can the ordinary people of north-east Kent be expected to have a finer grasp?

On Tuesday night we heard from my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House that sufficient extra time would be given to those of our constituents who wished to present petitions. I raised earlier the point that as the motion carried on Tuesday and the one before the House now stand, there is technically one day on which petitions may be lodged. That in itself is quite unreasonable.

I am pleased to see my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in his place again. It is not only the petitioners who may wish to have further time. My right hon. Friend has been kind enough to say that he will reconsider, after the representations that have been made, the future of the Thanet Way. Given a little extra time, my right hon. Friend maybe able to make some suggestions to the House, in particular to me and to my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South, which will enable us to advise our petitioners during the 10 days for which we are asking. Although I have not consulted him, I think that I can fairly add the name of my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkstone and Hythe, who wishes to advise his constituents about the requisite procedures that they will need to follow in order to lodge their petitions and complaints against the Bill.

On behalf of the three Members of Parliament with north Kent constituencies and on behalf, I believe, of many other hon. Members, too, I express the hope that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport and my hon. Friend the Minister of State will look kindly upon the amendment that has been tabled by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan) and concede the 10 days for which we are asking.

Mr. Michael Brown: The House will see that I am a signatory to amendment (d) which provides for a slightly longer period than has been so reasonably requested by my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale). We are anxious to further the request of those of my hon. Friends who represent Kent constituencies.

During the debate the attendants were kind enough to unlock Committee Room 6 so that I could obtain the petitions that are being considered by the opposed private Bill Committee, of which I am a member. I have no intention of referring to the contents of the petitions. It is for the Committee to deliberate only when it has heard all the evidence on behalf of the promoters and the petitioners.

The Committee is considering a relatively small Bill, the London Docklands Railway (City Extension) Bill, but each petition that has been received is a very complicated document. As my hon. Friend the Member for Grantham, (Mr. Hogg) said, each petition has had to be prepared either by individuals or by solicitors and counsel representing individuals. A petition is a very complicated document. A private individual who is not versed in this procedure will need to take advice from a solicitor and to instruct counsel in order to prepare the petition.

I intend to read from a petition, leaving out any reference to its substance, in order to give the House some idea of the complicated wording with which a petitioner has to become familiar. It is the petition of the trustees of an organisation that could easily be a heritage organisation in Kent. The petition could read:

"A Bill is now pending in your honourable House entitled a Bill to empower the construction of the Channel Tunnel, to acquire lands, to confer powers upon"— whatever authority it might be—

"and for other purposes. Your petitioners are injurously affected by the Bill in the manner and object to it for the reasons hereinafter stated."

Then the average petition that any petitioner for any such Bill might introduce goes through each clause. You can see from the pages that I am turning over, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that it is a detailed document.

Although to hon. Members this is still 5 June, to the outside world it is Friday, 6 June. Tomorrow, in the outside world's eyes, is Saturday—not a working day, and the same is true on Sunday. That takes us to 9 June, so there are about six working days between the time of the rising of the House later today and the time when petitions must be deposited in time for consideration by the Select Committee. The petitioners are likely to be individuals or groups of individuals, including residents' associations. Such people are not experienced or well versed in the complicated procedures of hybrid Bills and the especially peculiar procedures that are being considered for this Bill.

Mr. Forth: I am fascinated by the direction of my hon. Friend's arguments. Does he believe that a standard time should be allowed for all such petitions, or that the time allowable should be proportional to the complexity of the case or to the number of people involved? The House would like to know whether he will head in one direction or the other so that we may bring our thoughts to bear on the matter.

Mr. Brown: My point, which is reflected in the amendment, is simply that every petitioner, be he ever so high or ever so low, should have the longest possible time that the House is prepared to give him to instruct solicitors or counsel to prepare the documents. The argument has been adduced by other hon. Members. We wish to ensure that any petitioner who may be injuriously affected if the Bill reaches the statute book in its present form should have the right to object and prepare his case with as long an interval as possible between Second Reading of the Bill and the cut-off date by which petitions must be deposited with parliamentary agents or with the Public Bill Office.

The House is being asked to consider a vital set of amendments. I strongly support the speeches that have been made this morning because I and my constituents have a great understanding of what it means to have something imposed on them which will adversely affect the value of their properties. My constituents are aggrieved by the way in which the machinery of government has interfered with their rights, and they are upset by the speed and undue haste with which a matter relating to my constituency has been pursued during the past few months.

From the letters and petitions that I have received on that issue, I can imagine only too well the many representations that will have been made to hon. Members representing Kent constituencies. It is reasonable to assume that every constituent of my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North who has written to him is a potential petitioner against the Bill. As my hon. Friend is saddled with the burden of having to write back saying that the main course of redress available is via the petition process, it will be necessary to come to terms with this complicated procedure. I do not think that eight days will provide adequate time in which to be able to formulate the petitions that will be required to be presented.

There is also a problem of bureaucracy in the Public Bill Office. If in the next eight days it were possible for every petitioner and group of petitioners to construct their petitions satisfactorily by 17 June and deposit them, correctly checked, in the Public Bill Office, heaven knows what kind of bureaucratic problems there would be in that office. The pile of papers that I am holding is a sample of all the petitions for a relatively small private Bill, which I am in the process of considering.

We heard figures mentioned earlier of several hundred petitioners—possibly thousands—that are likely to be deposited. I wonder whether the Public Bill Office has the resources to cope with the onslaught that is going to occur within the next few days. There will be a problem of bureaucracy that we shall have to face. I cannot believe that there has ever been an occassion in the past when the appropriate Public Bill Office organisation and staff have catered for the large number of petitions that are expected and are likely to be received.

Mr. Cash: Will my hon. Friend bear in mind that when the matter gets to the Select Committee, the question of having transcripts available will become a very important issue? Transcripts will be available for the Government and, indeed, for those parties that can afford them, because the costs of transcripts are borne by the parties concerned. If people do not gear themselves up to having those transcripts available, they will be in serious trouble as the proceedings go forward. Will my hon. Friend consider passing on a message that transcripts should be made available at reasonable, if not nil, cost to the parties concerned for the reason that I have already given, namely, that this is essential?

Mr. Brown: I hope that my hon. Friends on the Treasury Bench have heard what my hon. Friend has said. There is no doubt that every one of these petitions will be the subject of examination and cross-examination, and obviously transcript facilities may well be inadequate.

The fundamental point of this series of amendments is to make sure that the maximum possible time is available to those who wish to petition against something that is going to injure them. As a Member of Parliament whose constituents know what it is to have a decision taken that adversely affects them and the value of their properties, I can appreciate fully the way in which those constituents of my hon. Friend will want to use every avenue open to them. The only avenue that is effectively open to them is the right to petition, which must carry with it the right to have adequate time to prepare the petition.

[Mr. Brown]

I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will be able to give us some helpful words that might persuade us to withdraw the amendment.

6.59 am

Mr. David Mitchell: My hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) raised a question about the disappearing "Canterbury Times". While I can understand that at this hour he is not taking a great interest in its disappearance, I can tell him that the information was given in good faith. I shall look into the question that arises.

If it is of interest to hon. Members, our notes indicate that the Canterbury newspaper concerned was a member of the Kent Messenger group. However, I should like to make it clear that there is no question of our statutory duty not having been discharged. The parliamentary question referred to was one of a batch, all from the same hon. Member, about my department's leaflet. The newspapers listed in that reply were those in which the leaflet was advertised. I apologise if there was a misunderstanding as to the name of the newspaper. I shall send to my hon. Friend a list of the newspapers in which we advertised.

My hon. friend raised several matters all relating to the period from Second Reading, as did the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes). I believe that what is important is not the date of the Second Reading but when the advertisement is placed inviting people to petition. In this case that was done on 18 April.

Mr. Forth: Does my hon. Friend agree that if any considerable expenditure of resources were required by the individual in order to submit a properly presented petition, the individual might regard it as prudent to wait to see whether the House gave the Bill a Second Reading before proceeding to commit those resources? Does he agree that to expect a petitioner to embark on that exercise, which could be very costly, at the earlier date in advance of the Second Reading might be regarded as imprudent? Therefore, that would invalidate a large part of the argument that my hon. Friend is making.

Mr. Mitchell: I disagree with my hon. Friend because in the leaflet that we distributed we gave a simple illustration of how an ordinary individual could prepare a petition at no cost. That applies to the people who, in the view of my hon. Friend, might incur unnecessary expenditure. Groups of people have come together to brief legal advisers and the like; they are not private individuals but people with considerable resources at their disposal. In several cases substantial sums have been collected in the campaign against the Channel tunnel. Those groups have already done much of the work and are simply waiting for the right time at which to put in the documents. While I am not insensitive to the point that my hon. Friend has made, I do not think that it need cause us great concern.

Mr. Aitken: Before my hon. Friend dismisses the date of the Second Reading as being unimportant, may I suggest to him that an ordinary member of the public might have got confused—indeed, many hon. Members were confused—by the complicated nature of the dispute about whether the Bill had violated Standing Orders, what the Committee would say and so on? Therefore, it is reasonable to say in this instance at least, whatever precedents there may have been, in the light of all the mystery and suspense created by the ruling, or non-ruling as it turned out to be, of the Standing Orders Committee, that the starting gun really fired on or about the date of Second Reading.

Mr. Mitchell: If my hon. Friend takes that view, I can only point out to him that a private Bill has only 10 days from Second Reading to closing. We published the advertisement on 18 April.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) said that people may not have understood the procedure. I hope that I have been able to reassure him by the explanation that I have given about the leaflet that we produced. That too went out on 18 April at the same time as the advertisements were placed in national and local newspapers.

Mr. Stern: I take my hon. Friend's point that that procedure has been adopted in those areas most affected by the Bill. My point was that this is a national Bill and there are groups around the country that now realise that they are affected. I have not seen many copies of the leaflet in my constituency, although no doubt in Kent they are on virtually every doorstep. Nevertheless, I am not sure that the leafleting procedure is sufficient, given that my hon. Friend is effectively being asked to target on those groups without knowing who or where they are.

Mr. Mitchell: I understand my hon. Friend's point, but we have advertised in the national newspapers as well as in the local ones. By its very nature, those who are likely to petition against the Bill are those with a personal interest — in the non-normal sense of the word — and such people will be pretty rare in Bristol.

Mr. Bill Walker: In which Scottish newspapers were there advertisements? Since I last participated in the debate I have spoken to my wife, who has relatives in Kent who know nothing about the position.

Mr. Mitchell: There are Scottish regional newspapers, of course, but the national ones in which we advertised reach Scotland.

The House is grateful to my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks for the points that he made. The House will also recognise that, although it was the face of Richmond, the hand was that of Folkestone. Whatever face or hand it was, the Government have been persuaded by the argument. Therefore, I am happy to recommend that the House accepts my right hon. and learned Friend's amendment.

Mr. Speed: On behalf of my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) and myself, I thank my hon. Friend the Minister most warmly. The extra time that will be allowed will be welcomed by many of the small petitioners.

Mr. Mitchell: My hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) supported the case. I agree that petitions against alterations in the Bill are in order after the date, which would otherwise be a limiting factor. I bow to his legal knowledge in a number of the arguments he advanced, but I am sure that he would not take it amiss if I said that he was applying a degree of injurious affection to my head at this hour of the morning with some of the legality that he brought to the discussion.

My hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken), referred to a six-week period from Second Reading to closing date in the 1974 Crosland Bill. In fact, that Bill, reintroduced under the Wilson Government, had its Second Reading on 30 April, and the closing date was 7 May, just one week later.

The second paragraph of the motion incorporates a closing date for petitioners. That date was debated at length on Tuesday night. The closing date of 17 June proposed by the Government allows eight weeks and four days from the publication of newspaper notices on 18 April. The intervale for the Channel Tunnel Bill in 1973 was exactly eight weeks. The Government have done rather better with the current Bill.

As I have already said, I am happy to accept the amendment proposed by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan), supported by my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South. That will allow the extra 10 days for individual petitioners. The Government expect that there will be many individual petitioners, but we are confident that the House authorities can cope. Of course, the Committee of Selection will decide when the Select Committee will hold its first meeting. However, I am confident that there will be a number of group petitions from part authorities, competing ferry companies, local authorities and environmental groups which the Committee can focus upon as soon as it is formed before it needs to consider points from individual petitioners which are liable to be received a little later.

The Government recognise that my right hon. and learned Friend's amendment would not, technically, allow husband and wife teams to petition jointly before 17 June. I do not think that that is a material drawback to his amendment. It is difficult to see where else the line could have been drawn to give the man in the street a little longer to present his petition without giving the same time to major organisations which we have not been convinced need that time.

I am happy to accept the amendment of my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks. It will allow individual petitioners three weeks from today before they need to submit their petitions. I submit that there is no case for delaying the closing date for petitions beyond that time, and I recommend that the House accept amendments (e) and (f).

Amendment (c) proposed, leave out '17th June' and insert '31st July'.—[Mr. Simon Hughes.]

Main Question, as amended, put and agreed to.

Mr. David Mitchell: I beg to move,

That any Petitioner whose Petition stands referred to the Select Committee shall, subject to the Rules and Orders of the House and to the Prayer of his Petition, be entitled to be heard by himself, his Counsel or Agents upon his Petition provided that it is prepared and signed in conformity with the Rules and Orders of the House, and the Member in charge of the Bill shall be entitled to be heard by his Counsel or Agents in favour of the Bill against that Petition.

This paragraph is entirely standard form. It lays down that the standard rules for petitioners apply and it makes clear that they can be heard either by themselves or by their counsel or agents. I believe that this is very important. I made it clear on Second Reading that the Government would not oppose the locus standi of any reasonable petitioner.

I have nothing more to add to that. I suggest that the House is likely to wish to accept it at this point.

Question put and agreed to.

Mr. David Mitchell: I beg to move,

'That the Committee have power to sit notwithstanding any adjournment of the House, to adjourn from place to place within the United Kingdom, and to report from day to day the Minutes of the Evidence taken before it:'

Mr. Speaker: We shall consider at the same time amendment (g), after 'Kingdom', insert

'to send for persons, papers and records.'.

Mr. Mitchell: This paragraph is not standard form. It contains two very important provisions that the Government consider—and I am sure the House will agree—especially apposite to the Bill. My hon. Friend the Member for Tiverton (Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop) has said, with some justification, that the Bill is unique, at least in recent years.

The first provision would allow the Committee to sit when the House was in recess, if it so desired, at the beginning of the recess, before its end, or even in the middle. In 1974, the Select Committee sat for just under six weeks. I hope that this year it will be possible for the Committee to complete its work within a reasonable time. Should the proceedings threaten to run beyond the end of the summer, it will be open to the Committee to make use of the provision and to sit for as long as it desires.

The second provision in the paragraph has been sought over the past year by many hon. Members and groups. It will give the Committee the authority, which otherwise it would not have, to visit, sit and take evidence in Kent or anywhere in the United Kingdom, should it wish to do so. In the 1974 proceedings of the Select Committee, the Committee decided to visit the sites concerned. This provision goes a little further because it allows evidence to be taken in the areas most directly affected, if the Committee so wishes.

I am sure that the House will recognise the need for both provisions. In moving them, I am responding to a considerable number of hon. Members who requested the provisions and sought assurances on that line.

Mr. Marlow: I notice that amendment (g)—I hope that my hon. Friend will cover it in a moment—which is in the name of the Leader of the Opposition, would enable the Committee

"to send for persons, papers and records".

The great bulk of the amendments on the Order Paper, which have kept the House sitting all night, are in the name of the Leader of the Opposition, but I have not seen the right hon. Gentleman all night. As the Leader of the Opposition was responsible for keeping us up all night, I wonder whether, if the amendment allows for the Committee the Committee would be entitled to send for the Leader of the Opposition. If so, and if the Committee sent for him, I wonder whether he would attend.

"to send for persons, papers and records,"

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps it is an appropriate moment for me to say that with amendment (g) we are considering amendments (j) and (aa).

Mr. Mitchell: I have nothing more to add at this point. I should be happy to respond when hon. Members have made any points they wish to raise.

Mr. Michael Brown: The debate is important because, if the motion were passed in its unamended form, we fear that the Select Committee would sit, notwithstanding the fact that the House may have adjourned some time in July. Earlier we considered the tremendous burden that will fall on nine unfortunate hon. Members who are to be selected —now that we have disposed of previous amendments —to serve on the Select Committee.

Mr. Harris: Drafted or press-ganged.

Mr. Brown: My hon. Friend, from a sedentary position, says "Drafted or press-ganged." I think that is an unfair slur on the honourable record of the Committee of Selection chaired by my hon. Friend the Member for Shipley (Mr. Fox), who I think on the whole does a magnificent job in trying to ensure that hon. Members are chosen for their skills, abilities, independence, impartiality and interests to deal with any Bill, whether private or public.

Great concern was expressed about the burden—the sheer volume of work — that will fall on nine unfortunate hon. Members. It has been said that many hon. Members will be ruled out — for instance, my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken)— because they have some kind of constituency interest. That will apply to all hon. Members from Kent and any hon. Member who represents a port, as I do. I represent the port of Immingham. My county council is likely to petition against the Bill. Many hon. Members will be ruled out and this unfortunate duty will fall on nine out of a few hon. Members.

Mr. Forth: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Brown: I shall finish this point so that I can prove to you, Mr. Speaker, that I am absolutely within order. I have not been pulled up so far, during my short speeches, for being out of order. I intend to maintain that position until we conclude our debates.

The nine unfortunate Members will be heavily burdened with work from the day that they start. They, more than any other group of Members, will be looking forward to their summer recess, with some justification. The suggestion that they might have power to continue their sittings of the Committee, notwithstanding the fact that the House might have risen for the summer recess, is most unfortunate.

Mr. Forth: Will my hon. Friend add to the list of those who he feels are disqualified for membership of the Select Committee those who represent constituencies that are far inland and remote from the sea, a port or anywhere else that is involved? Will their distance from the project disqualify them on the ground that it reflects a lack of knowledge of the relevant issues as opposed to intimate connection?

Mr. Brown: If I were to respond to my hon. Friend's question, Mr. Speaker, I fear that you would rule me out of order. My hon. Friend has raised a subject that came within our consideration of amendments (a) and (b) and he should have addressed his request to me when I was contributing to the debate on those amendments. We are now concerned with whether it is right for the Select Committee to have power to be able to continue its sittings beyond the adjournment of the House.

I cannot believe that the nine members of the Committee will be volunteers. They will be selected— [HON. MEMBERS: "Press-ganged."] Perhaps that is unfair. They will be selected, probably against their will. However, they will undertake their duties—in the way that we all discharge the duties that are imposed upon us —with a spirit of good will, and they will have a right to adjourn for the summer recess in the same way as every other hon. Member.

Mr. Bill Walker: Will my hon. Friend bear in mind that any Members who are put on the Select Committee and who represent large rural constituencies normally use the summer recess to get round their constituencies. If they are unfortunate enough to be selected, they will require their summer recess more than anyone else.

Mr. Brown: That is true. Most hon. Members will probably have family responsibilities, and we shall all be in need of a holiday. If a Member has been considering petitions in the early days of the Committee's sittings, I shall be aware of the burden that he will incur because during the past three weeks I have been a member of the Committee that is considering a private Bill. I know how time-consuming it is for an hon. Member to serve on a Commmittee that is considering a private Bill, and those who are Members of the Select Committee will find that it is akin to a private Bill Committee.

Mr. Rowe rose——

Mr. Brown: I hope that my hon. Friend will forgive me for not giving way. I want to make my remarks fairly brief. We are pressed for time and many of my hon. Friends wish to catch your eye, Mr. Speaker.

The unfortunate Members who will have to discharge their duties on the Select Committee will find that there is a backlog of constituency work to catch up with. They will be tied up in a Select Committee from 10.30 am until 1 pm, and in the afternoon from 2.15 to 3.30, probably on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays. They will find it difficult to discharge their other parliamentary duties in between. By the time the Committee members have been sitting for three or four weeks, at the end of June and into July, they will be among the first to be entitled to look forward to an early summer recess.

7.45 am

Mr. Humfrey Malins (Croydon, North-West): I am glad to have the opportunity to make a short contribution. Throughout the night I have listened, on and off—mostly off—to the contributions made by my hon. Friends. I have been struck by the passion, strength and merits of the arguments forcefully expressed by my hon. Friends who represent Kent constituencies. I cannot remember an occasion when a local issue has been so well argued by hon. Friends who represent areas close to their hearts. I congratulate them most sincerely.

When I have sat in a Committee upstairs, I have sometimes thought how nice it would be if the Committees of the House had the power to adjourn from time to time to various places within the United Kingdom. The Committee on the Channel tunnel would gain much by visiting the south-east of the country. It would be able to listen to people's views on the spot, and get the local flavour. It would be much easier to form impressions by travelling to the areas involved. My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), who has been present for every debate on the Channel tunnel, agrees wholeheartedly with that idea.

Mr. Ashby: Although I appreciate the importance of the Select Committee visiting the site of the proposed Channel tunnel on the south coast, should it not travel across the Channel to the Pas de Calais? It would be able to gauge the feeling there. Perhaps the Pas de Calais is still considered to be part of the United Kingdom and that is the explanation.

Mr. Malins: It would benefit the Committee in many ways to travel over the water to France.

Mr. Forth: Duty free.

Mr. Malins: Yes, indeed.

If the Select Committee Members were to travel around Kent, they would have a better chance to gauge local opinions, but the Committee's travels should not be limited to Kent. When the Channel tunnel comes into operation, it will have an impact further afield. You, Mr. Speaker, have the honour to represent a Croydon seat, as I do, and with the motorway links it is possible to travel from Croydon to the Kent coast in about an hour. Business and other interests in the south London area may have some comments to make on the Channel tunnel.

It is important for the Committee to be able travel to around Britain, especially in Kent, to gauge public feeling. The people of Kent have fine advocates in the House.

Mr. Marlow: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, North-West (Mr. Malins) raised an important point. We all regret the passing of Queen Mary——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot gauge what Queen Mary has to do with me.

Mr. Marlow: A great deal, Mr. Speaker, because Calais is part of the United Kingdom's possessions, and I believe that nothing has been done to remove it from the suzerainty and control of this House. Can you rule, Mr Speaker, on whether, if the Committee wishes to go to Calais, it will have the same powers there as in the United Kingdom?

Mr. Speaker: If the Committee wants to go to Calais, that will be a matter for the Chairman, not for me.

7.49 am

Mr. Simon Hughes: If I may say so, that is more a matter for the Chairman than for Queen Mary.

My hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr Ross) has always believed that the Select Committee can do its job effectively only if it is given powers to sit in the areas directly affected. For that reason, I support this motion.

There may be an argument for the Committee to cross the Channel and look at the comparative effects on the other side, but it should not be an excuse for a jolly day out in the sun. When the Minister replies, I should be grateful if he would assure us that that will not be precluded by the wording of the motion, which relates only to the United Kingdom. Despite the ingenuity of the hon. Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow), I doubt whether our possession of the Pas de Calais is sufficiently well recognised for it to be included in the motion. If France is to be visited, it should be included in the motion.

The specific reasons and concerns that prompt the request and desire that the Committee should visit Kent have been tabled through instructions or referred to elsewhere. First, there will be effects on the property and amenities of people immediately affected and on the economy in terms of jobs gained and lost. Those matters can be assessed, petitioned against and inquired into most appropriately in the areas immediately affected.

Secondly, there are environmental aspects of considerable importance in areas of outstanding beauty in Kent, about which there is great concern. Thirdly, there are specific matters that have been brought to the Government's attention in letters to the Departments of the Environment and Transport. They include the impact of the terminal at Cheriton, the ever-increasing loss of amenity because of traffic on local roads, spoil disposal, the impact of the new stretch of the M20 and the impact of consequential developments on the countryside in Kent, particularly warehousing, tourism and retail developments.

I know that the Minister is sensitive to those matters. I understand that the Government intend to make an opening statement, presumably when the Select Committee meets at Westminster. It would be helpful if the Minister would consider a more flexible procedure which would allow the Government to be cross-examined towards the beginning of the inquiry about matters relating to the opening statement which are also specific to the places which the Select Committee may decide to visit, rather than not allow petitioners to inquire into those matters. I hope that all those considerations will be included in the spirit and wording of the motion to allow the Committee to move around.

It is clear from the past 12 hours of debate that the Committee's timetable and responsibilities will be wide-reaching. It may be onerous for the hon. Members serving on it, but I am sure that the petitioners will feel that the Committee will be more responsive to its needs if it is seen to go to the people at least as often as the people are asked to go to it.

Mr. Rowe: The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) has been misled on two points. First, there is no reason to suppose that if the Select Committee goes abroad—for example, to Calais—it will do so on a sunny day. Secondly, the major part of the M20 that is under construction has nothing to do with the tunnel. It is part of the roads programme as originally planned.

While we are rightly concerned for those who will comprise the Select Committee, at the end of the day those who matter most are the petitioners. It is essential that they have every opportunity to present their case, to have it heard and to have the counter arguments presented in a form and within a time which will allow them to comment on and argue against them, if that is appropriate. Other considerations are secondary to that.

In view of the amount of work that the Select Committee will have to do, the House must ensure that its Members have the proper staff back up to ensure that the grouping and sifting of petitions is done quickly. We are well served by the Clerk's Department, but this is a different scale of operation from any other Select Committee activity that we can envisage.

There will be a recurring need for the Government to put their case in response to petitioners. It will be helpful for the Government, as the proposers of the Bill, to make the opening case so that petitioners may know the arguments. After that, Ministers should be available to the Select Committee to respond on particular issues.

Mr. Simon Hughes: It would be helpful also if, once the Government have made the initial statement, an opportunity were provided for questions to be asked of members of the Government so that at an early stage factual matters are clarified, thus avoiding the need for petitioners and others to wait until a later stage for issues to be cleared up.

Mr. Rowe: It will be for the Committee and its Chairman to decide such matters, but what the hon. Gentleman suggests seems sensible. The Government have said time and again that the Select Committee procedure gives at least as good an opportunity to explore matters as does a planning inquiry. I am happy to go along with that, provided we ensure that the Select Committee is given power to travel and is given the resources to enable petitioners to explore all the ramifications of this major proposal.

7.59 am

Mr. Cash: Standing Order No. 136, which is referred to on page 1011 of "Erskine May," has a considerable bearing on amendment (g). Considering that the Opposition tabled that amendment, it is astonishing that Labour Members have simply copped out by not turning up for this debate. I understood that they tabled the amendment in protest, as it were, against what my hon. Friends and I have been doing.

There must be many members of, and others sympathetic to, the Labour party living in Kent. They will be appalled to learn that Opposition Members have copped out by not being present to move the amendment.

Standing Order 136 provides:

"By this order, first made in 1945, it is declared that a committee is not empowered, without express authority from the House, to hear evidence other than that which may be tendered by the parties entitled to be heard."

That would have been substituted by this amendment by enabling the Committee to send for persons, papers and records which would have significantly amplified the powers available to the Select Committee. I am in favour of the Bill.

Mr. Greg Knight: I am listening with interest to what my hon. Friend is saying. My instinct is to support amendment (g). Can my hon. Friend tell me what the position would be if the House were to pass amendment (g) and in due course, when the Committee sent for persons to appear, someone refused to appear? What sanctions will the Committee have? Amendment (g) is useless unless it has some teeth.

Mr. Cash: My hon. Friend raises an interesting point. The proceedings on a hybrid Bill are, in the main, the same as those for a private Bill and do not automatically attract the powers of a Select Committee. As I understand it, whereas a Select Committee would be able to require the attendance of a person, it may not be quite such a simple matter in relation to a private Bill. I defer to the judgment of those wiser than I am in these matters, because I might be wrong on that. By not including this provision, we are left, as would be the case with other private Bills, with the evidence that is presented exclusively by the parties in evidence. That is a point which ought to be made, though I notice that the Opposition are looking somewhat languid at this time of the morning.

I am not entirely clear about what was intended by amendment (j), which says:

"That in the proceedings before the Select Committee the obligations upon the Promoters of the Bill of presentation and proof shall conform to the procedures followed in Private Bills."

I have already said that that is what I would have expected and, as I understand it, that is the state of play. Amendment (aa) reads:

"That it be an Instruction to the Select Committee that it shall hear the evidence of Her Majesty's Government at the start of its proceedings in order to enable the Petitioners to respond thereto."

I have some experience of private Bills and I have seen leading counsel engaging in some tactical manoeuvres which, without going into all the boring detail, preclude the other side from calling evidence. Such tactics are available to strategists at the parliamentary Bar and people would be disturbed if such things happened on this occasion. I sincerely hope that they do not.

As I said in the Select Committee, proceedings are conducted, in the main, in the same manner as those in a Committee on a private Bill. In 1948-49 the Select Committee on Hybrid Bills made some suggestions for improving the situation. Page 592 of "Erskine May" reads:

"unless the House has given any instruction or indication to the contrary, the second reading is considered to remove from the promoters the onus of proving the expediency of the bill. The petitioner, therefore, opens to the committee, calling such evidence as he wishes. The promoters then answer the petitioner's case, and if they call evidence this entitles the petitioner to a right of reply. The procedure is, however, subject to the will of the committee and the requirements imposed by each bill."

It is worth pointing out that the instruction that is proposed in paragraph (aa)

"That it be an Instruction to the Select Committee that it shall hear the evidence of Her Majesty's Government at the start of its proceedings in order to enable the Petitioners to respond thereto" is somewhat different from the proposals that I have just described and that are provided for under the existing Standing Orders.

The behaviour of the Opposition in putting down an amendment to the motion and abusing the procedure by not turning up seems to me to be negligence in the extreme. I hope that Labour party supporters in Kent are aware of the fact that some extremely valuable stategic advantages could have been obtained but that the Opposition have just let the whole thing slip. It is not merely negligence; it is downright incompetence.

8.6 am

Mr. Kenneth Hind (Lancashire, West): It is a matter of great importance to the people of this country that the Bill should be referred to a Select Committee.

Looking in particular at amendment (bb), my recent experience as a member of the Select Committee on the Armed Forces Bill leads me to the view that it is very useful if a Select Committee is able to travel round the country. My hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) pointed out that there are 500 petitioners against the Bill in Kent alone. Therefore, it would be very useful if the Select Committee had the power to call for evidence and to hear witnesses. My hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) referred to the dangers of amendment (g), in that it would confer an open-ended power.

If this Select Committee were to be given the same powers as are enjoyed by the Select Committee on the Armed Forces Bill, which is appointed every five years, they would be found to be extremely useful. The Select Committee on the Armed Forces Bill went to the sites of military activity and found that very useful. In this case, the Select Committee would be able to visit compulsory purchase sites, or sites where transport infrastructure is to be provided for the Channel tunnel, talk to the people who will be affected and, if necessary, take evidence on site.

Wearing briefly my Member of Parliament for Lancashire, West hat, we should like the Committee to look in particular at the rail link between all the regions of the country—I refer particularly to Manchester and Liverpool—and the tunnel. We want to be able to send manufactured goods to Britain's most important market, the European Community, through the tunnel. Petitioners from the north-west region will no doubt ask the Select Committee to ensure that the infrastructure necessary to send containers by rail directly from the north-west through the tunnel is part of the structure plan.

We wish to make submissions to the Committee. We do not wish to be left out in the cold. Many of my constituents are worried about the fact that the major advantages of the tunnel will accrue mostly in the south-east. As it is nearer to the main markets, it will attract industry that will not go to the north-west. All that could be obviated if we had proper links and transport infrastructure connected to the tunnel, which would remove the advantages that the south-east would gain.

If the threat of fewer jobs in the port and ferry services of east Kent is realised, those changes in employment might result in the area seeking to become an assisted area and seeking Government grants. If it did, it would be competing with the north-west, where there is high unemployment and where assisted area status is important.

Mr. Greg Knight: I have listened to my hon. Friend's comments on amendment (g). I am still not entirely satisfied by his remarks or by the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash). Will he give the House an assurance about the sanctions that the Committee may have in respect of sending for persons? If amendment (g) is passed and the Committee seeks to call a person to appear before it and that person refuses to come, what sanctions will the Committee have? That is a crucial point. It is no good telling the Committee that it has the power to send for persons if those persons can refuse to attend the Committee has no sanction against them.

Mr. Hind: I do not go as far as amendment (g). My hon. Friend is advocating that the Committee should have powers similar to those exercised by Select Committees, which can, within parameters, require anyone to give evidence to them and require papers and records. It is unnecessary in this case to have that much power, because the Committee will not be inquiring into the activities of Departments. This Committee is weighing up the objections by petition and amendment from outside bodies and, therefore, needs the power to require people to give evidence to it, and indeed to require the Department of Transport to give evidence to it. To some extent I agree with the spirit of amendment (g), but it is almost impossible in the circumstances to support it.

The Eurotunnel amendments are important, but I support wholeheartedly the principles of the paragraph and I urge my hon. Friends to do the same.

8.13 am

Mr. Aitken: Even at this late hour, we are doing a useful job by discussing the amendments, and I especially wish to ask my hon. Friend the Minister of State three important questions that arise from them.

We all recognise that it is in the best interests of the House and the country for the Select Committee to do a thorough job of scrutinising the Bill. So far, that job has not been done. The Government have failed lamentably, in the rushed job, to study the Bill line by line, and I shall prove that to my hon. Friend by asking him three questions which he may find difficult to answer because he may not have thought of the three problems. They might be better answered if the Committee had the power to send for persons or papers.

This is not just a hybrid Bill; it is a hybrid project. It is a joint effort between taxpayers' money and private money. I am a little suspicious of the degree to which about £1 billion of public money will be needed to support the infrastructure, as demanded increasingly in speech after speech on Second Reading, to further the commercial interests of Eurotunnel. In this respect, therefore, I think that the taxpayers' interest must be pursued and, if necessary, pursued by the Committee sending for persons and papers when appropriate.

Let me highlight one area on which I touched in the debate on Second Reading. I have reason to believe that there is already a small whiff of scandal emanating from deals that have been done by Eurotunnel in particular with the railways, with Eurotunnel possibly using its monopoly power to get a better price out of the railways than otherwise might have been possible. I say that on the following grounds. Before Eurotunnel was announced as the winner of the competition, all the bidders had discussions with the railways. They all needed the railways to supply a service to them. Channel Expressway, for example, concluded a deal with the railways, SNCF and BR, to supply the rail service and British Rail and SNCF were to pay an annual subscription of between £56 million and £112 million a year. That was the Channel Expressway figure. A similar deal at very similar prices was done with Eurotunnel.

It would, therefore, be reasonable on a commercial judgment to expect that Eurotunnel's deal would be in the same price range. It is not in the same price range at all, we discover. I have evidence that suggests that the total price that the state railways, both financed by taxpayers' money, are now having to pay £140 million a year in annual subscription for the first year of operation, rising to £200 million. In other words, the railways are having to pay about £100 million more a year under Eurotunnel than they would have had to pay had Channel Expressway or Euroroute won the competition.

I suggest that the principal reason why the railways are having to pay much more is that Eurotunnel now finds itself in the monopoly bargaining position, and was able to extract from the railways a very high price through that monopoly power. The taxpayer is, in effect, giving an extra subsidy to the private business men of Eurotunnel. I think that the only way to reassure ourselves that this price is not excessive is by the Committee having the power to send for persons and papers and to ask them specific questions. When parliamentary questions are tabled on this subject, they are met with the customary wall—that this is a matter of commercial confidentiality. That answer really does not stand up as a serious and justifiable riposte.

Obviously the taxpayer has an interest if his railways are having to pay an annual subscription of £100 million or so a year more than the competitors would have expected from the railways. It is a large subsidy, and it is the taxpayer's money. We want to know on behalf of the taxpayer the precise details of all those contractual arrangements and the justification for them to make sure that an excessive charge is not being levied that will hit the taxpayer. This is a theme to which we will return again and again. If the Committee has the power to send for persons and papers, I suggest that that will facilitate it in its inquiry.

I give another example of how, if there is the power to send for persons and papers, in this case the ratepayer's money could be saved. In clause 12 of the Bill there is an indication, indeed a commitment, that the costs of policing the tunnel will be paid by the promoters. Kent police have done a great deal of work on what they think will be needed. Their estimate in broad terms is that a complete new subdivision of police should be located at the tunnel, to be given manpower at the normal rate for subdivisions of the Kent police—between 150 and 200 officers. That will be expensive because at 1985 prices a police officer costs £20,000 to £25,000 a year. According to the Bill, the cost of those police officers should be paid by the promoters. Whatever the Bill may say, it would be a sanguine man who would say that that price will be paid in full by the promoters.

I say that because there is a contradictory clause in the concession agreement to clause 12. I do not have the exact reference here, but in effect the clause in the concession agreement is a non-discrimination clause. The gist of it is that the promoters should not have to pay more than they would have to pay to cover policing at another Channel port, such as Dover. I hear that there is already argument as to the justified policing level in the view of the Kent police, on the one hand, and of the promoters, on the other, the promoters using the non-discrimination clause in the concession agreement.

This is a most important dispute. It could result in a heavy bill having to be paid by the ratepayers of Kent for the police officers for whom the promoters say they will not pay. The Committee may have to act as a referee. If so, it would be enormously helped by being able to send for persons and papers.

I ask my hon. Friend the Minister of State to give an indication of the Government's thinking. I shall be most relieved if he can give a clear and decisive assurance that the cost of the police appointed by the Kent constabulary to look after the tunnel and its surroundings will not fall on the ratepayers of Kent, in which case there would be no need to send for persons and papers.

There is another small point on the policing of the tunnel. There is the possibility of almost emotive controversy about policing because of the juxtaposition of powers in the Bill. The Bill indicates that at frontier controls and customs and immigration the British authorities have the right to be on the French side, and the French police have the right to be on the British side.

An interesting and emotive point arises. Will there be armed French gendarmes standing on British soil? Neither the Kent police nor the Kent people would like to see that. The French authorities, who are entitled to say this, insist on their gendarmes being armed. The very word "gendarme" means an armed policeman. If there is to be a French right to keep a gendarme on British soil, the Committee may need to send for the head of the gendarmerie in Paris and may need to see the instructions and authority given to police officers in France about the circumstances in which they may use arms. That dispute may seem to be far-fetched, but it is potentially an emotional issue in Kent. It would be more easily resolved if the Committee had the power to send for persons and papers.

I have given my hon. Friend three examples of rows and arguments which could occur. The Committee might be assisted in solving those problems if it had the power to send for persons and papers and did not have to make a judgement without them.

The amendment also covers certain arrangements about how and when the Committee should sit. I put down an amendment which was not called; its gist was to try to ensure that Members of Parliament, members of the Committee, petitioners, their witnesses and their learned counsel all got a decent break and that the Committee should not sit until 1 September.

That was not a silly point; it was a point of substance, for two reasons. First, the petitioners genuinely need time to prepare their petitions. Secondly, parliamentary counsel feel that the Bill—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope that the hon. Gentleman does not intend to speak to an amendment that has not been called.

Mr. Aitken. I shall take note of your guidance, Mr. Speaker, and conclude by saying that the Committee would be assisted by a decent break. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will agree that the Committee should take that point seriously.

8.25 am

Mr. John Watson (Skipton and Ripon): I shall be brief, because I wish to make a genuine contribution rether than one the main purpose of which is to pass the time.

A great deal of the debate has been concerned with the protection of minorities. I admire and defend the fortitude of my colleagues from Kent in their representation of the interests of the people of Kent, who they see as a minority. Understandably, my hon. Friends also feel that they are a minority in this House. However, there is another minority interest—those in Kent who are actually in favour of the tunnel.

Far be it from me to put myself forward as a champion of that view, but apart from being a Member of the House I am the chairman of a company in Kent that employs 168 people. I cannot speak for the employees, but I can speak for the management. We think that the tunnel is a good idea. It has been an unusual accident of history and geography that the economic centre of Britain over the past 20 years has not only come to the south-east of Britain, but to the western part of it. If there is a tunnel, there is a fair chance that much of the prosperity that has gone to my hon. Friend the Minister's constituency around Basingstoke might come to the part of Kent where my factory is located. I make my interests clear on that.

What worries me is that most of the elected representatives of Kent, whether Members of this Chamber, members of councils or members of chambers of commerce, share the opinion that the tunnel is a bad idea. Therefore, I fear that the minority opinion in Kent that is in favour of it might go unrepresented.

I find some relief in the setting up of the Committee if it has the power

"to send for persons, papers and records."

If the evidence presented to it does not represent anything from the minority interest in Kent, I hope that it will not only have the power, but the inclination to use it, and will send for such "persons, papers and records" as may be necessary to defend the interests of those in favour of the Bill.

8.28 am

Mr. Peter Bruinvels (Leicester, East): I shall be brief. I especially welcome paragraph 4 which outlines the delegated powers of the Committee. It can meet all over the United Kingdom. I am concerned that, by being given strong powers to interview, take evidence and look at the various ports, a substantial sum of money will be involved. I hope that my hon. Friend can give the House an estimate of the budget for the Committee to undertake that work.

There is no doubt that the Committee will sit outside the hours of sitting of this House, that witnesses will be called from many miles away and that much information will have to be collected. The sort of representation that some local industries may wish to put forward may result in substantial costs for witness fees, for counsel and for meetings in particular places, whether beside Canterbury cathedral, in the midlands or at one of the ports in Liverpool. If my hon. Friend the Minister can satisfy me on that point, I am sure that will reassure all hon. Members that it is worth while to establish such a Select Committee and that its role will result in a proper Channel Tunnel Bill being brought before the House for approval.

8.29 am

Mr. David Mitchell: It may be helpful if I suggest to the House how we might deal with the amendments before I respond to some of the points that have been made. The Government oppose amendment (g). The power is given to all House of Commons Departmental Select Committees — for example the Select Committee on Transport — to enable them to conduct inquiries on topics within their subject area. That power has never been given to Select Committees on hybrid Bills, because those Committees are charged only with hearing and deciding upon the cases made by petitioners. The function of this Committee is not to conduct a general investigation but to protect the rights of people affected by the project, which has now been approved in principle by the House on Second Reading.

"to send for persons, papers and records"

I would now like to consider some quite extraordinary misconceptions on the part of my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken). I am not sure whether my hon. Friend has his tongue in his cheek or whether he has really persuaded himslf of his own case. He alleged that the project is a joint effort of public and private money, and that £1 billion of taxpayers' money was involved. I am sorry to have to tell my hon. Friend that that is arrant nonsense. His make up of that colossal figure is partly the expenditure on roads, which would be undertaken anyway to meet the increasing proportion of people using the Kent roads to get to the ports and across to the continent. It is estimated that by the end of the century twice the present number of people will be travelling though the ports of Dover, Folkestone, Margate and Ramsgate. Would my hon. Friend expect there to be no expenditure on the infrastructure to enable those people to travel that way? Of course not. These projects are already programmed in the longer term projections of expenditure intended by the Department of Transport. My hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South is completely wrong to take such huge sums into account.

My hon. Friend then turned his attention to British Rail and said that the expenditure projected with British Rail is taxpayers' money. That, too, is arrant nonsense. The £400 million for British Rail expenditure is money that is fully commercial in its operation. British Rail submitted a project for investment in the necessary equipment to operate the Channel tunnel. I am happy to say that we have a 7 per cent. discount rate which is our requirement, and it is above that figure. Therefore, the return is satisfactory and does not involve taxpayers' contributions.

Mr. Aitken: In a competition for talking arrant nonsense at this hour of the morning, on this topic at least, my hon. Friend the Minister of State would win if that was an example of his work, without my being in the race at all. Who does my hon. Friend think he is fooling by these curious remarks? The truth is that money spent on roads and railways is ultimately funded by the taxpayer. It is public money. It is sheer verbal sophistry to pretend that that money is going to be spent anyway and that it is a complete coincidence that money is being spent on roads in Kent on this scale. It is a bagatelle to suggest that these roads are suddenly to be modernised but that that would have happened anyway. I wonder who in Kent will believe that?

Of course, all public expenditure at some time may be spent on roads in some direction or other. The truth is that these funds have at the very least been pin-pointed and accelerated. That would not have happened had it not been for the Channel tunnel. No one in the country, with the possible exception of a few in-house officials or Ministers, would believe the story that somehow public money is not involved on a big scale in the project. It clearly is. To suggest otherwise is, to use the Minister's own phrase, "arrant nonsense".

Mr. Mitchell: I do not want to involve myself in too much verbal fisticuffs with my hon. Friend at this hour, but British Rail money is not, as he alleges, coming from the taxpayer. I can tell him exactly where it is coming from. It is coming from the users. It is coming from the people who will pay very high fares to travel on those trains. That money will fully service the capital outlay with a margin over and above.

Mr. Aitken: Does my hon. Friend recall that only about a year ago the House voted £1 billion in extra grants to British Rail? The Minister is performing a conjuring trick in saying that he is not counting that as money which Parliament voted, which ultimately came from the taxpayer, but as money from tickets. British Rail's money is public money.

Mr. Mitchell: I am sorry to disabuse my hon. Friend, but the money to which he is referring was the public services obligation. That money is paid to British Rail for conducting loss-making services which it would not conduct if it were a commercial organisation. This is not a loss-making service. It is a fully commercial and profitable service and it is only on that basis that I have approved the outline capital expenditure that British Rail wishes to undertake.

Mr. Gow: I am trying to follow my hon. Friend. I should be grateful if he would assist some of my hon. Friends who heard him say a moment ago that the cost of the new railway lines and rolling stock will be paid for out of the very high fares that will be paid by passengers. Will not the new lines and new rolling stock have to be provided before those higher fares are paid? Could my hon. Friend, who is one of the disciples of Dr. Johannes Witteveen, explain to my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken), to me and to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels), who represents a constituency further north than the county of Kent, how we can obtain the fares before we have the railway lines and the rolling stock?

Mr. Mitchell: Yes, I can explain to my hon. Friend. I do not want to enter into a dialogue with him now on the subject of discounted cash flow, but as a former Treasury Minister he will be fully aware of that concept. The Treasury requirements in respect of having no element of subsidy and being fully commercial have been met. I am not sure whether they were met at the time that he was at the Treasury when he benignly nodded approval, just as he is benignly smiling at the moment, but he will be well familiar with the concept. I assure him that not only did it comply with that concept at the minimum level but it was above it. Therefore, he can be fully reassured on that score.

My hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South can blow as hard as he likes, but everybody in Kent knows that Kent has been clamouring for years for the gap in the M20 to be filled, and that is one of the major expenditures. My hon. Friend the Member for Ashford (Mr. Speed) has been campaigning for that. He knows perfectly well that that is in the Department's long-term programme. It will be completed within the time scale in which it would otherwise have been completed and it will fit into the traffic pattern that is required.

Mr. Gow rose——

Mr. Gale rose——

Mr. Speaker: To which hon. Member is the Minister giving way?

Mr. Mitchell: I give way to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne.

Mr. Gow: When my hon. Friend said that everyone in Kent had been clamouring for the new road, did he include in that company my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath)?

Mr. Mitchell: My hon. Friend is, as always, very shrewd in assessing any weakness in the argument of those whom in his legal career he has cross-examined in court on many occasions. I have to admit that I was referring to those people in the part of Kent which is affected by the existing road system and who are anxious to see the improvements.

Mr. Gale: There is absolutely no doubt that my hon. Friends the Members for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) and for Canterbury (Mr. Crouch) have been clamouring for the Thanet way for years and years. The one road in east Kent which really does matter is the road that is not getting any attention at all.

Mr. Mitchell: I will not debate that point with my hon. Friend now. I shall simple say that the traffic flows on the M20 are somewhat greater than those on the Thanet way.

My hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South also alleged that Eurotunnel has pressurised British Rail into giving a concessionary charge. He almost suggested that something improper had happened. British Rail has done a commercial deal. It is signed and sealed, at a profit for British Rail, and forms the basis for the investment submission. My hon. Friend can be reassured that there is no skulduggery such as he sought to suggest.

Amendments (j) and (aa) have a somewhat similar purpose to amendment (g), but there is no justification, as some hon. Members have proposed, why the rule applicable to private Bills, which the private promotors of the Bill make the case for before the Select committee, should apply to this public Bill. The scope of the Bill is much wider than the project to be undertaken by Eurotunnel because it includes British Rail works and the extension of the A20. Apart from that, the Channel tunnel project is a public project for the benefit of the country as a whole and it is Government policy, now endorsed by the House, that it should proceed.

Government counsel will, with the leave of the Committee, be opening proceedings in the Committee with a general scene-setting statement. It will then be for the Committee to decide how to proceed. The purpose of the opening statement will be to explain the project and the works, not to justify the Bill, which has, in principle, already been given a Second Reading and accepted by the House in an historic vote last night.

Mr. Simon Hughes: I deduce from the Minister's answer to my amendment that he does not preclude the possibility that, after the statement, to which all petitioners will look forward, there may be an opportunity, although it lies with the Committee to decide, for questions appropriate to that statement to be asked before the petitioners put their case to the Committee.

Mr. Mitchell: I would not want the hon. Gentleman in any way to belittle the importance either of the decision made on Second Reading to accept the principle that the tunnel should proceed or of petitions which will be concerned with the interests of people who will be directly affected. I think those sort of criteria will decide what is or is not appropiate for the Select Committee to consider.

Mr. Cash rose—

Mr. Mitchell: My hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) raised the question of staffing for the Committee. He is right to draw attention to the fact that there will be a work load involved. It is a matter for the House authorities, not for me.

Several hon. Members stressed the importance of the Committee getting out into Kent and other parts of the country. My experience with the Joint Consultative Committee, which has met in Kent, is that that is the most effective way to get to know what is going on.

My hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Rippon (Mr. Watson) referred to those who wish to petition in favour of the Bill and those who wish to make their support for the Bill known in Kent because of the jobs that will be created as a result of it. I think that it is worth recording that the Kent Export Association says:

"the Channel tunnel is a major way of stimulating Britain's export potential. It will bring about a major improvement of business potential in the County and give a much needed fillip to the industrial infrastructure of Kent."

There are quite a lot of people in Kent whose voices have not perhaps been heard at this stage, but there are still many people in Kent who are interested in the jobs that the tunnel can bring. Even those who are unemployed in areas of high unemployment, such as the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South, may look with slight jaundice at his opposition to the tunnel when they see the jobs that will be created in the ports over the next two years as the construction proceeds. I hope that he will feel suitably embarrassed when the time comes.

Question put and agreed to.

Mr. Mitchell: I beg to move,

That three be the Quorum of the Committee.

Mr. Speaker: With this, it will be convenient to debate Amendments (h) and (i).

Mr. Mitchell: This sentence merely lays down the quorum of the Committee as being three of its members. This closely follows the conventions. "Erskine May" says that a quorum is usually fixed at three where the Committee consists of 11 members or fewer. Hon. Members will recall from the early hours of this morning that it was decided that the membership of the Committee considering the Bill should be set at nine, which we consider to be the right size. We hope that more than three hon. Members will choose to attend the Committee's proceedings. However, we do not consider that there is a case for departing from the established proportions. I hope that the House will accept that.

Mr. Eric Forth (Mid-Worcestershire): I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Minister, who, throughout the long proceedings, has responded to the contributions of hon. Members with unfailing patience, humour and courtesy. I am delighted to be able to put that on record. We all appreciate the way in which he has handled this sometimes difficult and certainly lengthy debate.

We come now to the last paragraph of the motion concerning a not unimportant matter, the quorum of the Committee. At the outset I took refuge in the Oxford dictionary to establish what the word "quorum" meant, so as to establish a frame of reference. The definition is straightforward. It is:

"A fixed number of members of any body . . . whose presence is necessary for the proper or valid transaction of business."

When we come to the precedents available to us in the House, the matter becomes slightly more complex. We have before us several precedents covering a number of different types of Committee, which do slightly different work. For example, "Erskine May" says on page 674:

"The quorum of all standing committees except the Scottish Grand Committee is seventeen or one third of the number of its members, excluding the chairman, whichever is the less".

The quorum of a Select Committee is set out on page 692. It is "fixed by the House in reference to each particular case, and if no quorum has been fixed, the committee cannot transact business unless all the members are present."

The guidance goes on in some detail, most of which I was going to give to the House, but I shall not do so in view of the late hour. Suffice it to say that considerable flexibility is allowed for the quorum for Select Committees. We should pay attention to this, because my hon. Friend the Minister was right to look to precedents for the Committee. I wanted to use this example to illustrate that it is by no means a foregone conclusion that the quorum of a Committee should necessarily be set at three. The matter becomes yet more important if we move on to consider the provisions for the Committee on Unopposed Bills, for example, where the quorum of the Committee is set at three.

On the other hand, if we consider the hybrid Bill procedure, we get into much more interesting territory. There is provision in some Committees, and some cases before the House have given rise to difficulty, where proceedings cannot be allowed to go on when more than one member is absent. That points us in a completely different direction and leads us to question whether a quorum of three, as provided for in the motion, will be sufficient for a Bill of the complexity that we have come to realise in the past few hours.

We are dealing with matters that are quasi-legislative or quasi-judicial. They are controversial matters. We are certainly dealing with a Bill where much evidence and material will be put before the Commiteee. I wish to put the first part of my argument about the adequacy of a quorum of three upon that basis.

Mr. Lawrence: Perhaps my hon. Friend could help us with one of the problems which are likely to arise and which we have canvassed during the night. It will be difficult for the nine members of the Committee, as we have now agreed, to acquaint themselves with details of the various petitions and to travel around the country, and possibly to France. There will be real difficulty in getting a quorum of three who will be those best briefed on the particular matters. I would be grateful if my hon. Friend would apply his mind to that problem, as it is bothering all of us.

Mr. Forth: I am grateful to my hon. and learned Friend. With his typical incisiveness, he has pre-empted a matter with which I wanted to deal. Suffice it to say that this is part of the problem of the quorum of three. I hope that the Minister has an open mind on the matter. Perhaps he would give thought to the extent to which a quorum of three would be able to cover the complexity and breadth and depth of the matters, especially where the Committee may intinerant, with changes in the members available from which to form a quorum. At that time the matter becomes even more crucial and important.

Mr. David Ashby (Leicestershire, North-West): My hon. Friend will know that I had hoped to speak but have not done so because of the lateness of the hour. I am grateful to him for giving way.

My great interest is in the civil liberties aspect of the measure. Has my hon. Friend considered the fact that the quorum is so low that it will create an injustice, as so many petitioners wish to give evidence? The same people will not be hearing the evidence. They will only read it and will not be able to see the people concerned. They will not visit the places that will be affected. The quorum is too low. That affects civil liberties and it will cause injustice.

Mr. Forth: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. The point that we have reached in these proceedings illustrates the fact that the matter requires all the time that can be given to it.

I am indebted to my hon. Friends and to you, Mr. Speaker. I shall not prolong my remarks, although I regret that, because the matter that we are debating is of equal importance with the others.

I shall be interested to hear the Minister's view, as will my hon. Friends who have intervened, on whether a quorum as low as three will be sufficient to carry and sustain the breadth and depth of material that the Select Committee will be required to consider. Will he consider the point that the Committee will meet in different places and that there will therefore be great pressure on the Committee members? Many hon. Members have emphasised that Committee members will have considerable other commitments. They will already be under stress and strain and may have to sacrifice some of the recess.

In view of those factors, as well as the fact that they will have to deal with technical matters and legal complexities, and also matters environmental, all of which will be controversial, it is vital that the quorum of the Committee is set at a level sufficiently high to reflect and deal with their complexity. My plea to my hon. Friend is that he considers the amendment in my name and in the names of other hon. Members to raise the number of the quorum, because five members would be in a better position to handle the matter and to discharge the work of the Committee effectively, rather than place an inordinate strain on what may be only three members forming a quorum of the Committee at any one time. I hope that my hon. Friend will be able to give some words of encouragement to us and to move some little way in helping us in that respect.

8.56 am

Mr. Simon Hughes: I endorse the request made to the Minister of State by the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth). It is clear that there is a great keenness that people with special competence in technical and other areas are represented on the Committee. It is also clear that the Committee will have a large amount of work to do. I think that in the interests of justice and fairness, which is the theme of tonight's efforts to get the procedure as acceptable as possible, it is desirable that the quorum for such a unique, exceptional, wide-ranging and far-reaching Bill, in terms of its local and national impact, should be higher rather than lower. The figure of five would seem to be an acceptable compromise.

The Minister will be aware that people who do not turn up before Select Committees are summoned to do so, and are reported to the House. Select Committees are not committees at which people do not normally attend. We could protect the interests of the Committee, the reputation of the House and the concerns of the petitioners by upping the quorum level to five, if not to six. I ask the Minister to be responsive and positive to the amendment tabled in the names of the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire and others.

8.57 am

Mr. David Mitchell: I am sorry to disappoint my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth), but I must say to him that the quorum of three members proposed by the Government follows the convention established by "Erskine May". I quote from page 692:

"The quorum of a select committee is fixed by the House in reference to each particular case, and if no quorum has been fixed, the committee cannot transact business unless all the members are present

The quorum is usually fixed at three when the committee consists of eleven members or less"

In this case, the number of members is as low as nine. It is well inside the figure of 11. Three is the normal quorum for a hybrid Bill. Naturally, the Government hope that more than three Members will be present on what undoubtedly will be an important, interesting and historic Committee.

However, in view of the problems experienced earlier in the Session regarding the Felixstowe Dock and Railway Bill, the Government consider that it would be undesirable to establish a quorum larger than the norm. The risk is that having an over-large quorum could stultify the work of the Committee, because it might enable those on the Committee who were not in favour of the tunnel to bring its work to a halt by not attending the Committee. I hope that my hon. Friend will accept that the pattern we are suggesting is the right one.

The Government are firmly opposed to amendments (h) and (i).

Question put and agreed to.

Ordered,

That the Bill be committed to a Select Committee of nine Members to be nominated by the Committee of Selection.

Ordered,

That there shall stand referred to the Select Committee—

(a) any Petition against the Bill presented by being deposited in the Private Bill Office at any time not later than 17th June, or, in a case where the Petitioner is a single individual, at any time not later than 27th June, and

(b) any Petition which has been presented by being deposited in the Private Bill Office and in which the

[Mr. David Mitchell]

Petitioners complain of any amendment as proposed in any Petition against the Bill or in the filled-up Bill or of any matter which has arisen during the progress of the Bill before the said Committee, being a Petition in which the Petitioners pray to be heard by themselves, their Counsel or Agents:

That, notwithstanding the practice of the House that appearances on Petitions against an opposed Private Bill be required to be entered at the first meeting of the Committee on the Bill, in the case of any such Petitions as are mentioned in sub-paragraph (a) above which are not presented before the first meeting of the Committee, the Committee shall appoint a day after 27th June on which it will require appearances on those Petitions to be entered.

Ordered,-

That any Petitioner whose Petition stands referred to the Select Committee shall, subject to the Rules and Orders of the House and to the Prayer of his Petition, be entitled to be heard by himself, his Counsel or Agents upon his Petition provided that it is prepared and signed in conformity with the Rules and Orders of the House, and the Members in charge of the Bill shall be entitled to be heard by his Counsel or Agents in favour of the Bill against that Petition.

Ordered,

That the Committee have power to sit notwithstanding any adjournment of the House, to adjourn from place to place within the United Kingdom, and to report from day to day the Minutes of the Evidence taken before it.

Ordered,

That three be the Quorum of the Committee.

Channel Tunnel [Money]

Queen's Recommendation having been signified—

Motion made, and Question proposed,

That, for the purposes of any Act resulting from the Channel Tunnel Bill, it is expedient to authorise—

(1) the payment out of money provided by Parliament of any sums required to meet expenditure incurred by the Secretary of State—

(a) in making payments for land vested in or acquired by him under that Act;

(b) for the purpose of or in connection with the discharge by the Intergovernmental Commission or the Safety Authority of their functions under the Treaty;

(c) by virtue of provisions of that Act authorising the Secretary of State, in certain circumstances, to maintain the tunnel system if construction stops before it is completed, or (as the case may be) to manage, operate and maintain the tunnel system or such part of it as it is practicable to operate up to the end of the period of three months beginning with the date of the expiry or termination of the Concession;

(d) in making payments for the purpose of restoring any land in pursuance of that Act;

(e) for the purpose of or in connection with the construction of the A20 improvement works;

(f) in making any payments of compensation that fall under any provision of that Act to be made by him; and

(g) in meeting any obligations or exercising any rights to which he is or from time to time becomes subject or entitled in pursuance of the Treaty or the Concession, being obligations or rights arising in connection with the tunnel system;

(2) the payment out of money provided by Parliament of any increase attributable to that Act—

(a) in the sums payable out of money so provided under any other enactment; and

(b) in the administrative expenses of any government department;

(3) The payment of any sums into the Consolidated Fund; and in this Resolution expressions to which a meaning is given for the purposes of any Act resulting from the Channel Tunnel Bill have the same meaning as in that Act. — [Mr. Peter Lloyd.]

9 am

Mr. Michael Brown (Brigg and Cleethorpes): I am sorry to detain the House and I shall try not to be too long, especially in view of the horoscope which appears in today's Daily Mail for my birthday sign, which I shall read briefly without, I hope, incurring your wrath, Mr. Speaker. It states:

"It is difficult to know where to place your energy today. If you meet unexpected hazards then prepare for delays. Do not try to have an early night."

I shall try to follow precisely the last part of that advice.

There is one slightly worrying aspect of the money resolution to which I should like to draw the attention of my hon. Friend the Minister of State. Subsection (1)(c) states;

"by virtue of provisions of that Act authorising the Secretary of State, in certain circumstances, to maintain the tunnel system if construction stops before it is completed, or (as the case may be) to manage, operate and maintain the tunnel system or such part of it as is practicable to operate up to the end of the period of three months beginning with the date of the expiry or termination of the Concession;"

My worry, bearing in mind the assurances that we have received on many occasions from my right hon. and hon. Friends to the effect that the tunnel is to be constructed out of private funds — something which is much to be welcomed — lies with paragraph (c), where it is suggested that, in the event of the private companies being unable to complete the tunnel, the Government would be given powers under the money resolution to pick up the tab. It has been stressed to us throughout the debate, both inside and outside the House, that the financing of the Channel tunnel will come from private funds.

Those who want to see the Bill enacted, which the Government do, and the tunnel constructed and brought to fruition want to ensure that the companies have sufficient resources to enable them to complete the project without having recourse to public funds. There is an intimation in paragraph (c), however, that the companies may not have the financial resources to do that and may find themselves faced with the prospect of having to stop constructing the tunnel if they are unable to raise sufficient funds over the construction period. In those circumstances, public moneys would have to be directed to the project. I hope that my hon. Friend will take up these issues when he replies.

Mr. Greg Knight (Derby, North): One way round the problem would be for the companies concerned to be obliged to enter into an insurance bond so that if any difficulties arose, moneys—not public moneys—would be available to maintain the tunnel.

Mr. Brown: I feel sure that the companies will try to do precisely that. I should like to know whether the Government have considered the possibility that, notwithstanding any insurance bonds that the companies might take out, there could be the possibility under paragraph (c) of a failuere and the Government having the power to pick up the tab.

The Secretary of State for Transport (Mr. John Moore): I hesitate to intervene, but in so far as my hon. Friend is addressing himself to the money resolution and my hon. Friend the Minister of State is about to respond, he might care to agree with me—I am sure that most hon. Members will — that we have had most extraordinary and outstanding contributions of exceptional courtesy from my hon. Friend the Minister of State throughout this long series of debates and a display of great stamina.

Mr. Brown: I agree with that absolutely. My hon. Friend the Minister of State has responded fairly and with great patience to all of our legitimate concerns. Whatever view we may take on these issues, we are all most grateful to him. This has been an important series of debates, and we end on an important debate. I am delighted to associate myself with the comments of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. I should be grateful if my hon. Friend the Minister would direct his thoughts to the points that I have raised.

Mr. Kenneth Hind (Lancashire, West): With regard to the financing of the Channel tunnel project, it is important to emphasise that it will be built with private money and with no contributions from the state. Our deliberations on the money resolution are limited to the essentials of any Government Department overseeing this type of scheme, the purchase of land and the financing of the safety authority. My hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) mentioned financing the tunnel to ensure that it is managed, operated and maintained for a period should construction come to a halt.

My hon. Friend also raised the possibility of some form of bond. If because of heavy costs or unforeseen engineering difficulties the whole of the burden of the programme was thrust upon the taxpayer, the one thing which the invitation of funding from the private sector sought to avoid would occur. I am sure that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the Minister of State are considering that matter and will ensure that the public interest is properly protected.

On behalf of my colleagues, I echo the Secretary of State's comments and I thank the Minister for his unfailing courtesy in his dealings with us throughout the night.

9.7 am

Mr. Mitchell: I can well understand that my hon. Friends are in a state of perplexity about the money resolution, because, after all, we had spent many long hours here saying that there would be no public expenditure involved in the construction of the tunnel. It is understandable if hon. Members wonder why the money resolution is required.

The principal reason for the resolution is that we have included in the project the building of the extension of the M20/A20 from Folkestone halfway to Dover. My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Rees), who has participated so much in our debates on the matter, is familiar with the importance of the road. It is the bypass for Capel-le-Ferne and is of crucial importance in view of the amount of traffic which is likely to be generated during construction. Apart from that, as I have mentioned to my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) on many occasions, ferry traffic will continue to increase between now and 1993 when the tunnel opens. For that reason, it is important that the extensions be carried out to enable traffic to get to Dover using the M20 and to Folkestone and its ferry services.

Mr. Hind: Will my hon. Friend consider the question of safeguarding the public interest should the Eurotunnel consortium find itslf in financial difficulties or should the public be faced with an enormous bill for completing and maintaining the tunnel? Will he consider ways of safeguarding the public interest, perhaps through a bond or insurance policy? What does he have in mind?

Mr. Mitchell: I will help my hon. Friend, who has asked about two precise circumstances: what happens if the company fails before construction is complete, or after it is complete. If the project fails during construction—clause 25 deals with this—the Government will be able to maintain the works. That is not as extraordinary as it sounds because that is exactly what we have done with the old 1973 workings.

Mr. Bill Walker: Will my hon. Friend advise the House whether, if the company developing the tunnel is unable to complete the work and the Government must intervene with public money, the Government are in effect nationalising and taking over the tunnel?

Mr. Mitchell: I can reassure my hon. Friend on that score, and it is perfectly understandable that he should take that view. If the project fails and the lenders do not find another concessionaire to complete, it will be mothballed. The equity interest put in by the participating shareholders will be lost. In that case, a receiver would undoubtedly be appointed on behalf of the lenders, and he would seek to find an alternative concessionaire to complete the tunnel.

[Mr. Mitchell]

The premise on which the Government have supported the project is that we are satisfied that the financial requirements laid on the concessionaire will ensure that completion can take place without any risk that it cannot.

The event of the project failing after it is complete is covered by clause 26. The Government will be able to operate it for three months, the concessionaires will not benefit from that, and the Government will take the revenues from road and rail traffic. Moreover—this is important to the point about nationalisation—this power is conditional on clause 27, in that it can be used only if the Secretary of State is satisfied that there is a reasonable prospect of a new concession being negotiated in the near future. If he is not so satisfied, there will be no attempt to continue the operation.

Mr. Albert McQuarrie (Banff and Buchan): It cannot be overstressed that the Government have investigated the financial provisions for the tunnel so thoroughly that there is almost no possibility that the venture will fail. Therefore, any comments on the possibility of failure are purely hypothetical and extremely unlikely.

Mr. Mitchell: My hon. Friend is putting into my mouth somewhat more than I said. It is for the promoters to satisfy the investors that the project is viable and that the investors should put their money into it. The investors include Japanese and other foreign sources, pension funds, City institutions and the like. The Government do not give an imprimatur which gives a Government guarantee, Government audit, or Government certification that the project is viable.

It is for the promoters to persuade the investors, just as any promoter in any other private project would have to persuade investors before the money could be raised for the project to go ahead. We would not have reached this point if we thought that the promoters were unable to persuade the investors of that. The promoters still have to do that and the matter should not be taken for granted.

Mr. David Harris (St. Ives): My hon. Friend has allayed our fears about nationalisation on this side of the Channel, but has he considered the possibility, remote as it might be, that, in the event of failure after completion, the French Government will step in and nationalise the whole enterprise from their end? Has it crossed the mind of my hon. Friend what his reaction would be in that hypothetical situation?

Mr. Mitchell: The company structure and the agreements between us and the French could not allow that situation to arise. The administrative costs of the two Governments would be covered by a single annual payment of 3 million ECUs—about £2 million—shared equally between the United Kingdom and France. In practice, the cost of the inter-Government commission and the safety authority would be variable from year to year. If the project fails and the sites have to be restored, the cost will fall on the Government, but the Government will have a claim on the material of the tunnel system to set against that cost. I hope that that reassures my hon. Friends.

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): Does my hon. Friend agree that this important debate has been conducted on a serious note and that the Opposition have not been here? The press should note that we have been debating this seriously throughout the night and the Opposition have been asleep the whole time.

Mr. Mitchell: Before the debate started last night, there was some talk of a waffle debate to take up time. What has become increasingly apparent throughout the debate is the serious way in which the House has addressed itself to the important and detailed matters of the Channel tunnel project and the arrangements for the Select Committee. The House will feel that, with the passing of the money resolution, which I now recommend to hon. Members, a good night's work has been done for the benefit of the country as a whole.

Question put and agreed to.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

Ordered,

That Mr. Secretary Moore be discharged from the Committee of Public Accounts and Mr. Norman Lamont be added to the Committee.—[Mr. Cope.]

Shipbuilding and Shiprepairing Industries (Southampton)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Durant.]

9.17 am

Mr. Christopher Chope (Southampton, Itchen): I am grateful for the opportunity to raise the problems of the shipbuilding and shiprepair industries in Southampton. These industries currently provide employment for several thousand people, although sadly several thousand jobs have been lost over recent years. They play a vital role in the community. Those who work in these industries in Southampton have served the nation well. I do not wish to set out a long list of achievements, but it is worth remembering how, only about four years ago, all the stops were pulled out by people working in the shiprepair industry in Southampton to prepare the task force for the Falklands.

The successful privatisation last year of Vosper Shiprepairers and Vosper Thornycroft has ensured that the dark days of nationalisation are now in the past. In those days, as fast as Vosper Thornycroft made profits on its warship building, much of it from exports, those profits were creamed off and used to prop up surplus merchant shipbuilding capacity in loss-making yards. Employees in Southampton felt frustrated as their pay was held down by national negotiations. They were victims of drift as British Shipbuilders delayed its difficult decisions and jeopardised the profitable parts of its industry. I despair that the Labour party still believes that the profitable warship yards should be used to sustain the loss-making merchant yards. However, that is what the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) said in as recent a debate as that which was held on 21 May last.

The problems of Vosper Thornycroft (UK) Ltd. are the ones to which I should particularly like to refer. I am very pleased that my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) is here, because the main works are in his constituency, although it is fair to say that the majority of its employees are my constituents. Since privatisation in November 1985 Vosper Thornycroft has been employing about 1,700 people in Southampton. It is unique among British warship building yards, in that it supports a strong export effort and has consistently obtained about half of its work load from exports. Its exports in the last five years total about £240 million, and its current export work is valued at £90 million. It includes fast strike craft for Kenya and Oman, refits for Indonesia, simulators for Spain and worldwide orders for stabilisers.

Over recent years, however, Vosper Thornycroft's greatest success has been in its development and production of glass reinforced plastic mine counter-measure vessels. About three quarters of the Southampton work force are directly or indirectly engaged on these projects. It has been the lead yard for the Hunter class and has received orders for 11 of the 13 vessels in that class, the last one of which is nearing completion. The productivity achieved has been dramatic. The most recent vessel was built with 55 per cent. of the man hours that the first one required.

In 1982, Vosper Thornycroft was selected to undertake the detailed design of the new GRP single role minehunter, the first of which is now being built. The single role minehunter basic design contract report in 1983 concluded that orders for the next four in the class would be placed in the spring of 1987, to be built sequentially at six month intervals, with two ships per year thereafter. This programme has remained unaltered since then, the expectation being that on the launch of the last of the Hunter class, work on the second of the single role minehunters would start, but rumours are now circulating, which have not been denied, that the Ministry of Defence is thinking of putting back the single role minehunter programme. If that were to happen, it would be catastrophic.

May I spell out to my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State the reasons why that would be shortsighted and pound foolish. I ask him to have particular regard to the relatively small savings that could accrue to the Ministry of Defence and to what would be jeopardised by the deferment. A one-year deferment would save the Government £7 million in the first year and £16 million in the second, but it would result in at least 650 additional redundancies and the break-up of experienced, specialist teams of men. Quite apart from the loss of productive efficiency, the Ministry of Defence would incur additional costs over the protracted period of about £9 million. Equally crucial and relevant is the fact that the single role minehunter has outstanding export potential. I welcome the strong emphasis on export potential as a key part of procurement policy that is contained in the latest defence White Paper. The Belgian navy and the Spanish navy are already interested in the single role minehunter, and there is no doubt that many other countries are also interested in it.

The United Kingdom must not throw away its pre-eminent position. It would be a false economy of the highest order were the single role minehunter programme to be allowed to slip. It is not possible, in my view, to exaggerate the dire consequences for Vosper Thornycroft and its employees were that to happen.

I have taken up a lot of time on the issue of the single role minehunter, because I am far from certain that the Government appreciate how crucial it is. I am sure that my hon. Friend will expect me to refer also to the negotiations over the frigates for Pakistan. I hope that he will be able to emphasise in his reply all the work that the Government have done and are doing to try to secure this contract, which would safeguard existing jobs and generate up to 1,000 more jobs in Southampton. The negotiations with Pakistan seem to have been continuing for years. Indeed, the letter of intent was signed in September 1984.

There is now a strong feeling in Southampton that we would have won a Ministry of Defence frigate order but for the prospects in Pakistan. We do not ask for special favours, merely for fair and open competitive tendering for Ministry of Defence orders. If there is a prospect of losing, or not winning, the Pakistan order because of changes of mind by the Pakistan Government, I urge upon the Government the need to ensure that a frigate-building programme can be maintained in the south of England.

The issue of whether tenders are fairly assessed is crucial. In the United States, unsuccessful tenderers are invited to what is effectively a debriefing to be told the terms of the successful bid and why their bids were not successful. In that way, justice can be seen to be done. Many people in Southampton do not believe that justice was seen to be done when the previous frigate orders were placed, and I should be grateful if my hon. Friend could assure me that the lowest bidder for the next frigate orders will win the contract.

Similar principles apply to shiprepair in Southampton, which is dominated by two firms—Thew Engineering and the newly privatised Vosper Shiprepairers. I expect that both firms will be bidding for the refit of the Royal Yacht Britannia, and I seek an assurance that price and quality will be the sole criteria used for the award of that contract.

During the past few months there has been a sad development in Southampton with the demise of Vosper Hovermarine, which has been in the hands of a receiver and is still the subject of an attempted rescue package, perhaps involving an American company. But that company, which only three years ago employed 500 people, now employs only 20. It operates in the forefront of technology with its surface effect ships. It was almost wholly oriented towards exports and won the Queen's award for export achievement in 1984. It has not received much assistance from the Government. I merely mention that to draw attention to the contrast with the way in which Government money has been forthcoming for other activities in the shipbuilding world.

Sotonians are not given to hyperbole or exaggeration. They are easy-going and even-tempered and make loyal and efficient employees. That is why so many of them have been attracted to work in Wapping. All they ask is that they be treated fairly. Above all, they must not be forgotten. At a time when shipbuilding problems in the north have been the focus of attention, I hope that raising these vital issues concerning Southampton will give the Government a bit of balance in their approach to the issues and help them to realise that Southampton has also suffered from the problems of shiprepair and shipbuilding. It must not be forgotten. I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh wishes to speak, so although it is only 9.28am, I shall sit down.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Am I right in thiking that if this debate continues after 9.30 am, all the business set down for Friday, including the debate on the motion of my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), will not take place? An odd 18 minutes or so may prevent Friday's business, which is of interest to House and the public, from being debated.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is only a small point, but the first debate on referring the Channel Tunnel Bill to a Select Committee began just after 10 pm and continued until about 4.30 am. That is a long time to discuss whether there should be nine or 11 hon. Members on the Select Committee. For the first time, as far as I can recall, a Government Whip did not move the closure on a Government measure. If a Government Whip had been prepared to move the closure, it would undoubtedly have been accepted by the Chair. That means that the filibuster — to use a loose term — or the long debate was organised not just by Tory Back Benchers but by the Government.

Several Hon. Members rose—

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Franks.

Mr. Cecil Franks (Barrow and Furness): Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. Like the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), I, too, have an interest in the business projected for Friday. But, unlike the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), I was present during those four or five hours of debate to which he referred, and I accept the sincerity of those Kent Members who argued their case. I hope that the hon. Member for Linlithgow will also accept that that was so.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett (Denton and Reddish): Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. My hon. Friend the Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) raised the original point of order over the loss of Friday's business. I think you will recall that on your appointment to the Chair, you made it clear that you felt you had a responsibility to look after the rights of Back Benchers. As Friday's business was won on the private Members' motions Ballot, will you be considering what steps to take to ensure that time is found for Back Benchers to exercise the rights conferred on them by the House? Whether those rights were denied them by deliberate Government manoeuvre or merely by Conservative Back-Bench manoeuvre, there would seem to be considerable duty on the House to find another occasion for my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) to move his motion.

Mr. Speaker: I confirm to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) that at 9.31 we are still discussing Thursday's business, and therefore Friday's business cannot proceed.

It is perfectly true, as I have made plain, that an hon. Member who has won a place in the ballot has a right to move his motion, provided that it is in order. In this case it was in order, and the hon. Member concerned would have had every right to move it. The House will recognise that throughout these proceedings it has been the concern of the Chair to ensure that speeches are in order. Although some of the debates may have been rather long, they were in order, and I have no jurisdiction to go beyond that.

Mr. Bennett: Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. I accept that there can be no criticism of the debates that took place. But if a manoeuvre results in the small number of days that are set aside for private Benchers' motions being reduced, there would seem to be some duty on the Chair at least to try to influence events so that an alternative date may be found for the debate on those motions.

Mr. Speaker: But I do not have that authority. The House itself decides how many days should be set aside for Back-Bench motions and Back-Bench time generally. It is not a matter for the Chair.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Bennett.

Mr. Bennett: As the House has passed a resolution that a certain number of days should be set aside for private Members' Bills and motions, does not the Chair have some responsibility to ensure that it is carried out?

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately, the Chair has no responsibility for that. I say again that my main concern is always to ensure that fairness is maintained in the Chamber and that, in particular, the rights and interests of Back Benchers are protected. Sadly, I have no authority to do what the hon. Gentleman wishes me to do.

9.34 am

Sir David Price (Eastleigh): Hon. Members have been raising points of order about the rights of Back Benchers, but my poor old hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope) has now lost some of the time allotted to him for his half hour Adjournment debate. But with his permission, and that of the House, I shall reinforce what my hon. Friend the Member for Itchen has said. As he pointed out, the main shipyard in the Southampton area is in my constituency.

I shall stress in particular the points that my hon. Friend made about the importance of the single role mine hunter. We require assurances from the Ministry of Defence about the ordering programme for it. I remind my hon. Friend the Minister that the basic design contract report on the single role mine hunter, which came out in 1983, concluded that after the order for the lead ship—the first of class—had been started orders for 02-05 would be placed in the spring of 1987, and that thereafter ships would be required at the rate of two a year. It is vital that that programme should be maintained. If it is not maintained, my hon. Friend the Member for Itchen has pointed out some of the penalties that we would pay not only in employment but in maintaining the integrity of our design teams.

The order for the single role mine hunter differs from many other naval orders in that it involves new technology in which Vosper Thornycroft leads, I hesitate to say the world, but certainly Europe. From an export point of view, it is essential that it should be enabled to maintain the programme's momentum. It is not a queston of there being competing tenders. I understand that the Ministry of Defence is quite satisfied about the ability and integrity of the ships that Vosper Thornycroft builds, but the problems stems from cash flow problems within the Ministry.

Whatever else is "phased back"—I think that that is the phrase used in the Ministry of Defence—I ask that it should not be the single role mine hunter programme. At this late—or is it early—hour, that is the only point that I wish to make in reinforcing the admirable arguments deployed by my hon. Friend the Member for Itchen.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (Mr. John Butcher): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope) on his tenacity in staying with us for so long in order to defend the interests of his constituents, particularly those who work directly or indirectly in the shipbuilding, shiprepair and, indeed, boat building industry. We have shared debates on this sort of topic several times, and he will know that we have have discovered through the economists that about 80 per cent. of the United Kingdom's manufacturing output can be defined as internationally tradeable whereas only about 18 per cent. of service sector activity is so tradeable.

Therefore, any debate that tackles the question of the maintenance of a strong manufacturing base is to be welcome, as that is at the heart of Britain's economic performance and the quality of life of our people. My hon. Friend will know that Britain's share of the world's traded manufactures fell from 14 per cent. in 1964 to about 8 per cent. in 1979. The CBI has told us that each 1 per cent. represents a loss of about 250,000 jobs. Thus, the framework against which my hon. Friend has sought this debate on behalf of Southampton's work force is very important. I know that my hon. Friend also holds very strong views on the matter.

I shall, of course, deal with the single role mine hunter, but I begin by saying that the refit of Brittania is under consideration. As my hon. Friend will expect me to say, it is, however, a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. But, as my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) reminded me, I shall draw it, among other things, to the attention of my right hon. Friend.

Understandably, my hon. Friend the Member for Itchen began the major part of his speech with a resumé of the position at Vosper Thornycroft. It is the largest of the Southampton shipbuilders and one of Britain's premier warship yards. It employs more than 2,700 people in Southampton and Portsmouth. Vosper Thornycroft in many ways exemplifies the attributes that are the strength of Southampton.

The company has been in Southampton since the beginning of the century, when John I. Thornycroft and Co. Ltd. of Chiswick moved to the city. Thornycrofts merged with Vosper and Co. Ltd. of Portsmouth in 1966. Since then, Vosper Thornycroft's main yard has been Woolston in Southampton, where it can build conventional steel hull ships up to 8,000 tonnes, such as frigates, and glass reinforced plastic vessels such as the ultra modern mine counter measures vessels and the single role mine hunters. The order for the first of class single role mine hunter was placed only last year.

Vosper Thornycroft can claim 20 years service to 30 navies. By any yardstick, that is an impressive record. Part of the company's strength has lain in its ability to adapt and to create designs to suit the individual prefrences of overseas customers. Consequently, more than half of its turnover comes from exports of ships and from its products and support services divisions. While Vosper Thornycroft is indeed a shipbuilder, it is much more. In a way typical of Southampton, it has branched out into associated businesses, such as the design and manufacture of hydraulic power equipment, the supply of support services such as training, technical handbooks, maintenance and spares, and the design and manufacture of high technology electronic control equipment for the marine and energy industries. Those products include training simulators, distribution systems, surveillance systems and machinery controls.

Vosper Thornycroft has an impressive past, and, I am sure, an exciting future, but I am aware that, in its main line of business—warship building—it faces critical order problems which rightly worry my hon. Friends. As my hon. Friend the Member for Itchen said, the company is also greatly affected by changes in defence expenditure. Major delays in orders for further single role mine hunters could have a serious impact on its ability to maintain its advanced GRP capability. I say that in the knowledge that the company's only competitor in that area has already had to mothball its similar facility. That presents a pointed and timely example.

I congratulate my hon. Friend on seeking this moment to speak about the maintenance of a strategic capability in the United Kingdom industry which his constituents understandably want to be maintained. The order for frigates for Pakistan has been the subject of prolonged discussions. Throughout, the Government have given Vosper Thornycroft all possible support. My hon. Friend will appreciate my reluctance to say anything that may prejudice the negotiations, but I can assure him that we are continuing in the hope of securing the contract.

Although Vosper Thornycroft is a company in a so-called traditional sector, it is operating at the forefront of technology. It is no wonder that British Shipbuilders had keen competition when it put the company on the market last year. I am sure that the whole House will wish the winning management buy-out team, led by the managing director, Mr. Peter Usher, every success in the future, especially in the immediate future, bearing in mind the state of current orders.

Vosper Ship repairers Ltd. is part of the equation of capability in Southampton. I should like to take this opportunity to commend the courage, enterprise and determination that fuelled the Vosper Thornycroft management. It is shared by others in Southampton, including others in the troubled shipbuilding and shiprepair industries. Vosper Shiprepairers was also bought from British Shipbuilders last year by its top management. This time last year, there was a strong possibility that Vosper Shiprepairers would have to be closed, but its top management—Mr. John Collins and Mr. Colin Johnson—had confidence in their ability to win orders once freed from the shackles of state ownership. After a difficult start, their confidence is being shown to be well founded, as Vosper Shiprepairers has already secured several major orders, most notably the National Environmental Research Council's scientific research vessel and the ship, previously HMS Hydra, which is being refurbished for the Indonesian navy. Those orders have reversed its recent fortunes, and I am sure that the House will join me in wishing Vosper Shiprepairers every success in the future.

I recognise that there are special difficulties faced by Vosper Hovermarine which, with its parent company, Vosper plc, has recently been put into receivership. I was naturally very sorry to learn of the problems facing this marine and engineering group.

As my hon. Friend knows, significant Government support has been given to the hovercraft activities since 1980, when the hovercraft company was acquired by Vosper plc, and previously. In the mid-1970s the National Research Development Corporation assisted in funancing the development of the company's series of sidewall hovercraft, known as a surface effect ship. More recently, in 1984, the British Technology Group, as successors to the NRDC, agreed to convert into equity in Vosper plc, the £2·2 million of debt owed to it by Vosper Hovermarine in order to help the company's financial position.

In addition, my Department has funded two phases of development of the current 700 series — a sidewall hovercraft of about 600 tonnes designed to operate in high wind conditions. Assistance for a further phase of development was about to be considered when the receivers were appointed.

It has been asked whether more could have been done to save the group from receivership. Although my hon. Friends have not raised the matter, it is a source of prolonged agony for commentators in the area, so I should like to deal with it. The decision to appoint the receivers was a matter for the group's bankers. It appears that neither the bankers nor the shareholders felt able to give the further financial support that would have been necessary to keep the group in business. As ever, this was a commercial decision and, in the circumstances, there was nothing that my Department could do. I suspect that the legislative framework for the type of operation that has been suggested does not exist.

Although the appointment of the receivers will have come as a major disappointment to all involved with the group, I hope that it will prove possible for the receivers to find someone to come forward and acquire the whole hovercraft operation or, at least, the very advanced technology that has been developed. My officials have been in close touch with the directors and with the receivers, and I know that every effort has been made to inform those who may be interested—

The Question having been proposed after Ten o'clock on Thursday evening, and the debate having continued for half an hour, MR. SPEAKER adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to the Standing Order.

Adjourned at thirteen minutes to Ten o'clock am on Friday 6 June 1986.

SCOTLAND

Beekeeping

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will undertake an urgent investigation of the effects of the recent adverse weather on the viability of the beekeeping industry in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: No. It is generally accepted that 1985 was a very poor year for most sectors of the agricultural-horticultural industry, including beekeeping. The problems caused by the adverse weather are worrying for those involved but such reversals are not uncommon and, in the case of beekeeping, have to be seen against bumper crop years such as occurred in Scotland in 1984.

Bilderberg Conference

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the costs to public funds of the policing of the Bilderberg conference.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Conservation

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Countryside Commission about the future and the future extent of the site of special scientific interest affected by the proposed pipeline assembly yard at Tain, Ross-shire.

Mr. Ancram: The Countryside Commission for Scotland has made no representations to my right hon. and learned Friend on this matter. For its interest in the Dornoch firth national scenic area, it has expressed the view to the highland regional council that there are reasons which militate against the development of the site and that it would prefer consent to be withheld and further alternative sites to be investigated. If, however, after due consideration, the regional council considered that planning permission should be given, the commission indicated that it would not wish to have the proposal referred to my right hon. and learned Friend.

Mr. Kennedy: asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list and categorise in the Official Report each respective section of coastline within the Highland regional council's boundaries over which there exists a planning or development presumption in favour of conservation; and if he will express the total length of coastline so designated as a percentage of the total length of coastline within Highland regional council's boundaries.

Mr. Ancram: The coastal planning guidelines issued by the Scottish Development Department in 1974 classify four parts of the Highland region coastline as preferred development zones (Moray firth, Cromarty firth, Wick area and Thurso area) and the rest of the coastline as a preferred conservation zone. Approximately 90 per cent. of the coastline is within the latter category.

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the ratio of prisoners to prison officers in Scotland.

Mr. John Mackay: On the latest date for which information is kept centrally, there were 5,645 prisoners and 2,645 prison officers, exclusive of governor grades, in the Scottish prison service, giving a ratio of 2·13 to 1.

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average number of hours per day spent by prisoners locked in their cells in Scotland.

Mr. John Mackay: Information is not held centrally in the form requested. Different routines obtain in different establishments and for different categories of prisoner. In general however, convicted prisoners have periods of work, exercise and recreation out of their cells each day. Remand prisoners have a period of exercise and, normally, some recreation each day. The majority of prisoners, remand as well as convicted, take their meals in dining halls rather than in their own cells.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Tanzania

59. Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about future commitments of aid to Tanzania.

Mr. Raison: Our existing capital aid programme to Tanzania will continue with help on maintaining the Songea-Makambako road and support for the southern regions health project and rural development projects in Lindi-Mtwara and other areas. We also propose to maintain technical co-operation for Tanzanian universities, for English language training and for the Tanzania harbpour authority. In addition, if Tanzania reaches agreement with the IMF on a programme of economic policy changes, I propose to offer fast disbursing balance of payments support over the next two years.

Africa

60. Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to increase United Kingdom aid to the African continent.

Mr. Raison: Increasing priority is being given to those countries in sub-Saharan Africa where aid can be used effectively. We already have substantial bilateral aid programmes in Africa, and we are a major contributor to increasing multilateral aid programmes.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have any plans to contribute to the International Fund for Agricultural Development's special fund for sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Raison: As I told my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) on 21 April at column 17, we currently think it better to help agricultural projects directly and through the voluntary agencies rather than to contribute extra money to IFAD beyond our share of the recent general replenishment.

Programme Aid

61. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to increase the proportion of the aid budget allocated to programme aid.

Mr. Raison: We have recently been making substantial programme aid commitments in support of IMF and World Bank structural adjustment programmes. The scale of programme aid spending in our aid budget depends on the pace of economic policy reform, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa.

International Development Association

62. Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals have been made by the World Bank for increasing the funding of the International Development Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: Virtually all donor Governments have affirmed their support for a $12 billion replenishment of IDA. Subject to our share continuing to be 6·7 per cent. and to satisfactory arrangements for the dollar-sterling exchange rate, we are happy to back that total. But the United States' position is crucial to the outcome: I hope that this will be known at the next round of negotiations, probably in July.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Merthyr County Court

52. Mr. Rowlands asked the Attorney-General how many sittings of the registrar and deputy registrar are budgeted for in 1986-87 at the Merthyr county court; and what were the figures for 1985-86.

The Solicitor-General: It is expected that the level of registrar sitting days in the current financial year will be broadly the same as for 1985-86. Deputy registrars' sittings are arranged according to need.

Nuclear Materials (Offences) Act 1983

Mr. Best asked the Attorney-General how many persons have been prosecuted under the Nuclear Materials (Offences) Act 1983.

The Attorney-General: None. No order has been made under section 8(2) of the Act bringing it into force.

Traffic Accidents (Damages)

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney-General whether he has plans to introduce legislation to create no-fault liability in respect of actions for damages arising out of road traffic accidents.

The Attorney-General: The Government have no plan to change the existing basis of liability in this way. Such a system would have considerable public expenditure implications and invidiously discriminate between accident victims depending on whether they were injured on the roads or elsewhere.

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney-General how many summonses and writs, respectively, have been issued claiming damages for negligence arising out of road traffic accidents during each of the last five years for which records are available.

The Attorney-General: I regret that this information is not kept separately for road traffic accidents.

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney-General how many, and what percentage of actions claiming damages for road traffic accidents have been settled before reaching trial during each of the last five years for which records are available.

The Attorney-General: I regret that this information is not collected separately for road traffic accidents.

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney-General what he estimates to be the minimum, the average and the maximum legal costs involved in a High Court action for damages arising out of a road traffic accident.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is not available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney-General what he estimates to be the cost to litigants and to the public, respectively, for accidents of negligence arising out of road traffic accidents during the course of any one calendar year.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is not available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney-General how many, and what percentage of claims, arising out of road traffic accidents which reach trial, succeeded; and how many, and what percentage, failed, respectively, during the last five years for which records are available.

The Attorney-General: Figures for the number of successful and unsuccessful claims for motor traffic accidents after reaching trial are only available for the High Court on an estimated basis, derived from a two-month sample, for 1985. In that year it is estimated that a trial began in 1,140 cases arising from personal injury actions "caused on the roads": in 910 (80 per cent.), judgment was given for the plaintiff; in 60 (5 per cent.) judgment was given for the defendant; 40 (4 per cent.) judgment was given for both; and in 130 cases (11 per cent.) the trial did not proceed to judgment.

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney-General how long he estimates to be the minimum, the average and the maximum time taken between the date of an accident and the dates when a negligence action arising out of that accident is likely to reach trial in the county court or the High Court.

The Attorney-General: Figures are not available in this precise form. However, information collected on a sample basis during 1985 as part of the civil justice review suggests that the average time from incident to trial for all personal injury cases heard in the High Court is between 62 and 64 months, whilst for all personal injury cases heard in the county courts it is 35 months.

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney General how long he estimates is the average time between the date of a judgment for damages awarded to a successful plaintiff in an action for damages arising out of a road accident in a county court or in the High Court, respectively, and the date when the successful sufferer receives those damages.

The Attorney-General: This information is not available, and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney-General whether he will introduce a system whereby sufferers from road traffic accidents in respect whereof liability is admitted by the defendant will receive interim awards of damages, pending trial of their actions.

The Attorney-General: Such a system is already provided by by RSC order 29, rule 10. No further system is in contemplation.

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney-General whether he has carried out an inquiry into the effects of interim awards of damages to sufferers from road traffic accidents whose claims are admitted but in respect whereof the amount of damages is in dispute.

The Attorney-General: No.

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney-General how many, and what percentage of claims for damages arising out of road traffic accidents have been brought by pedestrians, drivers in vehicles and passengers in vehicles, respectively; and how many and what percentage of such claims have succeeded and have failed respectively.

The Attorney-General: This information is not collected, and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney-General whether he will conduct an inquiry into the accuracy of evidence concerning road traffic accidents, such evidence being given in court a lengthy period of time after the occurrence concerned; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Delay in civil actions for personal injuries is one of the matters being considered by the civil justice review announced by the Lord Chancellor on 6 February 1985. It is difficult to see how an inquiry on the basis indicated by the hon. and learned Member could be mounted or yield conclusive results.

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney-General if he will advise Her Majesty to establish a Royal Commission to inquire into the operation of the present system for claims for damages for road accident victims; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Royal Commission on civil liability and compensation for personal injury (Cmnd. 7054-I) reported in March 1978. No further inquiry is warranted at this stage.

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney General what information he has about the scope and operation in other countries of the no-fault liability provisions in the law concerning damages for negligence arising out of road traffic accidents; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Volume 3 of the report of the Royal Commission on civil liability and compensation for personal injury (Cmnd. 7054-III) is devoted to an extensive survey of overseas systems of compensation for various injuries, including those sustained in road accidents.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Attorney-General what level of remuneration the Crown Prosecution Service is offering to barristers for (i) a half day's session and (ii) a whole day's session in the magistrates' court.

The Attorney-General: The level of remuneration that the Crown prosecution service is at present offering to barristers for a half-day's session of full-list advocacy in the magistrates courts is £60; for a whole-day session, the remuneration is £85. These are minimum rates, and chief Crown prosecutors have discretion to pay higher rates having regard to (a) the distance of the nearest barristers' chambers to the court; and (b) the level of remuneration prevailing before the establishment of the Crown prosecution service. Further discussions with the Bar on the level of remuneration are envisaged. The Crown prosecution service is only established in the former metropolitan counties outside London and in Northumberland and Durham.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Attorney-General what is the level of remuneration (a) currently paid and (b) proposed to be paid by the Crown prosecution service to solicitors who undertake (i) a half day's session and (ii) a whole day's session in the magistrates' court.

The Attorney-General: The level of remuneration currently paid and proposed to be paid by the Crown prosecution service to solicitors who undertake advocacy in magistrates' courts is at the discretion of chief Crown prosecutors. The rates vary from area to area and between different localities within the same area, having regard to local circumstances.

Trials (Statistics)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Attorney-General in what percentage of contested cases there were acquittals in the Crown Courts in England and Wales in 1983, 1984 and 1985, respectively.

The Attorney-General: The percentage of defendants dealt with in the Crown court in England and Wales who pleaded not guilty to all or some counts, and who are acquitted on all counts to which they pleaded not guilty, was 48 per cent. in 1983, 49 per cent. in 1984 and 49 per cent. in 1985. These figures are published annually in the judicial statistics for the preceding year.

Magistrates

Mr. Hoyle asked the Attorney-General on a ward by ward basis, how many of the magistrates of the petty session districts of Northampton, Peterborough and Swindon, respectively, reside in each ward; and what percentage this is of the total number of magistrates on each bench.

The Attorney-General: The information is not available and could only be ascertained at disproportionate cost.

Oath (Form and Administration)

Mr. Maclennan asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the form and administration of the oath.

The Attorney-General: The form and administration of oaths are laid down in the Oaths Act 1978 and certain other statutes and practice directions.

Offences Outside United Kingdom Jurisdiction

Mr. Best asked the Attorney-General if he will list all prosecutions brought in the United Kingdom in the last 10 years in respect of offences committed outside United Kingdom jurisdiction, specifying the nature of the offence or alleged offence, in each case, and the statute under which the prosecution was brought, where appropriate.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply.
The information requested is not collected centrally.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently serving custodial sentences for non-violent offences.

Mr. Mellor: The information about offences held centrally does not identify all prisoners serving sentences for violent offences as defined in schedule 1 to the Criminal Justice Act 1982. It is estimated that on 31 March 1986 about 25,000 prisoners were serving sentences for offences other than violence against the person, rape, buggery and gross indecency, aggravated burglary and robbery.

Licensing Laws

Sir Bernard Braine asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to introduce legislation to relax the licensing laws in England and Wales before publication in full of the findings of the inquiry into the drinking patterns of young people, carried out by the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys in 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that the survey does not deal with the effects of a relaxation in the law on licensing hours. On the timing of legislation, I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Ravensbourne (Mr. Hunt).

Metropolitan Police (Air Surveillance)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost of running the Metropolitan police air support unit for 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner that the estimated cost of the Metropolitan police air support unit in the financial years 1984-85 and 1985-86 was £1·51 million and £1·38 million respectively.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the photographic surveillance carried out by the Metropolitan police at Grosvenor square, Marble Arch, and Hyde park on demonstrators on 19 April.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner informs me that three permanently sited closed circuit television cameras, together with another in a police helicopter, were used to assist in policing this demonstration.

Lancelot George Turnbull

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many times Lancelot George Turnbull had previously absconded from an open prison prior to being sent to Ashwell prison; and what criteria he adopts in deciding to allow a prisoner with a previous record of absconding to be placed for a second time in an open prison;

(2) whether he will make a statement on the criteria which he adopts in deciding whether a man serving a life sentence for a violent crime, including murder, should be sent to an open prison; and what steps he takes to maintain public confidence in this regard;

(3) if he will make a statement on the absconding from Ashwell prison of Lancelot George Turnbull, serving a sentence of life imprisonment for murder.

Mr. Mellor: A life sentence prisoner is considered for transfer to an open prison only after careful assessment in a number of different prisons over a period of years. The advice of the Parole Board is sought in every case and transfer to an open prison is subject to the personal authority of a Minster. As in every decision relating to the progress towards the possible release on life licence of such a prisoner, public safety is the paramount consideration. Each case is considered on its individual merits and transfer to an open prison would not be ruled out solely because of the nature of the prisoner's offence or because of a previous abscond without taking account of other factors, but no life sentence prisoner is transferred to an open prison until he is thought no longer to present any serious risk of re-offending.

Mr. Turnbull was convicted in April 1976 of the murder of a male acquaintance and was sentenced to life imprisonment. When it considered his case in June 1983, The Parole Board recommended his transfer to an open prison with a further review after 12 months in open conditions. This recommendation was accepted and Mr. Turnbull was transferred to Leyhill open prison in September 1983. However, he failed to settle and absconded the following month. He surrendered to the police after four days and was immediately returned to closed prison conditions.

As far as is known, he committed no offences during the period he was unlawfully at large. His case was next considered by the Parole Board in December 1985. The board recommended that Mr. Turnbull should again be tested in open conditions before consideration was given to his suitability for release on life licence and proposed that his case should be reviewed 18 months after his transfer. Having considered all the circumstances of the case, including the previous abscond from Leyhill, my right hon. Friend decided that the recommendation should be accepted. Mr. Turnbull was transferred to Ashwell open prison on 2 April. At about 4.45 am on 2 May, Mr. Turnbull was found to be missing from his room. He had previously been seen by the night patrol at about 3.45 am. The prison was immediately searched and the police were informed as soon as it was apparent that Mr. Turnbull had absconded. He has not so far been apprehended.

News International Plant, Wapping (Police Surveillance)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the extent of photographic surveillance used by the Metropolitan police from premises near the News International plant at Wapping; and what were the premises used for this purpose, and the nature and intention of this surveillance.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner informs me that two cameras, in premises adjacent to the News International printing plant at Wapping, are used to assist in policing demonstrations there.

Sporting Events (Control of Alcohol etc.) Act 1983

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list the number and nature of non-soccer sporting events which have been designated under the Sporting Events (Control of Alcohol etc.) Act 1983.

Mr. Giles Shaw: None.

Hull Prison

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what (a) education, (b) training and (c) leisure facilities are currently available at Hull prison; and what estimate he has of the time spent per inmate per week in each of these areas;

(2) what estimate he has of the current amount of time spent per week confined in cells for (a) prisoners, (b) young offenders, and (c) those on remand in Hull prison, and of time spent out of the cells on recreation.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not readily available.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners Hull prison was originally intended to cater for; and how many prisoners are currently being held there.

Mr. Mellor: On 9 May 1986, the certified normal accommodation of Her Majesty's prison and remand centre Hull was 329 and its population was 555.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there is a recommended number of prisoners per prison officer; what is (a) the national average, (b) the average at Lindholme prison and (c) the average at Hull prison of prisoners per prison officer; and how many (i) adult prisoners, (ii) young offenders and (iii) people on remand there are in each of these prisons.

Mr. Mellor: The circumstances of establishments differ too greatly to permit a recommended national staff-inmate ratio. The information requested is in the table:

	Staff in post at 1 April 1986 (Prison Officer Class)	Inmates in custody at 1 April 1986				Ratio staff inmates
		Remand Trial	Adult prisoners	Young offenders	Total
Hull	255	144	316	36	486	1 : 1·91
Lindholme	143		443	—	443	1 : 3·09
TOTAL	18,887	—	—	—	46,798	*1 : 2·53 †1 : 1·55

* Male.
† Female.

Fines and Maintenance Arrears

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were detained at the last date available for (a) non-payment of fines, (b) non-payment of maintenance and (c) breaches of matrimonial orders.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is given in the table. Breaches of matrimonial orders other than for payment are not separately recorded.

Population of persons committed to custody in prison department establishments in England and Wales for non-payment of fine, maintenance or arrears under an affiliation order: 31 March 1986

Type of committal	*Number of persons
In default of payment of a fine	520
Non-payment of maintenance	40
Non-payment of arrears under an affiliation order	5

* The figures are those recorded centrally and are approximate: detailed checking would involve disproportionate cost.

Prison Service (Garages)

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many garages are owned by Her Majesty's prison service; how many of these are let to prison officers; and how many of these are let to members of the public;

(2) what is his policy on letting garages belonging to Her Majesty's prison service to members of the public resident nearby.

Mr. Mellor: I will reply as soon as possible.

Certification of Death

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to introduce a requirement that all deaths of foster children must be reported to the coroner within 24 hours.

Mr. Mellor: We have no present plans for legislation on this matter. Under the Foster Children Act, the death of a foster child must be notified to the local authority and the person from whom the child was received. If a child is boarded out under the Boarding Out of Children Regulations the foster parents undertake to notify the local authority immediately of a serious occurrence. The register of births, deaths and marriages is required to report to the coroner any death which he has reason to believe was caused by violence or neglect or to have been attended by suspicious circumstances.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in the light of the British Medical Association's report "Deaths in the Community," he has any plans to amend the rules relating to death certification so that in cases where a doctor is unable to verify the cause of death, a certificate of the fact of death is sent to the coroner.

Mr. Whitney: I have been asked to reply.

In the case of a death of any person, a doctor who attended that person during the last illness is required to sign a certificate stating the cause of death to the best of his knowledge and belief. Where no such doctor is available, or where he is unable to give a cause of death or expresses doubts as to the cause of death, the case will be referred to the coroner.

There are no plans at present to amend the legislation relating to death certification in this respect.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to seek to amend legislation relating to the registration of stillbirths to bring the law into line with the law on registration of other births and deaths.

Mr. Whitney: I have been asked to reply.

While improvements have been made in the certification of stillbirths following the introduction of the new cause of stillbirths certificate on 1 January 1986, there are at present no plans to amend the primary legislation relating to the registration of stillbirths.

Forensic Experts (Accuracy)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will name those forensic experts working for his Department on whose evidence convictions have been secured whose work has subsequenty been shown to have been, on occasion, of doubtful accurancy; and if he will give the dates on which each such person stopped undertaking forensic work for prosecution purposes.

Mr. Hurd: One junior member of the forensic science service has been suspended from court reporting duties since September 1985, following concern about the quality of his work. Two officers were temporarily relieved of court reporting duties in relation to fire examinations only and resumed these duties after their work had been reviewed and they had satisfied their laboratory directors of their competence to undertake such work. These suspensions lasted from December 1983 to May 1985, and February 1985 until May 1985 respectively.

Speeding (A483)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there have been for speeding on the A483 in the vicinty of Lavister in 1985; what percentage of the vehicles involved were lorries; and what was the average fine.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not available.

Convictions (Agent Provocateur)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of recent new evidence, he will institute an inquiry into police use of an agent provocateur to secure convictions in Wales in 1969; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is not clear from the information provided to which evidence or convictions the hon. Member is referring. I should be willing to consider the matter further if he would provide me with identifying details.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Wiltshire as to how many police of (a) the Wiltshire force and (b) other forces were deployed on Salisbury plain in escorting cruise missiles from 7 May to 12 May.

Mr. Giles Shaw: For operational reasons, information of this nature is not disclosed.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Wiltshire as to how many people were arrested by (a) military and (b) civilian police on Salisbury plain between 7 and 12 May.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the chief constable that no arrests were made by the Wiltshire constabulary. 50 people were arrested by the Ministry of Defence police, of whom 12 were later charged with bye-law offences.

Printing Dispute (Wapping)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, since 20 February, officers from forces outside the Metropolitan police district have been placed on standby for mutual aid duties in connection with the current trade dispute at Wapping.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests have been made so far in connection with the current trades dispute at Wapping; if he will give a breakdown of (a) the charges laid against those arrested, (b) the number of charges that have subsequently been dropped, (c) bail conditions imposed by magistrates and (d) the number of convictions that there have been; and what sentences have ensued.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I will reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions, and where, road blocks have been used since the trades dispute at the News International plant at Wapping began.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner that roads in the vinicity of the Highway, E1, have been closed on numerous occasions in accordance with directions which he has issued under section 52 of the Metropolitan Police Act 1839.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the national reporting centre has been activated during the current trade dispute at the News International plant at Wapping.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Crime Statistics (Tower Hamlets)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of crimes recorded and crimes cleared up in Tower Hamlets, Metropolitan police district H, between January and March; and what were the figures for January to March 1985.

Mr. Mellor: I am informed by the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis that police in Tower Hamlets in the first quarter of 1985 recorded 5,840 notifiable offences and cleared up 1,176 such offences. Recorded crime figures for the first quarter of 1986 are due to be published next month.

Mental Health Act (Detentions)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to ensure that records are being kept of those persons detained under section 136 of the Mental Health Act; and if he intends to issue instructions that such records be kept in those cases where places of safety are found other than in a psychiatric hospital.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Records of persons admitted to hospitals and similar places of safety under section 136 of the Mental Health Act 1983 are maintained by local health authorities. The information is collected centrally by the DHSS and is published annually in "Mental Health Statistics for England." Details of persons detained by the police under this section are recorded in the custody records kept under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Immigration Control

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce an independent element into the investigation of complaints made against the immigration service.

Mr. Waddington: The sixth report from the Home Affairs Committee (Session 1984-85) recommended that an independent element should be introduced into the immigration and nationality department's procedures for the investigation of complaints. The Department's officials are considering the recommendation and my right hon. Friend will make a substantive response to the Committee in due course.

Mr. Madden: asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers, granted temporary admission to the United Kingdom on arrival at Heathrow airport in the current year, have been accommodated by his Department in hotels; what instructions have been issued to private security guards on duty there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The information available is that, in the period between 27 March and 29 April, accommodation was provided at two hotels near Heathrow for the equivalent of 681 passengers. Some passengers may have been accommodated for more than one night. the passengers concerned had been either required to submit to further examination or refused entry and were given temporary admission and required to reside at one of two hotels.

The employees of Securicor Ltd. who accompanied the passengers to the hotels were instructed that, as the passengers had been given temporary admission, they were not not be prevented from leaving the hotels but that if there was any indication that a person did not intend to return to Heathrow the employee should inform the immigration officer concerned. It was also made clear that such passengers were not be to restrained.

Mr. Madden: asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the newly issued code of practice for immigration officers when searching premises and conducting interviews; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Yes. We hope to do so shortly.

Mr. Madden: asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many oral and written complaints have been received in the current year to date about immigration control at Heathrow airport from (a) passengers, (b) the public and (c) right hon. and hon. Members; and how many complaints were received (i) in 1985 and (ii) in 1984.

Mr. Waddington: No statistical record is kept of oral complaints.

Up to 15 May, 77 written complaints have been received this year about the immigration control at Heathrow, of which 14 were made by passengers, 22 by members of the public and 41 by right hon. and hon. Members. The total for 1985 was 213, of which 41 were from passengers, 73 from members of the public and 99 from right hon. and hon. Members. Statistics for 1984 were not kept in the form requested but in that year a total of 212 written complaints were received from all sources about the control at Heathrow.

Mr. Madden: asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many private security firm personnel are employed by his Department on immigration control at Heathrow airport; when they were first employed; at what total cost; and what are their duties.

Mr. Waddington: Securicor Ltd. has been contracted to the Home Office since 1 July 1970 to provide staff who act as orderlies for passengers under examination by an immigration officer and for the purpose of guarding and escorting persons detained under the Immigration Act 1971.

There are 28 Securicor posts at Heathrow airport. There are covered by shiftwork, some for 24 hours per day, so that the actual number of personnel employed is greater. The 28 posts include those at the main terminal buildings as well as at the Queen's building and Harmondsworth detention centres. The cost of the service is a matter of contract, which it would not be appropriate for me to disclose.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to appoint or second immigration officers to the private offices of his Ministerial colleagues; what their duties will be; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The increase in the number of representations by Members in immigration cases made it necessary to provide additional support both at ports and in the private office of my hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State whose responsibilities include immigration. Two immigration officers have been appointed as assistant private secretaries for an initial period of six months.

Baton Rounds and CS Equipment

Mr. Hind asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 November 1985 to the hon. and learned Member for Mid-Bedfordshire, (Mr. Lyell), Official Report, columns 515-16, what arrangements he has made for ensuring that plastic baton rounds and CS are made available to police forces; whether he has issued guidelines covering the future use of baton rounds and CS for dealing with serious public disorder; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: As the House was informed at the time, plastic baton rounds and CS equipment for use in dealing with serious public disorder were made available to police forces in Great Britain following the riots in 1981. The Home Office has today issued a circular to chief officers of police and police authorities in England and Wales setting out new arrangements for supplying the equipment.

Future requirements will be met from stocks purchased by the Home Office. Where financial authorisation has been given by the police authority concerned, the force will be able to purchase from the Home Office stocks. Where such authorisation is withheld, and the chief officer's assessment of need is endorsed by HM Inspector of Constabulary, I regard it as essential that the equipment should be provided, as I made clear in reply to a question from my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire. (Mr. Lyell) on 26 November 1985 at columns 515-16. In such circumstances, equipment will be provided from the central store of equipment at Home Office expense. Arrangements have also been made, on the same basis, for training in the use of the equipment where a police authority is not prepared to pay for this.

A copy of the circular has been placed in the Library.

Revised guidelines on the use of CS and baton rounds to deal with serious public disorder have also been issued today to all chief officers of police in England and Wales.

The guidelines cover the following points:

CS or baton rounds are to be used only with the express authority of the chief officer of police (or in his absence his deputy) under the direction and control of a designated senior officer, and by police officers who have been trained in the use of the equipment and know its characteristics.

CS or baton rounds are to be used only as a last resort where conventional methods of policing have been tried and failed, or must from the nature of the circumstances be unlikely to succeed if tried; and where there is a risk of loss of life, or serious injury (or widespread destruction of property such that there is, or is judged to be, a sufficiently serious risk of loss of life or serious injury to justify the use of baton rounds or CS); and where the use of CS and baton rounds is judged as necessary because it is likely to reduce that risk. An oral warning is to be given to the crowd to disperse before CS or baton rounds are used. Once the use of baton rounds has begun, the need to continue use is to be assessed continuously. Particular caution is to be taken over the use of baton rounds for offensive purposes.

If a chief officer is not present at the scene, he must be satisfied from reports that the criteria for use set out above have been met. In such circumstances, before the chief officer's authority for use is put into effect, a designated senior officer should satisfy himself at the scene that the criteria are met.

After each operational firing of baton rounds, a report on the circumstances of the incident in which they were fired is to be made to the Home Secretary.

Only CS equipment and baton rounds and launchers of a type authorised by the Home Office are to be used for these purposes. Nothing in the guidelines affects the principle, to which section 3 of the Criminal Law Act 1967 gives effect, that only such force as is reasonable in the circumstances must be used. The degree of force justified will vary according to the circumstances of each case.

Plastic baton rounds have never been used in Great Britain and I very much hope that they will never need to be. But it is clearly right that chief officers should have baton rounds and CS equipment available following the unprecedented ferocity of the disorders last autumn. The new arrangements for the provision of this equipment ensure that all chief officers with a requirement for plastic baton rounds and CS equipement will be able to obtain supplies. The revised guidelines set out very strict conditions for the use of the equipment.

Prisons

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the ratio of prisoners to prison officers in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: The ratio of prisoners to prison officers in England and Wales on 1 April 1986 was 2·53: 1 males and 1·55: 1 females.

Fire Services

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the numbers of uniformed and non-uniformed staff which were employed by the former London fire brigade controlled by the Greater London council and the comparable numbers in each category now employed by the London fire and civil defence authority.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The respective establishment figures are:

	31 March 1986	1 April 1986
Whole-time uniformed staff	7,159	6,849
Non-uniformed staff	997	1,181
Control room staff	196	196

On 1 April there was no immediate change in whole-time uniformed staff actually in post. The increase in non-uniformed staff chiefly reflected the need for the brigade to absorb a proportion of fire prevention staff formerly in the GLC architect's department, and to become self-administering.

Licensing hours

Mr. John Hunt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to announce the conclusions of his review of permitted opening hours for licensed premises in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: After carefully studying all the relevant facts, and in particular the evidence to emerge from the Scottish experience of longer opening hours, the Government believe that there is a strong case for considering some relaxation of the restrictions on licensing hours in England and Wales.

There is no obvious consensus however, on the precise nature of the changes which should be made. We believe it is important that any relaxation should maintain adequate and effective controls on licensed outlets, given the concern which exists over alcohol misuse and the need to provide protection for the public against added noise and nuisance. Any change will require legislation, and I cannot give any indication at this stage of when this might be introduced. But we support the case for reform in principle.

Magistrates Courts (Acquittals)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in what percentage of contested cases there were acquittals in the magistrates courts in England and Wales in 1983, 1984 and 1985, respectively; (2) in what percentage of all cases there were convictions in England and Wales in magistrates courts in 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply and will do so as soon as possible.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what percentage of all cases were convicted in Crown courts in England and Wales in 1983, 1984 and 1985.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply. The percentage of defendants dealt with in the Crown court in England and Wales who were convicted on all or some counts was 79 per cent. in 1983, 79 per cent. in 1984 and 80 per cent. in 1985. These figures include defendants pleading guilty to all or some counts. These alone accounted for 65 per cent., 67 per cent. and 67 per cent. respectively of all defendants dealt with in these years.

Immigration

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average waiting time before interview for an application for entry clearance as a person of independent means at Dacca, New Delhi, Bombay, Islamabad and Karachi.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

Current minimum and maximum waiting times are as follows:

Dhaka 3 days to 4 weeks
New Delhi up to 4 weeks
Bombay 2 to 6 weeks
Islamabad no waiting time — interviewed on day of application
Karachi 2 to 3 weeks

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Debts (Arms Expenditure)

63. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affirs what account his Department takes of a country's expenditure on arms when taking part in discussions on the rescheduling of its debts.

Mrs. Chalker: All aspects of a country's economic performance are considered during debt negotiations. But neither we nor other creditors are in a position to dictate to a country its political priorities, including the priority it gives to arms expenditure.

School Fees

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the costs incurred by his Department for (a) school fees and (b) board and lodging when children are at boarding school in Britain whilst their parents are serving abroad.

Mr. Eggar: In financial year 1985-86, the FCO paid £3,275,807 in boarding school allowances towards the cost of school fees and board and lodging for 856 children of FCO staff, including the ODA and communications department, serving overseas. Separate figures for the costs of school fees and of board and lodging are not available.

GCHQ

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under what section of the Civil Service code of conduct membership of a trade union may be deemed as an offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: There are no such instructions in the Civil Service code. However, in relation to GCHQ, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, acting in pursuance of article 4 of the Civil Service Order in Council 1982, gave instructions on 22 December 1983 that the conditions of service of employees at GCHQ should be varied so that they should not be members of any trade union other than a departmental staff association approved by the director. The staff regulations applicable at GCHQ have been appropriately amended. Any breach of those conditions may be liable to disciplinary proceedings.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if disciplinary procedures at Government communications headquarters beginning on 19 May will be conducted within the framework of the Civil Service code of conduct; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The disciplinary procedure applying in these cases will be that contained in the existing departmental regulations. However, the recently revised provisions of the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code will also be applied where they increase the protection of the individuals concerned.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the Answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 350, he will make a statement on the advice given by the director of Government communications headquarters to the head of the Civil Service on appropriate penalties for those who have rejoined a union there.

Mr. Renton: Discipline at GCHQ is a matter for the director. I have nothing further to add to the answer I gave on 12 May to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) at column 350.

Political Parties (Funds)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for the United Kingdom of the recent decision of the European Court that the grant of public funds to certain political parties by the European Assembly was unlawful.

Mrs. Chalker: It is for the European Parliament to decide whether the funds distributed to political parties should be recovered.

Guatemala

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts have been held between Ministers and officials in his Department and the Guatemalan Government since the election of President Cerezo; what was the purpose of these contacts; what factors stand in the way of a resumption of consular or diplomatic relations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The British delegation attending the inauguration of President Arias of Costa Rica in San Jose met President Cerezo on 7 May and discussed the possibility of re-establishing diplomatic and consular relations between the two countries. President Cerezo of Guatemala expressed satisfaction at the advantages which the resumption of relations could have but indicated that he would consult various sectors in Guatemala to obtain their opinion on the desirability of shortly re-establishing diplomatic and consular relations with Great Britain. The meeting was very cordial. It was agreed that the proposal to re-establish relations was clearly within the framework of co-operation between the European Comunity and the countries of central America.

Belize

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current agreed period of notice for withdrawal of the British garrison in Belize; what changes in the period of notice have occurred since June 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: As agreed with the Belize Government on independence, the British garrison will remain in Belize for an appropriate period to assist with external defence and with the training of the Belize defence force. There has been no change in the position since independence.

El Salvador

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any action was taken or representations made by Her Majesty's Government following the suspension of guarantees of freedom of expression in El Salvador on 18 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No, but we are monitoring the situation closely.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have been held with El Salvador concerning the offer to train officers from El Salvador in the United Kingdom; when he expects such training to begin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: There have been no substantive discussions recently with the Salvadorean Government on this matter. The first officer cadet is expected to start an eight-month training course at Sandhurst in January after a language course.

Chile

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the officials and Ministers who met a member of the Chilean junta, General Mattei, on his recent visit to the United Kingdom; what was the purpose of the meetings; whether any representations concerning human rights violations of named individuals were made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, and senior FCO officials met General Mattei during his recent private visit to the United Kingdom. My right hon. and noble Friend expressed concern about the need for early progress towards the orderly restoration of democracy in Chile, and an improvement in the human rights record of the Chilean Government.

SALT II

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the continued observance of the terms of the unratified SALT II treaty by the parties to it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The United Kingdom is not a party to the SALT II treaty, nor do we participate in the standing consultative commission discussions on compliance issues. But Her Majesty's Government attaches great importance to respect for obligations under existing arms control agreements and we have accordingly urged strict compliance with the treaty by both sides. In this context, the United Kingdom has expressed concern that the Russians have not produced answers to American concerns about their compliance record.

Soviet Union (Food)

Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals are currently under consideration by the European Economic Community to supply food to the Soviet Union following the Chernobyl disaster.

Mrs. Chalker: None. The European Community has not received any Soviet request to supply food.

TRANSPORT

British Rail Engineering Ltd.

12. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the manager of British Rail Engineering Ltd. and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. David Mitchell: The chairman of BREL accompanied my right hon. Friend on his visit to China last September, during which a wide range of issues—particularly export promotion—was discussed.

27. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives of the staff of British Rail Engineering Ltd., and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend met representatives of BREL's Swindon workforce on 21 March to discuss BREL's closure of the works and the company's alternative employment strategy for Swindon. I have also received delegations from several BREL works in recent months.

36. Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent information he has received of the British Railways Board's progress on its review of options to the future of British Rail Engineering Limited.

Mr. David Mitchell: The chairman has continued to keep us informed about progress. I understand that the board will be discussing the present position with its trade unions at a meeting of its rail council on 20 May.

Bus Services (Deregulation)

13. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has evidence of the effects on bus fares of deregulation of bus services.

Mr. Ridley: Deregulation will reduce costs of operation; the savings will generally be passed to the passenger in shire counties through lower fares and to ratepayers in the metropolitan counties through lower rates.

15. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has of changes in the quality of bus services as a result of deregulation.

Mr. David Mitchell: Deregulation does not take place until 26 October. Most of the services that operators will be contracted to supply with local authority subsidy have yet to be registered. In preparation for deregulation and competition we are already seeing improved services in some areas, especially with the introduction of high frequency minibuses.

24. Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussion he has had with local authorities concerning the implementation of the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend and I have been encouraged by the level of bus service registrations and by the positve attitude of many local authorities with whom we have discussed the implementation of the Transport Act. About three quarters, rather more than I anticipated, of existing routes have been registered to operate without subsidy after deregulation on 26 October. The next stage is for county and district councils and PTEs to place contracts for the operation of further as yet unregistered routes and services which they are prepared to subsidise. People who live on these routes will have the certitude of services provided under a contract.

25. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with representatives of passenger transport authorities concerning the impact of the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend and I have had a number of meetings with the new passenger transport authorities and discussed various aspects of their responsibilities.

29. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the progress of implementations of the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. David Mitchell: Yes. The bus industry is making significant improvements in its efficiency, more operators are entering the market for local bus services, and new types of service have appeared. I am not satisfied with the unfounded claims that there will be major cuts in services, at a time when local authorities have only started, much less completed, the process of tendering for subsidised services.

32. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many taxi proprietors have registered local bus services under the Transport Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: So far, about 40 taxi proprietors have registered services, and I expect that many others will submit tenders for subsidised services. This is a welcome start in providing better and more flexible services for the travelling public.

London Underground

14. Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent requests he has made to, and what recent applications he has received from, London Regional Transport concerning plans for extensions to the London Underground system.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has made no such requests nor received any such applications from London Regional Transport, beyond the present proposals for extending the docklands railway to Bank.

Roads

16. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to review the distribution of responsibility for major roads between his Department and local authorities.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We decided last year to retain responsibility for the trunk road network.

43. Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport how he estimates the costs and benefits of road schemes carried out by his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The estimates are based on a comparison between the scheme itself and an alternative "minimum improvement" option. The value of future benefits from reducing journey times, decreases in the number and severity of accidents and savings in vehicle operating costs is estimated and compared with the extra capital and maintenance costs involved. A 30-year life is assumed for appraisal purposes and all costs and benefits are discounted at 7 per cent. per annum to provide a net present value estimate for the scheme.

It is estimated that an average trunk road scheme provides about £1·50 of the discounted future benefits for every £1 spent on its construction. This is broadly equivalent to an internal rate of return of 12 per cent.

Freight Transport

17. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for implementing the European Community social regulations on goods transport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The EEC regulations come into force on 29 September. We intend to make full use of the permissible derogations and to propose to the House associated changes to the provisions of the 1968 Transport Act.

Driving Licence (Cost)

18. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much extra revenue he expects to raise from the recently announced increase in the cost of a driving licence.

Mr. Ridley: Driving licence fees are set at a level sufficient to finance the driver licensing operation at DVLC.

Main Line Services

19. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many main line services British Rail runs on an average weekday.

Mr. David Mitchell: This is a matter for British Rail.

Vehicle Registration Date

20. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the proposed change in the date for new vehicle registrations.

Mr. Ridley: I have received representations from the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders in support of the change to October in 1987 and from the Motor Agents Association and individual motor traders opposing it. I have made it clear that I am prepared to consider an alternative month to October if the motor industry as a whole now wants this.

Articulated Vehicles

21. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will reconsider increasing the maximum permitted gross vehicle weight for articulated and drawbar trailer combinations to 40 tonnes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We decided in 1982 that we would go no higher than 38 tonnes. I do not believe the House is ready to reconsider that limit.

Vehicle Excise Duty

22. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the levels of evasion and enforcement of vehicle excise duty.

Mr. Ridley: The gross loss of revenue from evasion of VED is estimated at about 4 per cent. Vigorous action is being taken against evaders and in 1985-86 315,000 offenders were prosecuted or made out-of-court settlements. The revenue from fines, back-duty orders and penalties exceeds £21 million, more than double the 1982 figures. Further steps are being taken to improve enforcement, and we are considering the possible need for new legislation.

Motorway Deaths

23. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many motorway deaths were reported in the past 12 months in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the most recent 12 months for which data are available, November 1984 to October 1985, there were 219 motorway deaths in England and eight in Wales.

British Rail (Locomotive Procurement Policy)

26. Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any further plans to discuss locomotive procurement policy with British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: I know of no reason to do so at present.

Lorry Ban (London)

28. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has made into the effects of the Greater London council lorry ban.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is co-operating in the borough's review of the ban and assisting with finance for traffic counts.

National Bus Company

30. Mr. Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made with regard to the privatisation of the subsidiaries of the National Bus Company.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend received on 15 May the National Bus Company's Disposal programme, submitted under section 47 of the Transport Act 1985. He is considering it urgently and will make a statement as soon as possible. The NBC is currently negotiating the sale of a number of its subsidiaries.

Airline Competition

31. Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his policy towards airline competition in the light of the recent judgment of the European Court.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We welcome the judgment which confirms our view that air transport like other sectors is subject to the competition rules of the treaty of Rome. It underpins our efforts to bring real competition to European air services, preferably as part of a package of liberalising measures agreed by the EC Council of Ministers.

Motor Cyclists

33. Mr. Couchman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of motorcyclists passed the part I and II tests in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The proportions are as follows:

	Number of part I motorcycle tests conducted by				Number of part II motorcycle tests
	Department of Transport	Pass rate (per cent.)	Appointed training bodies	Pass rate (per cent.)	Department of Transport	Pass rate (per cent.)
1983	17,251	50	51,203	93	60,829	73·5
1984	10,495	50	56,597	94	62,700	72·5
1985	7,103	50	48,914	95	58,426	73

These pass rates compare with a pass rate for the single motorcycle L test of 53 per cent. in 1982, that is, before the introduction of the package of safety measures which included the two part test. Part I may be taken as part of a course of training with an appointed training body.

Aircraft (Hijacking)

34. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Transport what further steps are being taken to prevent the hijacking of aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have strengthened the arrangements at airports for searching passengers and their baggage; and I have issued directions under the Aviation Security Act to prevent Libyan trainee mechanics having access to non-public parts of airports or working on aircraft, and to prevent Libyan trainee pilots from flying solo. Our measures are being kept under constant review.

Channel Tunnel Bill

35. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the time table on the Channel Tunnel Bill circulated by his Department.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to my reply given to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) on 7 May 1986, at column 109.

National Bike Week

37. Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards the objectives of National Bike Week; and if he will make a statement.

45. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will participate in an appropriate manner in National Bike Week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have accepted an invitation to attend the launch of National Bike Week at the Royal Festival Hall on 22 May. We wholeheartedly endorse the efforts of the voluntary organisations who are associated with this event. We particularly welcome initiatives within National Bike Week which help to emphasise the measures needed to increase safety. We shall continue to share with local authorities the importance of taking account of cyclists' needs.

Merchant Fleet

38. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the size, by class, of the United Kingdom merchant fleet.

Mr. Ridley: The number and tonnage of vessels of 500 gross registered tons and over in the United Kingdom registered merchant fleet at 28 February 1986 by type of vessel was:

	Number	Thousand deadweight tons (dwt)
Passenger vessels	84	167
Cargo liners	85	951
Container vessels	51	1,354
Tramps	151	483
Bulk carriers	70	4,665
Tankers	236	10,089
All vessels	677	17,709

These figures exclude Government-owned vessels, offshore supply vessels, tugs, fishing vessels and other non-trading vessels.

Cars (Child Restraints)

39. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to encourage the fitting and wearing of child restraints in cars.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The promotional programme for child restraints in cars is as described in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) on 17 March 1986 at column 24. Since then, there have been more than 6,000 calls on the free telephone information number which the Department advertised. Additionally, stocks of the revised edition of the official leaflet "Protect your child in the car" have been exhausted. A reprint is in hand.

M25 (Injury Rates)

40. Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give preliminary figures for injury rates on the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Accident rates for the M25 can be readily estimated for the period 19 January to 17 September 1985. This was a continuous period between the opening of new sections of the orbital motorway. The estimated rates are 0·5 fatal, 1·6 serious and 6·8 slight accidents per 100 million vehicle kilometres. The figures for all motorways, in 1984, were 0·5 fatal accidents, 2·8 serious accidents and 9·3 slight accidents per 100 million vehicle kilometres. Direct comparisons between M25 figures and figures for all motorways in 1984 may be misleading. M25 traffic patterns have yet to stabilise and the M25 accidents rates are based upon traffic counts taken on a single day in June 1985.

Heavy Vehicles

41. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on initiatives to discourage heavy vehicles from using inadequate roads, particularly in urban areas.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: One of the Government's main priorities is to carry forward the development of a network of national roads that provide attractive and effective routes for heavy vehicles.

Our policy for lorry management on local roads was set out in circular 2/82. It encourages local authorities to introduce local lorry management measures where this would achieve environmental benefits having due regard to the costs imposed on operators.

The Department is now engaged in a joint study with the Civic trust and three county councils to test a range of low-cost lorry management measures with the aim of producing guidelines.

Motorway Construction Costs

42. Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost of constructing one mile of three-lane motorway now; and what was the equivalent cost in real terms in 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Motorway construction costs vary substantially, depending on factors such as location and the need for structures, so that average costs of construction per mile in individual years cannot usefully be compared.

The roads output index measures changes in the costs of building motorways and trunk roads. Between 1980-81 and 1985-86, it increased by only about 1 per cent. equivalent to a fall of about 25 per cent. in real terms as measured by the GDP deflator.

Goods Vehicles (Drivers' Hours)

44. Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the proposed changes to drivers' hours for goods vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Operators have welcomed the proposals because of the increased flexibility they would bring. The unions are concerned that more flexible arrangements would be harder to enforce and might lead to increased driver fatigue. After considering all the responses to consultation, we shall soon be laying draft regulations.

European Air Fares

46. Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is yet in a position to make a statement on the recent judgment of the European Court of Justice about arrangements for setting European air fares.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The recent ECJ judgment about European air fares confirms the Government's view that air transport, like other sectors, is subject to the competition rules of the treaty of Rome. Real competition should lead to lower air fares and the judgment strengthens our campaign for the introduction of real competition into European air services.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of London Regional Transport, he will seek from him an estimate of the additional sums of money received as a result of London underground ticket machines not providing the correct change; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend does not discuss detailed operational matters with the chairman of London Regional Transport. We approved last year investment of £135 million in a new ticketing system for the underground, which will involve replacing all the existing ticket machines.

Trunk Roads (Mobile Refreshment Vans)

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the placement of unauthorised signs advertising mobile refreshment vans in trunk road lay-bys.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall reply to my hon. Friend shortly.

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he plans to review the advice to local authorities given in departmental circular WMRT/5072/LB/1 on the establishment of mobile refreshment vans in trunk road lay-bys.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No new advice is proposed at present. We are keeping the situation under review and will take account of any representations made to us.

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the conditions on litter control applied to mobile refreshment vans trading in trunk road lay-bys.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It remains our general policy not to provide litter bins in trunk road laybys except where provision is made for picknicking. Removal of the bins in practice has led to less litter being left in laybys. In the absence of other facilities, we would expect the operators of any mobile refreshment vans allowed there to provide receptacles for litter likely to arise from the sale of refreshments. District councils can in any event impose conditions about litter when giving permits for roadside trading under the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provision) Act 1982.

Housing Development (Road Construction)

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will give the number of occasions, in each of the last three years, when his Department has insisted that housing developers use direct labour organisations for road construction;

(2) if he will give the number of occasions, in each of the last three years, when his Department has insisted on housing developers signing section 278 agreements under the Highways Act 1980.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is our general policy to ask developers to enter into agreements under section 278 and contribute to the costs, where a direct access to a trunk road is proposed and that access necessitates special roadworks, ie something more than verge/footway crossings and acceleration/deceleration lanes. Our agents, the county councils in the shires, normally design the works or approve the developer's design. They also supervise the works to ensure that they are up to the required standards. Unless the works are minor, the agent authority must put them out to competitive tender though it is open to the authority's own direct labour organisation to put in a tender. Exceptionally, we may agree to the developer carrying out the works himself, subject to the agent's supervision.

There have been five agreements made with housing developers over the past three years, as follows: 1983—1; 1984—1; 1985—3. Works in two cases (1984 and 1985) were carried out by direct labour organisations, the first through competitive tendering and the second because the works were minor in nature and the developer agreed to it.

Highways (Stopping-up and Diversion)

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the consultative paper reviewing the provisions in the Highways Act 1980 for the stopping-up and diversion of highways to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The consultative paper was issued on 3 April 1985. Copies have been placed in the Library. We are considering the responses to the paper, and I will make an announcement in due course.

Crossing Barrier (Cherry Hinton)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in view of the potential danger to local residents, he will now agree to the installation of a full depth automatic crossing barrier at the level crossing over Cherry Hinton High street in Cambridgeshire.

Mr. David Mitchell: The decision to authorise British Railways to install an automatic half-barrier system of protection at Cherry Hinton level crossing was taken after careful consideration of all the relevant facts and in the knowledge that such a system would provide an adequate level of safety for all the users of the crossing since it fully met the Department's published requirements for level crossings. The making of the statutory order to carry this decision into effect has been temporarily suspended because the Cambridge county and city councils have begun negotiations with British Railways about funding the difference in cost between an AHB and a manually controlled full barrier system operated and supervised with the aid of closed circuit television. I cannot prejudge the outcome of these negotiations. But if British Railways decide to withdraw their application for an AHB and submit a fresh one for an MCB this will also be carefully considered.

Airships (Nuisance)

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take action to reduce the nuisance caused by airships engaged on sightseeing flights.

Mr. Ridley: There are only three airships operating regularly in this country and so far they do not appear to be causing a serious environmental problem. I shall, however, keep the situation under review.

Ports (Ministerial Speech)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of his recent speech to the National Association of Port Employers.

Mr. Ridley: I have today placed copies in the Library.

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many men, women and children, respectively, have been killed and injured, respectively, on roads in the United Kingdom during the last five complete years for which records are available; and how many since 1 January.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The readily available date are for Great Britain 1981-84:

Road Casualties (Great Britain)

thousands

	Men		Women		Children
	Killed	Injured	Killed	Injured	Killed	Injured
1981	3·8	176	1·5	94	0·5	44
1982	4·0	196	1·6	103	0·6	53
1983	3·5	140	1·4	85	0·5	45
1984	3·6	170	1·4	98	0·5	47

1985 data will be published later this year in "Road Accidents Great Britain 1985".

M3

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he is satisfied with the condition of the road surface on the M3 between junctions 8 and 9 (a) southbound and (b) northbound, and whether he will make a statement;

(2) on what date he expects the M3 southbound between junctions 8 and 9 to be re-opened;

(3) what is the nature of the remedial works being carried out on the southbound carriageway of the M3 between junctions 8 and 9; and to what extent his Department is to meet the costs.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Work is being carried out as normal maintenance in accordance with the arrangements described in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) on 2 May. The costs, in the main, will be borne by the contractors.

The road surface meets the Department's specifications.

The southbound carriageway was re-opened to traffic on 15 May. Work on the northbound carriageway is due to start on 28 May after the spring bank holiday and will be completed in July.

Public Transport Staffs (Violence)

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport if the working group on violence to road passenger transport staff has yet published its report.

Mr. David Mitchell: The working group's report, "Assaults on Bus Staff and Measures to Prevent Such Assaults", is being published today, and I will place a copy in the Library.

Rail Sidings (Grants)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cumulative total amount of money made available under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 for grants towards the construction of private rail sidings in 1986-87; if he has any plans to increase the amount of money available for this purpose in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The total sum available for grants in 1986-87 under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 including Scotland and Wales and for similar grants under section 36 of the Transport Act 1981 for Waterway Freight Facilities is £7·3 million.

There are no plans to increase this sum which should be sufficient to cover the expected level of demand.

Post Office (Parcel Traffic)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary State for Transport what estimate he has made of the implications for road traffic levels of extra van or lorry miles consequent upon a loss of the Post Office parcel traffic from British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: On the basis of the Post Office's estimates, the addition to total HGV mileage will be less than one tenth of one per cent.

ENERGY

Plutonium

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if any plutonium produced in Central Electricity Generating Board's reactors and exported to any country has ever been used subsequently in weapons production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: It is on the public record that civil plutonium exported since 1971 has been sent for civil purposes to countries where international safeguards applied, and that in relation to plutonium sent prior to 1971 to the United States of America under the mutual defence agreement, Her Majesty's Government have been informed by the United States Government that it has not been used for weapons purposes.

Nuclear Safety Inspections

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all those United Kingdom nuclear facilities which, due to their joint civil/military purpose, are excluded to (a) international nuclear safeguards inspectors and (b) international nuclear safety inspectors from the International Atomic Energy Agency or Euratom.

Mr. Goodland: The only areas to which access to international nuclear safeguards inspectors has been limited are a part of the uranium processing and refining area at British Nuclear Fuels plc, Springfields and the Magnox reprocessing areas at BNF Sellafield. Discussions with Euratom on an inspection regime for the civil material in these areas are nearing completion.

There are no IAEA or Euratom safety inspectors.

British Gas

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Energy what safeguards are being offered to employees of British Gas in respect of their pension rights after the proposed denationalisation.

Mr. Peter Walker: British Gas has indicated to its employees that the benefits which are provided under its pension schemes will not be affected by privatisation.

National Coal Board

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many employees of the National Coal Board are under 20 years of age; and, of these, how many are employed or based at collieries.

Mr. David Hunt: I will ask the chairman of British Coal to write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Energy what studies have been carried out into the possible consequences in Britain of an accident involving a French nuclear reactor on the Channel coast leading to the loss of all or part of its inventory of radioactive materials; and what contingency plans exist for such an eventuality.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom has a formal agreement with France for the exchange of information in the event of an accident at a nuclear installation. The relevant parts of our own civil nuclear emergency plans would be implemented in the event of any risk of significant radioactivity reaching this country from France.

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements have been made with the French Government for the timely passage of information in the event of an accident to a French nuclear reactor.

Mr. Goodlad: An agreement with France on exchanges of information in the event of emergencies occurring in one of the two states which could have radiological consequences for the other state entered into force on 18 July 1983. This agreement, which took the form of an exchange of notes, was published as Cmnd. 9041.

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Energy if any consideration has been given to the establishment of a fund from which property owners, farmers and other individuals affected by a possible accident to a French or other foreign nuclear reactor could seek redress for loss of life or property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Arrangements for compensation to third parties arising out of nuclear accidents are governed by the 1960 Paris convention on third party liability in the field of nuclear energy and the supplementary 1963 Brussels convention. These are given effect in the United Kingdom by the Nuclear Installations Act 1965, as amended.

Under the terms of the conventions (to which both the United Kingdom and France are signatories) the operator of a nuclear installation is liable up to certain limits for nuclear damage caused by his installation. Beyond these limits, further liabilities up to an internationally agreed limit are met by signatory Governments.

Hinkley Point

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will now take steps to ensure that the full report of the Central Electricity Generating Board's board of inquiry into the accident at Hinkley Point on 29 November should be made available to the public.

Mr. Goodlad: I welcome the publication of the conclusions of the thorough investigation which has been carried out by the internal CEGB inquiry team into this incident, in which no worker or member of the public was injured or subjected to detectable radiation. It has resulted in four recommendations relating to the design and handling of components which the CEGB are now implementing with the agreement of the nuclear installations inspectorate.

Responsibility for safety of nuclear sites falls by law on the operators of those sites. It is not the CEGB's practice to release the full record of internal investigations of this kind. To do so could affect the willingness of staff to participate fully and openly in such inquiries. Information on the incident is in the Health and Safety Executive's "Quarterly Statement on Nuclear Incidents, Fourth Quarter, 1985".

Pipeline Flow-bundle Assembly Capability

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy towards the establishment of a pipeline flow-bundle assembly capability in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: A pipeline flow-bundle assembly capability is already established in the United Kingdom.

Advisory Committee on the Safety of Nuclear Installations

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Energy when the Advisory Committee on the Safety of Nuclear Installations last met; and what major technical issues it has examined in the recent past.

Mr. Goodlad: The Advisory Committee on the Safety of Nuclear Installations last met on 9 May 1986. At that meeting, the committee discussed the Chernobyl accident. In the recent past, the committee has examined, among other things, various aspects of safety relating to the PWR, AGR and Magnox reactors; safety assessment principles for reactors and nuclear chemical plant; decommissioning; long-term safety reviews of Magnox stations; siting policy and emergency arrangements and the work of the nuclear installations inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive.

PRIME MINISTER

Binary Chemical Weapons

Mr. George Robertson asked the Prime Minister if she has received any approaches from other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries, seeking the United Kingdom's agreement to basing binary chemical weapons in the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: No.

Chernobyl

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 310, if she will now seek from the Atomic Energy Authority an account of contacts between scientists employed by the authority and their Russian counterparts following the Chernobyl incident.

The Prime Minister: As far as I have been able to ascertain, there have been no direct contacts between scientists employed by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and their Russian counterparts.

Bilderberg Conference

Mr. Nellist asked the Prime Minister what was the cost to public funds of her attendance at the Bilderberg conference.

The Prime Minister: My attendance at the Bilderberg conference at Gleneagles was combined with a visit to the North Sands shipyard in Sunderland. The total cost of travel for myself and my staff was £2,228. It is not practical to break down the separate travel costs incurred on the Sunderland and Gleneagles sections of the visit. The costs of my stay at the conference itself were met by the organisers.

Dr. Kurt Waldheim

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her reply on 15 May to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, she will now make it her policy in the light of the recent new allegations about the disappearance of British subjects in the Balkans during the Second World War, to seek from the United Nations copies of all documents in their possession relating to Dr. Kurt Waldheim's wartime activities; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It would not be appropriate to consider this before the Ministry of Defence search of military records is complete.

Public Record Office (Missing Documents)

Mr. Janner asked the Prime Minister why the following documents are missing from the Public Record Office, namely, JIC (42) 507(0), JIC (43) 285(0) 3 August 1943, DEFE 3/573, CX/MSS 1250/T13, 1350/T2, 1588 paragraph 29, CX MSS 1421 paragraph 46, 1477 paragraph 33, 1986 paragraph 46; whether any of these documents refer, directly or indirectly, to Dr. Kurt Waldheim or to German Army Group E; and whether she will make copies of these documents available to the hon. Member for Leicester, West.

The Prime Minister pursuant to her reply, 16 May 1986, c. 566]: One of the documents referred to (DEFE 3/573) is available on film in the Public Record Office. The remainder fall within the terms of the general approval given by the Lord Chancellor in 1967, under the proviso to Section 3(4) of the Public Records Acts for the retention of documents relating to security and intelligence matters. It is not the practice to disclose any part of the contents of such records.

WALES

Morfa Bychan (Holiday Houses)

47. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he received a formal request from, or on behalf of, Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor for a meeting with himself, the hon. Member for Caernarfon and representatives of that council, to discuss the implications of a planning consent given in 1964 for 700 holiday homes on land at Morfa Bychan; on what date a full written reply was made by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The letter from the clerk of Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor requesting a meeting was received in the Welsh Office on 24 April. An answer was given on 9 May and this was followed by a detailed written response on 16 May.

Women's Refuges

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many women at present living in women's refuges in Wales have been living there for 10 weeks or more, in each of the local authorities areas in Wales;

(2) how many women live in women's refuges in Wales at present; and what was the figure for each year since 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Battered Women (Rehousing)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are his Department's guidelines to local authorities in Wales for rehousing women who have left home due to domestic violence, and who are living in temporary accommodation.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Gas Industry

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the effect of the implementation of the Gas Bill on (i) the number of gas showrooms and (ii) employment in the industry in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The provisions of the Gas Bill do not directly affect the number of gas showrooms or employment in the industry in Wales. These will, as now, be matters for the commercial judgment of management.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are at pesent employed by Nwy Cymru/ Wales Gas; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: 4,230 people were employed by Nwy Prydain (Cymru) British Gas (Wales) at 31 March 1986; the corresponding figures since 1979 were as follows:—

	Number
1979	4,647
1980	4,828
1981	4,990
1982	4,974
1983	4,797
1984	4,649
1985	4,342

Housing

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was capital expenditure per capita on housing in Wales in 1984-85 in each of the district authority areas; what are the provisional figures for 1985-86; and what are the projected figures for 1986-87.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State on 17 April 1986 at column 424-6. Figures for 1985-86 and 1986-87 will be available soon, and I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total labour force in employment in Wales; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The total number of employees in employment in Wales in December 1985 was 905,000; the corresponding figures for each year since 1979 were as follows:

Figures at December each year

1979	1,033
1980	966
1981	921
1982	900

Source: Department of Employment Quarterly Estimates

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total employed labour force in (a) the private sector and (b) the public sector in Wales; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Figures are not, at present, available in the format requested. My Department is, however, in the process of collecting information on employment in the public sector in Wales and figures will be made available later this year, when I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total employed labour force in local government in Wales in (a) education, (b) social services, (c) police and (d) other; and in each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information in the form requested for the years 1979 to 1985 is published in "Welsh Local Government Financial Statistics, No. 9, 1985", copies of which are available in the Library. Information relating to March 1986 is presently being collected and will be available in June ofthis year.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total employed labour force in central Government in Wales; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Thirty five thousand four hundred people were employed in central Government in Wales at 1 January 1985. This includes both industrial and non-industrial civil servants. The corresponding figures at 1 January for each year from 1979 were as follows:

	000's
1979	40·7
1980	39·1
1981	38·8
1982	37·9
1983	37·3
1984	35·9

Rates

Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of total personal disposable income in Wales was expended on domestic rates in the years 1956-57, 1979-80 and in 1984-85.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information is not readily available for 1956-57. For the other two years the percentages were:—

1979-80, 1·48 per cent.
1984-85, 1·63 per cent.

Domestic rate poundages have been used net of rate rebates. Personal disposable income is available only by calendar year, so the 1979 and 1984 figures respectively have been used.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was total (a) central Government and (b) local authority capital expenditure in each year from 1979-80 to 1985-86 expressed in cash and in real terms, taking 1979-80 as 100.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Gross central Government and local authority expenditure within my responsibility for the years 1979-80 to 1985-86, taking 1979-80 as 100, is estimated to have been as follows:

(a) Central Government

£ million

	(i) Cash terms	(ii) Real terms
1979-80 outturn	100	100
1980-81 outturn	127	107

Radiation Monitoring

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report those locations, institutions or facilities in Wales which have a capability of measuring the incidence of strontium 90 and of plutonium 239; and from which of these his Department has obtained information on the incidence of these isotopes following the Chernobyl nuclear accident.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the locations of the two areas of highest rainfall in Wales from which samples of rainfall have been analysed to detect levels of radiation; and if he will publish a full record of the date and time of readings, and of the level of each of the various forms of radioactivity which were recorded, together with the normal level and the lower emergency reference level for each such type of radioactivity.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Nuclear Power Stations, Gwynedd

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now ensure that emergency procedure instructions indicating what local residents should do in the case of a major nuclear accident at either Trawsfynydd or Wylfa nuclear power stations in Gwynedd be issued to every household within 30 miles of either nuclear power station.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Drug Trials

Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Wales if, pursuant to the answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 389, concerning drug trials in south Wales, he will now investigate the practice of Dr. Bali of Porth, Rhondda, where practitioners are receiving £150 for conducting drug trials, patients consent is not being sought for their participation in the trials and doctors are signing patient consent forms on behalf of patients without their permission.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will outline current provision in Wales for screening of breast cancer; and how this compares with provision in England and Scotland.

Mr. Mark Robinson: There is currently no national breast cancer screening programme in Wales, England or Scotland. On 2 July 1985 the Government established an expert working group to consider the situation concerning breast cancer screening by mammography and it is expected to report later this year.

Chernobyl Nuclear Accident

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received alleging lack of co-ordination by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in Wales following the increase in radioactivity arising from the Chernobyl nuclear accident.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have received no such representations.

National Parks (Military Use)

Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the implications for local residents and tourism of the use of national parks in Wales for military training.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I am aware of the concern expressed over the military use of land within national parks, but such use is kept to the minimum necessary.

Dwyfor District Council

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if his Deprtment has monitored the performance of Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor in dealing with applications for housing renovation grants within their area over the past seven years; and if he will make a statement on the number of outstanding applications in that area which have not received their grant.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Over the past seven years information on the number of renovation grants approved by Dwyfor district council has been collected by my Department and is as follows:

	Number of grants
1979	101
1980	50
1981	141
1982	528
1983	758
1985	79

Since 1984 the information collected has also included the number of grant applications outstanding. At 31 March 1986, Dwyfor district council had 652 valid grant applications outstanding. The council's housing capital allocation was enhanced by 21 per cent. in 1986-87 to help towards the reduction of its renovation grants backlog.

St. David's Hospital, Cardiff

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to increase the financial resources available to St. David's hospital in Cardiff, West; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The allocation of resources to St. David's hospital is a matter for South Glamorgan health authority to decide.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Assembly

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received regarding the future of the Northern Ireland Assembly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I am considering carefully the views expressed in the House, on 1 May at columns 1087-88. I have received no other representations recently. I remain concerned about the Assembly's deliberate neglect of its statutory functions and about the behaviour of some Assembly Members in the Parliament buildings on 15 May.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to the reply of 6 May, Official Report, column 36, how much of the £2·8 million already received under the non-quota section of the European regional development fund has been allocated to each of the district council areas along the United Kingdom frontier with the Republic of Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: Of the £2·8 million already received, allocations to each of the seven district council areas involved have been as follows:

Armagh	450,000
Derry	403,215
Dungannon	280,588
Fermanagh	667,852
Newry and Mourne	662,833
Omagh	241,990
Strabane	111,285

Further Education

Mr. John Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what information he has on the cost per Burnham unit for each of the further education colleges in Northern Ireland for each of the past 10 years;

(2) what information he has on the accommodation: Burnham unit ratio for each of the further education colleges in Northern Ireland in each of the past 10 years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. John Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the allocation for teachers' salaries from his Department to each of the further education colleges in Northern Ireland at present and for each of the past three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The cost of the Department in respect of full-time staff is as follows:—

Note:
Figures for 1986-87 are not available

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what information he has on the staff: Burnham unit ratio in each of the further education colleges in Northern Ireland in each of the past 10 years;

(2) what information he has on the full-time/part-time ratio of teaching staff in each further education college in Northern Ireland at present and in each of the past three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Although none of the ratios is based on Burnham units, information is available on the number of full-time and part-time staff and the Burnham unit totals. I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Leisure Centre (Armagh City)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to why no staff have been appointed to work in the new Armagh city leisure centre; if the opening of this centre is now behind schedule; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The supervision of the contract, appointment of staff and management of the centre is the direct responsibility of the district council.

Security Forces (Re-housing)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the security forces have (a) requested to be re-housed following acts of intimidation, and (b) been re-housed since 1 March; and on what basis any requests have been turned down.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 6 May 1986, c. 37]: From the Loyalist day of action on 3 March to 7 May, 65 families have been re-housed. The decision to grant a request for re-housing by members of the security forces is primarily a matter for the Chief Constable of the RUC and the General Officer Commanding the Army in Northern Ireland. Their decision will take account of the nature of the threat and of the circumstances surrounding each individual case. Decisions are made on the basis of a detailed threat assessment taking each case on its merits whether or not a request for re-housing has been made.

Intimidation

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many acts of intimidation were carried out against members of the security forces by (a) Loyalist groups, and (b) non-Loyalist groups since 1 March.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 6 May 1986, c. 37]: It is not possible to state the motive in every case of intimidation involving members of the security forces and their families. From 3 March to 7 May approximately 365 reported incidents of intimidation are believed to have been perpetrated by Loyalists and a further 10 by non-Loyalist groups or individuals.

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Trotter asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums have been made available from public funds to Harland and Wolff since June 1979, analysed under appropriate headings.

Dr. Boyson: The following table lists the financial assistance provided to Harland and Wolff from all Government sources in each of the financial years from May 1979 until March 1986.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Jaguar plc

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will explain the reasons for the provision of the golden share in the sale of Jaguar plc.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The special rights redeemable share ("golden share"), was issued on the privatisation of Jaguar plc in August 1984. It gives its holder, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, the right to veto alterations to provisions in Jaguar's articles of association limiting individual shareholdings to 15 per cent., and thus protects Jaguar from the threat of unwelcome takeover bids in its formative years as an independent company. The golden share will lapse on 31 December 1990.

Information Technology Centres

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the number of information technology centres now in operation, including as a separate figure those located in Scotland; and if he will make a statement regarding their continuing progress.

Mr. Pattie: One hundred and seventy-five ITECs are currently in operation, of which 23 are situated in Scotland.

The majority of centres have received their full entitlement of Department of Trade and Industry pump-priming support of £75,000 payable over three years. My Department is continuing to support the programme, however, by funding a nationwide marketing organisation which will help ITECs with revenue generation.

Product Liability

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will include no-fault liability for road accident victims in the product liability legislation to be introduced to comply with the European Economic Community directive on product liability approved by Parliament in July 1985.

Mr. Howard: No. We do not consider that this would be appropriate. The EC directive is concerned only with liability for defective products; we plan to introduce legislation to implement it as soon as possible, but we do not intend to extend this legislation to cover liability for road accidents.

EC (Trade Statistics)

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value of exports to, and imports from, the European Economic Community broken down into the categories oil, manufactures, and other, annually for 1980 to 1985 inclusive and for the quarters 1985 (1) to 1986(1), inclusive.

Mr. Butcher: The information is in the following table:

United Kingdom Trade with the European Community*
BOP Basis £ billion. Not seasonally adjusted

	Exports			Imports

Nissan Cars

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with Nissan United Kingdom about including 1986-87 Washington-produced cars as additional production over and above the present agreed import quota.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The treatment of production at Nissan's Washington plant in the first phase of the project remains as set out in the heads of agreement between my Department and Nissan dated 1 February 1984. Exploratory talks are taking place with Nissan on its future plans for the project.

British Shipbuilders

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to the answer of 6 May, Official Report, column 31, if he will list the public sector orders for which he expects British Shipbuilders to compete in the financial years 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Morrison: British Shipbuilders has been invited to bid for the following public sector orders:—

Fisheries protection vessel for the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries, Scotland.

A new passenger/vehicle ferry for service to the Scottish west coast islands. The customer is Caledonian Macbrayne.

Decisions on these orders are expected soon.

British Shipbuilders would be expected to bid for any further public sector orders.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of new world orders for merchant ships were won by British Shipbuilders in each year since 1979; and what is the latest figure for 1986.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide a breakdown of Government support to British Shipbuilders since 1979, showing for (a) merchant ships and (b) warships and other work the amount spent in each year on (i) capital investment and (ii) other support.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The available information is as follows:

	Capital Investment (£ million)	Public Dividend Capital/Loans (£ million)	Intervention Fund (£ million) (merchant shipbuilding)
1979-80	18	181	31
1980-81	17	110	40
1981-82	37	107	46
1982-83	43	70	44
1983-84	48	*275	34
1984-85 (i) warship	84	78
(ii) merchant	12	*125	18
1985-86 (i) warship (est)	41	32
(ii) merchant (est)	17	*35	22

* Includes the costs of the sale of the Scott Lithgow yard.

Information on the breakdown of investment and public dividend capital between warshipbuilding and merchant shipbuilding is not available prior to 1984-85.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the duration of the term of office of Mr. Phillip Hares as chairman of British Shipbuilders.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Secretary of State appointed Phillip Hares as chairman and chief executive of British Shipbuilders for a term of three years from 1 May 1986.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the payments made each year, including bonuses, to Mr. Graham Day in his capacity as Chairman of British Shipbuilders.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information is as follows:

Financial year	Payments made (including bonus payments) £
1983-84	58,055
1984-85	101,298
1985-86	109,415

Mr. Day became chairman on 1 September 1983.

These payments do not include Mr. Day's performance-related bonus payment for the period from 1 July 1985, which has yet to be decided.

Shipbuilding Work Force

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many employees there were in merchant shipbuilding in (i) Britain and (ii) other European Economic Community countries in (a) 1979 and (b) the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Morocco and Algeria

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what has been the total volume of imports from the United Kingdom to Morocco, and imports from Morocco, including invisibles and tourism, in the years 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what has been the total volume of exports from the United Kingdom to Algeria, and imports from Algeria, including invisibles in the years 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Figures relating to volume of trade, and invisible trade and tourism with individual countries, are not available. Visible trade figures by value for the five years 1981 to 1985 are published in table 1B of the appropriate volumes of the "United Kingdom Overseas Trade Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library.

United States Export Denials List

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he takes to publicise in the United Kingdom, or cause his officials to publicise or use in the United Kingdom, the United States export denials list; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: None. British companies which appear on the list in the course of legitimate trading should contact the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what status he accords to the United States export denials list in the United Kingdom in relation to its use by his officials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 27 March at column 53 and to the replies given by my hon. Friend the Minister fo Trade on 27 March and 21 April at columns 611 and 8-9

EC (Consumer Products)

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Trade an Industry if there have been any developments concernin the proposed European Community system of informatio on accidents involving consumer products; and if he wi make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I am happy to report that a Counc decision of 22 April 1986 approved this project. Th European system will be based largely on our ow successful home accident surveillance system, which i now on its tenth year of operation. At the time of it inception, HASS was unique in Europe and, with th exception of the United States, in the world. We hav provided the European Commission with considerabl help and expertise to enable this valuable project t proceed. It will be of great help in determining policy o home accident prevention and consumer product safety i the Community.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Meacher asked the Paymaster General (1) why hi Department has issued circular 30/1986, dated 15 Apri 1986, to regional, area benefit, benefit and local manager and regional finance officers, prohibiting advice t redundant mineworkers on signing on to receiv unemployment benefit;

(2) how many times, and in what circumstances, in th last year his Department has issued instructions not t advise people seeking advice on when to sign on a unemployment benefit offices or on whether or not t claim unemployment benefit.

Mr. Lang: The circular emphasises standing instructions that advice should be confined to an explanation of the various conditions governing the payment of benefit but stresses that it is for the individual to decide whether or not to claim.

This is the only occasion such a reminder has been issued in the last year but similar general instructions were issued annually in the past until incorporated into standing instructions.

The date that a claim begins determines which tax year's national insurance contributions are taken into account to assess the claim. However, details of national insurance records are not immediately available to staff in benefit offices and in the absence of this information such advice on whether or not a claim should be made could be misleading.

Langbaurgh

Mr. Holt asked the Paymaster General what new measures he proposes for Langbaurgh to reduce unemployment.

Mr. Lang: Langbaurgh will benefit from the new package of measures announced in the Budget to accelerate the growth of enterprise, boost employment opportunities for the young and help the long-term unemployed find work. It will also benefit from the measures to assist the north-east announced on 14 May by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Labour Mobility

Mr. Holt asked the Paymaster General what proposals he has to assist in the mobility of labour.

Mr. Lang: The Manpower Services Commission operates the job search scheme which helps unemployed people with the costs of travelling to job interviews. My right hon. and noble Friend and I are considering a proposal from the Commission to replace this by a new travel to interview scheme, recently piloted in MSC's northern region, which is more cost-effective and simpler to administer. My right hon. and noble Friend and I will write to my hon. Friend once that decision is taken.

Restart Programme

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General how many of the long-term unemployed obtained jobs as a result of the restart programme pilot project at Ealing; and how many Manpower Services Commission staff were employed on this project.

Mr. Lang: Between 6 January and 9 May 1986, 220 people left the unemployment register in Ealing after being counselled as part of the restart programme. The precise number who obtained jobs is not known. Ten Manpower Services Commission staff were employed on all aspects of the pilot project at Ealing during that period.

Community Industry Schemes

Mr. Rowe asked the Paymaster General how many community industry schemes have been monitored in the last 18 months by his Department or by the Manpower Services Commission; what proportion of the total schemes this number represents; what general conclusions as to the quality of community industry schemes he has reached; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Between 1 November 1984 and 30 April 1986, 79 monitoring visits were made to the 57 community industry scheme area units by officials of the Manpower Services Commission. I am generally satisfied with the standard of performance being achieved by the area units and that the needs of the young people covered are being met.

Mr. Rowe asked the Paymaster General what was the total cost to central Government funds of the community industry scheme in 1975 and in 1985; and how much per young employee that represented.

Mr. Lang: The figures provided are for financial years. In 1975-76 the average number of young employees on the payroll at month ends was 1,829 and the total cost of the community industry scheme was £3,224,000. In 1985-86 the average number of young employees was 6,754 and the estimated cost of the scheme was £24,186,000.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Rowe asked the Paymaster General what was the cost per YTS place in 1985.

Mr. Trippier: Expenditure information is usually given by financial year. The average cost per filled place of one year YTS in 1985-86 is estimated at around £2,800 per year.

Wages Councils

Mr. Madden asked the Paymaster General how many wages inspectors and other wages council staff were employed in each wages inspectorate division in each year since 1975.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Madden asked the Paymaster General how many wages inspectorate and other wages council staff he estimates will be employed in each division after the Wages Bill is enacted.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is given in the following table.

Wages inspectorate staffing
Proposed number of posts at 31 March 1987

Division	Outdoor Wages Inspectors	Other Wages Inspectorate staff	Total
London	8	8½	16½
South East	7	7½	14½

North West	11	9½	20½
Yorks and Humberside	7	7	14
Northern	5	4	9
Scotland	7	7	14
Total	71	68	139

Mr. Madden asked the Paymaster General what percentage of wages inspectorate inquiries concern (a) holiday pay, (b) workers under 21 years and (c) payment in recognition of years service in each year since 1975.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is not available.

However, an analysis of inquiries received from employers and workers between July and December 1981 showed that 47·6 per cent. related to holidays and holiday pay.

Mr. Madden asked the Paymaster General how many wages council prosecutions have taken place in each wages inspectorate division each year since 1975.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is given in the following table:

Benefits (Fraud)

Mr. Evans asked the Paymaster General (1) how many of those presently claiming unemployment benefit he estimates are doing so fraudulently; and on what evidence this figure is based;

(2) how many self-employed people he estimates are claiming unemployment benefit fraudulently.

Mr. Lang: There is a good deal of public concern about the abuse of unemployment benefits and we have substantially increased the resources allocated to the detection of fraud. We do not know how many of those presently claiming are doing so fraudulently, nor how many self-employed people are claiming fraudulently, but in 1981 Sir Derek Rayner, in his report on payment of benefits to unemployed people, estimated the figure to be a minimum of 8 per cent.

Mr. Evans asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will list the nine areas in which pilot schemes have been conducted by his Department's fraud teams into the extent of fraud by the long-term unemployed;

(2) if he will summarise the findings of his Department's fraud teams following the completion of nine pilot schemes looking into claims for benefit made by the long-term unemployed;

(3) how many people, previously claiming benefit as long-term unemployed, ended their claims when invited to interviews by members of his Department's fraud teams in each of their recently conducted pilot schemes.

Mr. Lang: Since 6 January the Manpower Services Commission has been operating pilot schemes to help long-term unemployed people in nine areas. The pilots were introduced for a six-month trial period and are still in operation. The nine areas involved are:

Billingham
Crawley
Dundee
Ealing
Huddersfield
Plymouth
Port Talbot
Preston
Stoke

Contrary to recent press reports, the pilot schemes are not a fraud exercise and do not involve the Department's fraud teams. Their main purpose is to invite all those unemployed for more than a year to an interview with Manpower Services Commission staff at which their employment difficulties can be discussed in detail and they can be offered a positive opportunity of some kind to help them back into employment.

In the period 6 January to 9 May, 3,738 people in the pilot areas have ceased to claim unemployment related benefits after being contacted by the Manpower Services Commission. The figures for each pilot area are as follows:

	Number
Billingham	204
Crawley	320
Dundee	488
Ealing	409
Huddersfield	372
Plymouth	400
Port Talbot	402
Preston	428
	3,738

The pilots are not due to finish until the end of June, but the main finding so far is that 90 per cent. of those interviewed have been offered positive help in getting back into employment.

Benefits

Mr. Evans asked the Paymaster General how many claims were made against the Department of Employment for non-payment or underpayment of benefit in 1985; what was the total amount of money involved; how many claims were unsuccessful; and how much money, in terms of payments not made, was saved.

Mr. Lang: Queries made by benefit claimants about non-payment or under-payment of unemployment benefit are usually decided locally and are not centrally recorded. However, claimants who have been disallowed benefit by independent adjudication officers have a right of appeal to a Social Security Appeal Tribunal. In the first six months of 1985 approximately 17,000 such appeals were made and nearly 6,000 were unsuccessful. Information is not yet available for the second half of 1985.

The amount of benefit involved is not quantifiable.

Radiation

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Paymaster General in what ways the dose limits for occupational exposure to ionising radiation for individual body organs specified in the Ionising Radiation Regulations 1985 differ from the recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The dose limits for individual organs for employees aged 18 years or over as specified in the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 do not differ from the recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Paymaster General what will be the maximum permitted exposure arising from the exposure of a single organ of the body of a worker to ionising radiation.

Mr. Trippier: The dose limits for individual organs depend on the organ concerned, for example:

	mSv/year
gonads	200
breast	330
red bone marrow	420
lung	420
thyroid	500
bone surfaces	500

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Paymaster General what would be the maximum annual permissible dose of ionising radiation to the following organs, if exposed singly, that would be consistent with the recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection that the whole body effective dose equivalent not exceed 50 mSv/yr: lung, thyroid, bone, gonads, breast and red marrow.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is:

	mSv
Lung	420
Thyroid	1,670
Bone surfaces	1,670
Gonads	200
Breast	330
Red marrow	420

In practice, the limit for the thyroid and for bone surfaces would be the individual organ dose limit, namely 500 mSv in one year.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Paymaster General whether, in the event of a worker receiving a dose of 500 mSv to his or her lungs as permitted under schedule II to the Ionising Radiation Regulation 1985 a whole body effective dose equivalent greater than 50 mSv, as permitted under the same schedule of the regulations will result; whether a similar organ dose of 500 mSv to breast, red marrow or gonads would also result in a whole body exposure greater than 50 mSv effective dose equivalent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: A 500 mSv dose to the lungs, breast, red marrow or gonads would result in a whole body effective dose equivalent greater than 50 mSv.

However, in practice, the overriding whole body effective dose equivalent limit would be reached first.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Bright asked the Paymaster General what plans he has to promote the new loan guarantee scheme in general and to the banks and accountants in particular.

Mr. Trippier: Under its new terms the loan guarantee scheme will be very attractive to eligible small firms. Details of the scheme have been circulated to small firms advisers and included in the "Action for Jobs" booklet. My Department is discussing the promotion of the scheme with banks and accountancy bodies.

Unemployed Claimants (Availability Test)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North of 18 March, Official Report, column 178, he will now make available the findings of the review on the operation of the availability test for unemployed claimants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: This information will not be available until testing and evaluation of the pilot scheme has been completed. The results will be available in the autumn.

Newham

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General what is the total number of people unemployed in the borough of Newham for the last year for which figures are available; and what is the number of people unemployed who are (a) under 25 years old, (b) 25 to 40 years old and (c) 41 to 60 years old.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library.

Unemployed claimants in the London borough of Newham

	11 April 1985	11 July 1985	10 October 1985	9 January 1986
Under 25 years	6,363	6,334	6,623	6,646
25 to 39	5,416	5,387	5,481	5,763
40 to 59	4,390	4,477	4,515	4,714
TOTAL UNEMPLOYED	16,952	16,787	17,217	17,664

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General how many people in the London borough of Newham have been unemployed for (a) less than six months, (b) six months to one year, (c) one year to two years and (d) over two years.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The table gives the requested information for 9 January 1986.

Unemployed claimants in the London borough of Newham

	Number
Under six months	6,908
Six months to one year	3,117
One year to two years	3,086
Over two years	4,553

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General how many people under the age of 25 years have been unemployed for longer than one year in the London borough of Newham.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. On 9 January 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age and duration is available, the number of unemployed claimants in the London borough of Newham aged under 25 years who have been unemployed for more than 12 months was 1,980.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report the rate of unemployment in each parliamentary constituency in the United Kingdom, showing also the rate (a) under 20 years, (b) under 25 years and (c) over 25 years.

Mr. Lang: Unemployment rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas. Unemployment rates by age are not calculated below the national level.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Mr. Craigen asked the Paymaster General what is the current establishment of Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate; and what were the numbers in post in 1983 and 1980.

Mr. Trippier: On 1 May 99 nuclear installations inspectors were employed in Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate. On 1 May 1983 there were 97 and on 1 May 1980 there were 86.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Magistrates

Mr. Hoyle asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the number of magistrates who reside in each ward, on a ward by ward basis; and what percentage this is of the total magistrates on each bench in the petty sessional districts of Wigan, St. Helens, Halton and Bury, respectively.

Mr. Tebbit: The figures for which the hon. Member asks are not immediately available, and would need to be compiled. I will therefore reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Elderly People (Severe Weather)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what surveys have been undertaken by his Department as to the effect on elderly people of the severe weather of last winter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis) on 25 March, at column 462, we are considering the results of a study by officials of recent hypothermia statistics.

Glasgow Resettlement Unit

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the implications for his policy concerning the Glasgow resettlement unit of the recent report sent to him by the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill; and what consideration he is giving to the points raised concerning its provision of services and accommodation for single homeless men.

Mr. Major: The report on the Glasgow resettlement unit, which was drawn up by the Council of Civil Service Unions, will be considered in the light of the recommendations made by the regional review team which has been looking at the needs of and provision for single homeless people in Scotland. The outcome of our regional consultation exercise, of which the Scotland review forms a part, will be discussed at a national resettlement conference on 3 June, after which we will decide on the next steps.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people of working age are now in receipt of supplementary benefit; what was the number in May 1979; and what is the percentage increase.

Mr. Major: The latest information available is as follows:

	(Thousands)
May 1979	1,157
February 1985	3,026
Percentage increase	162

Source: "Quarterly Statistical Enquiries."

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are claiming supplementary benefit in the London borough of Newham for the latest date available.

Mr. Major: The London borough of Newham is covered by three of the Department's offices, Canning Town, Plaistow and Woodgrange Park, but their boundaries are not conterminous.

The total number of people receiving supplementary benefit from these offices on 6 May 1986 was 33,592.

Source: 100 per cent. count of live cases in action.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library figures showing how many people were in receipt of supplementary benefit in each of the years 1979 to 1985; and what percentage change in these figures occurred between 1979 and 1985. in each of the places listed in the letter to him from the hon. Member for Peckham of 29 January.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 26 February c. 609]: A table has been placed in the Library showing the numbers of people receiving supplementary benefit in May 1979 and each subsequent year until 1985 together with the percentage changes in these numbers during that period, as requested in the hon. Member's letter of 29 January 1986.

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of claimants in receipt of supplementary benefit in the Greater Manchester area, by constituency; of these, how many are pensioners, families with children, and young single people under the age of 25 years; and of each of these threecategories, what information he has regarding additional requirements which are included in their supplementary benefit assessment, by type and average amount of additional requirements.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 24 March, 1986 c. 380]: The information is not available in the precise form requested as constituency boundaries are not conterminous with local office boundaries. The tables show the figures available for the Greater Manchester area as a whole. The figures provided refer to the position in December 1983, the latest details available.

Table A
*Number of claimants

Maternity Benefits

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what additional revenue is expected from the taxation of statutory maternity pay.

Mr. Newton: About £15 million in 1987-88, rising to about £20 million in 1988-89.

Fleming Memorial Hospital

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the proposed closure of the Fleming memorial hospital, Newcastle upon Tyne, outlining the criteria used to reach such a decision.

Mr. Hayhoe: Newcastle health authority will shortly be considering comments made on its proposal to transfer services from the Fleming memorial hospital. If the proposal is subsequently referred to me, I shall consider the case on its merits.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what has been the change in waiting lists for in-patient hospital treatment in each of the health regions in England and Wales in 1979, 1982 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is given in the table.

* Figures for Thames regions for 1979 are not strictly comparable with those for 1982 and 1985 because of changes made in the NHS reorganisation of 1 April 1982.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time for urgent and non-urgent consultations, respectively, in ear, nose and throat, gynaecology and orthopaedics, respectively, in the United Kingdom as a whole and in the Southed health authority, respectively, at the most recent dates for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend the information he seeks. Information on waiting time for out-patient consultation is not collected centrally. He may wish to write to the chairman of the Southend district health authority for the information requested. Figures for the rest of the United Kingdom are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how men, women and children, respectively, have been treated in hospitals in England, Scotland and Wales, respectively, for injuries arising out of road accidents during each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. and learned Member all the information he seeks. The information collected centrally for England is given in the table. Figures for the rest of Great Britain are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales.

† Aged 0 to 14 years.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what he estimates to be the cost of hospital treatment for people injured on Britain's roads during the last 12 months.

Mr. Whitney: In 1983, the latest year for which the relevant statistics are available, the cost to the hospital service of treating all road accident victims is estimated at about £105 million for England. A comparable figure for the whole of Britain is not available.

Personal Injuries Scheme

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons he expects to be affected by the amendments to (a) articles 23 and 48 and (b) article 25A of the Personal Injuries (Civilians) Scheme 1983, proposed in the Personal Injuries (Civilians) Amendment Scheme 1986 (S.I., 1986, No. 628); and what will be the effect on public expenditure of (a) and (b).

Mr. Major: The personal injuries (civilians) scheme provides for the payment of pensions and allowances, similar to those made to service men under the war pensions scheme, to civilians who were disabled or died as a result of enemy action during the 1939-45 war. The amendments remove some ambiguities in the legislation that have recently come to light. The number of people affected will be minimal, as will the effect on public expenditure.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were admitted to mental institutions suffering from schizophrenia in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985; and what records are available of the breakdown by (a) age, (b) sex and (c) ethnic origin.

Mr. Whitney: The available information on numbers of admissions is given in the table. Analyses are also available by age and sex, but not by ethnic origin. Admissions to mental illness hospitals and units in the combined diagnostic group schizophrenia and paranoia are analysed by age and sex in booklet No. 12 (Diagnostic data) in the series of DHSS booklets "Mental Health Statistics for England" for the years 1983 and 1984. Similar information for earlier years is included in HMSO publications in the series "In-patient statistics from the Mental Health Inquiry for England". Copies of both series are in the Library.

Mental Patients (Imprisonment)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were transferred to mental institutions from prison in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985; and what records are available of the breakdown by (a) age, (b) sex and (c) ethnic origin.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not collected centrally in precisely the form requested. The available information on numbers of transfers is given in the table. Analyses are also available by age and sex, but not by ethnic origin. Relevant transfers to mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units are analysed by sex in booklet 11 (Legal status of patients) in the series of DHSS booklets "Mental Health Statistics for England" for the years 1983 and 1984. For earlier years some analyses by sex and age are contained in HMSO publications in the series "In-patient statistics from the Mental Health Enquiry for England". Psychiatrists (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures the Government are taking to encourage more members of the ethnic minorities to become doctors qualified in the area of mental health.

Mr. Hayhoe: Doctors from ethnic minorities already make a substantial contribution to service in psychiatric specialties according to the latest available figures.

Hospital Doctors

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to establish an even distribution of doctors in hospitals throughout the United Kingdom ; if he will encourage greater use of performance indicators to measure work load and output of National Health Service staff; whether he will provide a larger number of doctors for the medical specialties of the elderly, mentally ill and mentally handicapped; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Department's declared policy devolves to health authorities in England the determination of requirements for numbers of doctors for service plans, within available resources and staffing structure agreements. Gradual reduction of geographical disparities in England of the distribution of doctors is expected to continue.

The use of performance indicators, which contain staffing, work load, and output data, to appraise service performance, is already encouraged.

The numbers of doctors training in geriatrics, mental illness, and mental handicap have already been increased and are now sufficient to sustain expansion in these specialties, in accordance with declared national priorities.

Whooping Cough

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources he has allocated to the Health Education Council for its programme on whooping cough.

Mr. Whitney: In the year ending March 1986, the Health Education Council, which is Government funded, allocated £100,000 towards a whooping cough campaign which the Department augmented with a further £480,000. The scope for additional effort in this field during 1986-87 is being assessed with the council.

Health Authorities (Payment Limits)

Dame Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to review the authorised limits for payments by health authorities as set out in paragraph 3 of HC80/3.

Mr. Whitney: We have no plans to do so.

Local Office Staff

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the 5,000 additional staff at the Department of Health and Social Security local offices will be posted to the offices in (a) Greenock, (b) Port Glasgow, (c) Strathclyde and (d) Scotland.

Mr. Major: The increase of 5,000 staff was given against the baseline of the 1986-87 earned complement. On this basis, the figures requested are as follows:

	Number of staff
Greenock ILO	26
Port Glasgow AO	14
Strathclyde	478
Scotland	804

Special Claims (Staff)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the 5,000 additional staff at the Department of Health and Social Security local offices will be posted to the special claims section; and if he will break this down by region.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Gynaecological Service, Bassetlaw

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why the acute gynaecological emergency service in Bassetlaw has been withdrawn by the health authority; when it will be restored; and what action he is taking in the meantime to provide an alternative facility.

Mr. Whitney: Pending the appointment of a locum or full-time registrar, Bassetlaw health authority is temporarily unable to provide an emergency admissions service for gynaecology patients. Neighbouring districts have been asked to provide alternative facilities but any patients arriving at Bassetlaw accident and emergency department and judged unfit to be transferred will be treated as usual. On the advice of the consultants, the service was restricted with effect from 12 May. I understand that the district and Trent regional health authority are making every effort to make the appointment urgently. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the health authority if he wants further information.

Social Security Appeals

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of social security appeals which have been referred by the Social Security Commissioners to the European Court of Justice; and what was the ruling in each case, during the last five years.

Mr. Major: During the period 1981-86, the Social Security Commissioners referred five cases to the European Court of Justice. Rulings on three of these are awaited. The rulings of the two cases received are as follows:

(1) The issue concerned the applicability of Community overlapping benefit provisions and whether a divorced woman residing in the United Kingdom could continue to receive United Kingdom child benefit for the same period and in respect of the same children for whom a corresponding benefit was being paid in the Republic of Ireland to her former husband.

The court ruled:

"i. the provision for suspension contained in the first sentence of Article 10(1)(a) of Regulation No 574/72 of the Council of 21.3.72 must be interpreted as meaning that it applies whenever the institution of another Member State has in fact granted family benefits to a worker in respect of the same child, in pursuance of Article 73 of Regulation No 1408/71 of the Council of 14.6.71, without it being necessary to examine whether all the conditions for the grant of those benefits are satisfied under the legislation of that other Member State.

ii. the second sentence of Article 10(1)(a) of Regulation No 574/72 must be interpreted as meaning that it applies to a divorced spouse."

This ruling extended the meaning of the word "spouses" in the relevant EC provisions to include "former spouses" so as to prevent the overlapping benefit provisions from operating unjustly in the case of divorced claimants of family benefits. As the claimant was working in the United Kingdom, she continued to receive the United Kingdom benefit and the Irish benefit was suspended.

(2) The issue concerned the application of Community provisions on the taking into account of contributions paid in another member state for the purpose of entitlement to sickness benefit/invalidity benefit, where those contributions had been paid after, rather than before, the period of the claim for which the United Kingdom was responsible.

The court ruled:

"i. only the legislation of the Member State in whose territory the worker is or was last employed is applicable with regard to sickness benefit by virtue of Article 13(2)(a) of Regulation (EEC) No 1408/71 of the Council of 14 June 1971. The competent institution or institutions of the Member States are competent to aggregate the insurance periods pursuant to Article 18 of that regulation;

ii. invalidity benefit due under the legislation of a Member State following a period of incapacity for work during which the worker received benefits in respect of that incapacity, including benefit from another Member State, which is to be taken into account pursuant to Article 40(3) of Regulation No 1408/71, may, where appropriate, be validly reduced pursuant to Article 46(3) of that regulation."

This ruling means that, in deciding a claim to sickness benefit, contributions paid in another member state are to be taken into account only if they were paid prior to the period of the current claim.

Health Authorities (Women Appointees)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women have been appointed this year to regional health authorities and district health authorities, respectively.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that I cannot give the hon. Member all the information she seeks as some is not held centrally. District health authority members are appointed by the appropriate regional health authority and relevant local authorities. The hon. Member may therefore wish to seek this information from the chairman of the regional health authority concerned. Of the current regional health authority members, 56 are women. In addition, 30 district health authority chairmen are women.

Unclaimed Benefits

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the amount of money saved by his Department each year by the failure of people to claim benefits for which they would be eligible.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of people who failed to claim unemployment benefit for which they were eligible in each of the last three years.

Mr. Major: No estimates are available on the number of people who fail to claim unemployment benefit.

Surrogate Mothers

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to amend the Surrogacy Arrangements Act 1985 so as to make payments to surrogate mothers for the keeping of a diary during their pregnancy a specific criminal offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Severe Weather Payments

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been paid in 1986 to date by way of exceptionally severe weather payments in Scotland.

Mr. Newton: Information on the amount of benefit paid to date is not available, but approximately 57,000 payments had been made to claimants living in Scotland by 6 May. When the period during which payments are likely to be made is over, local offices will be asked to make a return so that the total number of payments made for last winter, and the amount paid, can be calculated.

Hip Replacement Operations

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has of the total cost to the National Health Service which has arisen from the introduction and development of hip replacement operations; how many hip operations have been carried out since the introduction of the technology to the most recent date for which figures are available; and if he has any estimate of the actual and projected level of future demand for such operations.

Mr. Whitney: A reliable estimate of the cost to the National Health Service of introducing and developing hip replacement operations cannot be given, since the procedures and the prosthesis themselves have changed over the years. There are no separate figures before 1967 but it is estimated that, between 1967 and 1984, inclusive over 420,000 hip replacements were carried out. In 1984, some 38,000 operations were performed—an increase of over 35 per cent. since 1978. Existing levels of demand for this procedure cannot be accurately gauged, but demand is likely to rise over the next decade, as the elderly population grows.

Alcohol (Illness)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what details or estimates he can provide of the annual costs incurred by the National Health Service through the treatment of illnesses attributable, in part or whole, to the consumption of alcohol.

Mr. Whitney: The true costs to the National Health Service of the treatment of all the conditions which may be induced or aggravated by alcohol cannot be calculated on present information. Recent research into the cost of alcohol misuse to the National Health Service has produced an estimate of some £95 million per annum (1983 prices) for England and Wales.

London Teaching Hospitals (Admissions)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of in-patient admissions in each of the London teaching hospitals for the three months commencing 1 January and the number of re-admissions of patients previously treated;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of admissions of in-patients in each of the London teaching hospitals, together with the percentage normally resident in the immediate locality covered by the relevant district health authorities during the three months commencing 1 January.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. It is not available centrally. He may wish to write to the chairmen of the special health authorities and the four Thames regional health authorities for the information requested.

Westminster Hospital

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library copies of the correspondence he has exchanged with the Riverside health authority concerning the future of Westminster hospital.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Orthopaedic Operations

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the longest time a patient now waits for an orthopaedic operation; and what is the average time in the South West Thames regional health authority area.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 24 March, c. 382]: In National Health Service hospitals in the South West Thames regional health authority, it is estimated that in 1984, the latest year for which information is available centrally, the median interval between the date a patient was placed on the waiting list and the date of admission to departments of orthopaedic surgery was 11 weeks compared with 12 weeks in England as a whole. In South West Thames, an estimated 3 per cent. waited 21 months or more, compared with 5 per cent. nationally.

Statutory Sick Pay Scheme

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans his Department has to review the operation of the statutory sick pay scheme since April 1983 in the light of the criticisms contained in the new report published by the Disability Alliance, ERA, Leicester rights centre and the Leicester city council low pay campaign, copies of which were sent to him; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 9 May 1986, c. 290]: We have kept the operation of the statutory sick pay scheme under continuous review since its introduction in April 1983 and devoted considerable effort to making employers familiar with it. In the first year of the scheme, 85 per cent. of all employers were visited by DHSS inspectors and SSP payments checked. The overall error rate was 15 per cent. but this will have improved as more employers have become accustomed to the rules. Since then we have concentrated our checks on those employers whom we believe to be most likely to make mistakes, either because of our findings on the first phase of visits or because the employer may be less familiar with the SSP arrangements. The error rate is correspondingly high (28 per cent.), made up of 16 per cent. overpayments and 12 per cent. underpayments. These mistakes are discussed with the employer to ensure that he understands the rules for the future. In 1985 we checked 116,000 employee records in this way. We also maintain a random sample check of employers generally. Our monitoring generally is at a level recommended by the Public Accounts Committee.

We expect and wish to achieve lower error rates. We shall keep the operation of the scheme under close scrutiny and seek continued improvement, which I believe will come as all employers gain more experience of SSP. The report to which the hon. and learned Member refers concludes that the transfer of sickness payments to employers has been a failure, but I cannot accept this. The vast majority of employers take their responsibilities in this area seriously. Most of their mistakes have been technical—for example, failure to apply the rule about waiting days — and I am sure that we are right to concentrate our checking efforts on the minority of employers where mistakes persist at an unduly high rate.

Health Authorities (Expenditure)

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the spending per capita in the Leicester health authority area at the latest available date; and what is the comparable figure for the other health authorities within the Trent region;

(2) what is the spending per capita in the Trent region at the latest available date; and what is the comparable level of spending in the other regions of England and Wales.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 9 May 1986, c. 290.]: The tables show health authority revenue expenditure per head of resident population in 1984-85 for each regional health authority in England and for each district health authority in the Trent region.

Expenditure per capita is not the best basis for comparison between health authorities, as it does not reflect the greater demands made on health services by the very young and by elderly people, or the differing patterns of morbidity across the country. Nor does it take account of patient flows across health authority boundaries. In allocating resources to regions, the Department "weights" regional populations to take account of each region's age and sex distribution, and of its relative mortality (as a proxy for morbidity). The population figures are also adjusted to take account of patient flows between regions for treatment. Column (2) of table 1 shows expenditure in each region in 1984-85 relative to the "weighted" population data used for resource allocations for that year.

Comparable data on district populations are not available centrally, but my hon. Friend may like to approach the chairman of the Trent regional health authority for further details.

Claimants (Camden)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for the latest available year (a) the number of disqualifications for unemployment benefit and (b) the number of deductions from supplementary benefit experienced by claimants in Camden on the ground of voluntary unemployment.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 12 May 1986, c. 384-5]: I regret that information on the number of deductions from supplementary benefit experienced by claimants in Camden on the grounds of voluntary unemployment is not available centrally. Statistics are not kept routinely, so that the information could be obtained only by a special exercise which would be disproportionately expensive.

The Department of Employment informs me that in the year ended 31 March 1986, 888 claims for unemployment benefit were disqualified on the grounds of voluntary unemployment at the two Camden unemployment benefit offices.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the numbers of war widows who are in receipt only of the Department of Health and Social Security pension.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 14 May 1986, c. 497]: Of the 65,000 widows receiving war widows pension, a small minority also receive a pension from the Ministry of Defence under the armed forces pension scheme.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cereals

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what was the actual reduction in prices of cereals under the common agricultural policy in the last year; what is proposed for this year; and what is the estimated surplus production.

Mr. Gummer: The reductions in cereal intervention prices for 1985-86 and 1986-87 are set out in the table. Production of all cereals in the Community in 1985-86 is estimated to be 18·8 million tonnes above consumption. Current intervention stocks for all cereals in the Community amount to 15·3 million tonnes.

CAP Support Prices: Changes Between Marketing Years

	*1985-86 ECU/tonne	*1986-87 ECU/tonne
Common Wheat	−3·29	0‡
Barley	−3·29	−8·97
Maize	−3·29	0
Sorghum	−3·29	−8·97
Rye	−3·35	−1·79‡
Durum Wheat	0	−12·48

* The changes relate to the first month of the marketing years.

‡ The 1986-87 common intervention price is only payable for wheat meeting specific technical quality criteria. A 2 per cent. premium has been introduced for breadwheat of a higher quality. Wheat failing to meet the technical quality standards will be subject to a discount of up to 7 per cent.

‡ The 1986-87 intervention price is payable for rye of breadmaking quality. Feed rye is subject to a discount of −5·9 per cent.

Bees

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food whether he will introduce a scheme to give financial relief to commercial beekeepers who lose more than 50 per cent of their stock because of adverse weather conditions.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is prepared to relax on a temporary basis import restrictions on new colonies of bees to allow the commercial beekeeping industry to restock after the losses caused by the recent adverse weather conditions.

Mrs. Fenner: No. Import controls were introduced to protect bee health in the United Kingdom. Any relaxation of these controls would be potentially more damaging to our bee population than the effects of recent bad weather.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is prepared to grant financial assistance to beekeepers who have to import bees to restock due to losses caused by the recent adverse weather conditions.

Mrs. Fenner: No. Many beekeepers do not favour increased import of bees as a means of making up losses in the bee population.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will investigate the possibility of making sugar available to commercial beekeepers at subsidised rates to allow them to recover losses sustained as a result of the recent adverse weather conditions.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Replanting Grants

Sir John Wells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in view of the level of up-take of replanting grants for apple trees, he will extend the period for which such grants are available.

Mrs. Fenner: The orchard replanting grants were introduced for a period of five years to give a short-term boost to replanting, and we have no plans to extend the period.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the difference between the assumed fall and the actual fall in the value of the dollar, the cost of the difference, the assumed rate in the current year and the actual rate this year to date since his written reply dated 3 May 1985, Official Report, column 277, concerning the effect of a fall in the dollar on expenditure under the common agricultural policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: The exchange rate used to estimate agricultural expenditure in the 1985 Budget was 1·30 ecu to the US dollar. The actual average rate in 1985 turned out higher, at 1·33 ecu to the US dollar. The 1986 budget adopted by the European Parliament assumed a rate of 1·20 ecu to the US dollar. The average rate to 14 May this year has been 1·06 ecu to the US dollar.

Beer

Mr. Mason asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the European Economic Community Commission on behalf of the British brewing trade to allow British beers free access to the German market; whether any restrictions are imposed against the export of British beers in any other European Economic Community country; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Mason asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ascertain the specific reasons why British beers are not allowed to be exported to Germany and, in particular, whether there are substances, including formaldehyde in the beers which are causes for objection.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Milk

Mr. Hicks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the quantities of milk supplied to each local education authority in Great Britain on which a European Economic Community subsidy was claimed during the 1984-85 school year.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Livsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the stocking rate to be used for standard quota, with reference to landlords and tenants in the milk producers outgoers scheme.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each product the increase in farm support prices this year in the United Kingdom in terms of sterling, together with the increase in productivity expected on the basis of past trends.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 14 May 1986, c. 485]: A note giving details of the recent CAP prices settlement has been placed in the Library of the House. Changes in the support price levels applicable in the United Kingdom are shown, for the main commodities, in the table. Future changes in productivity will be influenced by many factors, including developments in plant and animal breeding, the organisation of farming and the weather. Provisional calculations, described in "The Annual Review of Agriculture 1986" (Cmnd 9708), paragraph 22, suggest that the productivity of United Kingdom agriculture rose by an average of around 3 per cent. a year over the last decade, and by 2·5 per cent. a year over the last five years.

CAP Support Prices applying in the United Kingdom: Change between the 1985-86 and 1986-87 Marketing Years

		£ per tonne
Wheat*† (common intervention price)		+ 1·50
Barley*† (common intervention price)		− 4·13
Sugar (minimum price for sugar beet, A quota)		+ 0·35
Oilseed rape*‡ (intervention price)		+ 3.54
Beef and veal (guide price)		+34·79
Pigmeat‖ (basic price)		+34·51
Sheepmeat¶ (basic price)	pp litre	+73·37
Milk (target price)		+ 0·49

Notes:

* The changes shown are based on the interim support prices for 1985-86 set by the Commission and relate to the first months of the marketing year.

† A 2 per cent. (£2·25 per tonne) premium has been introduced for breadwheat of a higher quality. Wheat failing to meet the intervention quality will be subject to a discount of up to 7 per cent. (£7·88 per tonne). A corresponsibility levy (set at 3 per cent. of the wheat intervention price — or some £3·37 per tonne) is to be collected at the time of first processing, sale into intervention or on export. A number of other changes have been made to the cereals support arrangements.

‡ The intervention price is subject to a reduction of up to £14·55 per tonne if forecast EC10 production exceeds the maximum guaranteed quantity for the 1986-87 marketing year.

‖ The price for 1986-87 relates to a revised (higher) standard quality of carcase.

¶ The marketing year corresponds to the calendar year: the basic price in ECUs is unchanged for 1987. The increase shown represents the extent to which the basic price would rise in a full year due solely to the devaluation of the green £ operative from 12 May.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether West Germany has been authorised to take national measures to help their farmers as a result of the price settlement under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 14 May 1986, c. 485]: This year's price-fixing agreement did not include authorisation for the introduction of national measures to help farmers in West Germany. Any aids which the German authorities might decide to offer would have to conform to the treaty of Rome and be notified to the Commission accordingly.

Hill Land Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Livsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the remaining 25 per cent. of the payment for hill land compensatory allowances will be paid to farmers.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Trichinella Spiralis

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the cost per carcase if current testing for trichinella spiralis was carried out within the state veterinary service.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 6 May 1986, c. 94]: The cost per carcase, if testing for trichinella spiralis were undertaken by the state veterinary service, would depend on several factors; in particular, it would depend on the number of samples presented for testing on a regular basis and the proximity of the laboratory to slaughter-houses. It is estimated that the cost would vary around the average cost for testing carried out under the supervision of local veterinary inspectors. My Department is currently reviewing the cost of the present arrangements and in this connection will consider, consistent with the need to meet the West German requirements, whether it would be cost-effective for the state veterinary service to provide a trichinella testing service in particular areas.

Milk Quotas

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends to take to assist those dairy farmers affected by the decision to make a 3 per cent. cut in milk quotas over the next three years.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1986, c. 535]: The 3 per cent. cut in milk quotas will be achieved as far as possible through the Community milk outgoers scheme. I am consulting industry organisations with a view to ensuring that we operate this scheme in the most effective possible way.

Pest Infestation Research Laboratory

Mr. Watts asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the future of the pest infestation research laboratory in London road, Slough.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 16 May 1986, c. 595]: The efficiency scrutiny of central agricultural science service and food science laboratories (a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House of Commons in June 1985) identified the potential for improved management and the more effective use of manpower and equipment in locating all ASS laboratories on one site. The ASS Laboratory in London road, Slough is one of the laboratories involved.

My Department is presently examining possible options for relocation.

Thames Barrier

Mr. Spearing asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement concerning the condition of electrical control equipment of the Thames barrier and the extent to which it is currently restricted in its operation.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 16 May 1986, c. 596]: This is a matter for the Thames water authority. I understand that some of the electrical relays used in the control equipment at the Thames barrier have proved less reliable than the specification required. All of these relays are being replaced by a modified type that is expected to perform satisfactorily.

Neither the present condition of the relays nor the work of replacement is restricting the operation of the Thames barrier.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Late Night Car Service

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal whether, pursuant to the answer of 28 April, Official Report, column 662-3, to the hon. Member for Leicester East, the costs given for the late night car service were grossed up for tax.

Mr. Biffen: No.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal, pursuant to the answer of 28 April, Official Report, column 662-3, to the hon. Member for Leicester, East, about the late night car service, what advice is given to House of Commons staff about the tax treatment of the car service.

Mr. Biffen: Discussions took place between the authorities of the House and the Inland Revenue Department some years ago concerning the treatment of House of Commons staff in respect of the use of the late night car service facility in cases where such use might give rise to a liability to tax. Following those discussions the Revenue, applying its usual "de minimis" principle, indicated that it would not treat as a taxable benefit the use of the facility from time to time by a member of staff, as a result of irregular and unpredictable late sittings of the House.

House of Commons staff are treated no differently than any other taxpayer in this respect, and the need to provide general advice does not, therefore, arise.

Magazine and Periodicals

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal what is the weekly and annual cost of weekly magazines and periodicals supplied to the House; what was the cost in each of the past three years; and if he will list the newspapers supplied and break down their cost as between each title.

Mr. Biffen: Expenditure on weekly magazines and periodicals cannot readily be identified separately. The overall costs of newspapers and periodicals supplied to the Library Department and to the Serjeant at Arms' Department respectively in the past three years were as follows:

Library Department

	£ Total Cost	£ Weekly Rate
1982-83	35,125	675
1983-84	37,112	714
1984-85	48,423	931
1985-86	46,181	888

Serjeant at Arms Department

	£ Total Cost	£ Weekly Rate (sitting weeks only)
1982-83	15,019	429
1983-84	13,977	437
1984-85	17,527	487
1985-86	18,159	504

A list of titles filed in the Library is available in the Reference Room; and further details can be provided on request to the respective Departments. A number of newspapers are supplied to the House free of charge.

ENVIRONMENT

Rate Capping

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, by what date he will announce any decision to impose general rate capping for 1987-88.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Rates Act 1984 does not specify a date by which my right hon. Friend must announce any intention to impose general rate limitation for the following financial year. A proposal to introduce general rate limitation would need the approval of both Houses.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of the economic model used to forecast local government expenditure and rate support grant mechanisms.

Mrs. Rumbold: A number of methods are used to forecast local authority expenditure and the impact of rate support grant mechanisms. These include taking account of past trends and future expenditure commitments, and the reports of the expenditure groups of the consultative council on local government finance. Limited use has also been made of a prediction model, details of which will shortly be published in the academic journal "Government and Policy".

Radiation

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment for how long it is intended that regular monitoring for radioisotopes of barium 140, caesium 134 and 137, iodine 131, ruthenium 103 and tellurium 132 in soil, air, rain and surface water will be continued; and with what regularity sampling analysis will be undertaken.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the National Radiological Protection Board monitor the long-term movements of all radionucleides on a regular basis and the results are published.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the derived emergency reference levels used by the National Radiological Protection Board take into account the fact that iodine-131, caesium-137, strontium-90 and other fission products do not normally appear individually in the environment.

Mrs. Rumbold: Yes.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the levels of strontium-90 in the environment and food at the present time as a result of the Soviet reactor incident.

Mrs. Rumbold: Only small amounts have been found and levels are radiologically much less significant those of iodine-131 and radiocaesium.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish figures of the incidence and intensity of the level of caesium 137 at the various radioactivity monitoring points for each of the days, or readings taken over the period, since the Chernobyl nuclear accident.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the bulletins issued by my Department and the data collated by the National Radiological Protection Board. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what measurements of radioactivity and allied readings were carried out over the past month by the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology on his behalf in Cumbria and nearby areas; what were the results; and what were the results of comparable tests carried out in these areas by other bodies.

Mr. Waldegrave: No monitoring of radioactivity from the Chernobyl accident was carried out by the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology on behalf of the Department although monitoring was carried out at the initiative of the institute. This included measurements of radioactivity in rainwater, milk and bulked vegetation. Measurement reported to the Department up to 10·00 hours on 15 May 1986 have been included in the collection of monitoring results issued on 15 May. The rainwater and milk measurements are consistent with other measurements in the same area.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what instructions were given on his behalf to officers of the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology regarding communicating to the media the results of their monitoring of radioactivity and allied readings.

Mr. Waldegrave: Officers of the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology were informed of the co-ordination arrangements for the collation and publication of monitoring results which have been provided by my Department. The ITE made its results available to the co-ordination team and those available to DOE by 10·00 hours on 15 May 1986 are included in a collation issued on 15 May. The MAFF assessed the results and concluded that they did not justify any special advice being offered to the public.

Drigg

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals for revising the radioactive discharge authorisation for Drigg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The authorisation for the Drigg radioactive waste disposal site is currently under review.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how long, in general, intermediate-level nuclear waste has to be stored before it becomes low-level nuclear waste.

Mr. Waldegrave: The length of storage will depend entirely on the radionuclides present and their half-lives.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about his Department's report on best practicable environmental options for disposal of nuclear waste from those organisations consulted during its drafting; and how many of these representations were critical, favourable or neutral, respectively.

Mr. Waldegrave: I received a number of favourable comments as well as constructive criticisms on the draft final report made available in November 1985.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what relative weight the authors of the report on best practicable environmental options for disposal of nuclear waste were asked to give to (a) the cost of disposal and (b) safety.

Mr. Waldegrave: The authors were not directed to give any specific weight to cost of disposal and safety. The range of weights reflects the views of the experts involved in the study.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent storage costs of nuclear waste have been revised downwards since the preparation of his Department's report on best practicable environmental options.

Mr. Waldegrave: Subsequent studies suggest that the assessment of storage costs in the BPEO report were good. I am sending to the hon. Member a copy of a report on "Implications of long-term surface or near-surface storage of intermediate and low-level radioactive wastes in the United Kingdom" which gives further details.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of the 18 independent consultants who were involved in the drawing up of the assessment of best practicable environmental options for managment of low and intermediate-level solid radioactive wastes; and what are their individual areas of specialist knowledge.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give his response to the recommendation of the Environment Committee in paragraph 280 of the report on radioactive waste, that responsibility for final short listing of possible nuclear dump sites shall rest with his Department rather than NIREX; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government's response to the Environment Committee's recommendation 36 was set out in paragraphs 42 to 44 of the Government's first stage response on 2 May 1986 to the Committee's report.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many letters he received from firms and individuals concerned in the food industry about the inclusion of Killingholme in the special development order on nuclear dumping; how many he has replied to before publishing the order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Seven letters from those known to be involved in the food industry. Replies to all outstanding correspondence will be sent as soon as possible.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many delegations and deputations he received on the special development order on nuclear dumping; how he evaluated their arguments; what changes he made to the NIREX proposals as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State and I have together or separately met a number of deputations from local authorities and other bodies. Representations made then and in correspondence were carefully considered and a number of changes made to the draft order.

Mr. Lyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, what is the total volume of radioactive nuclear waste, differentiating between low-level waste, intermediate-level waste and high-level waste arising from different sources, namely: reprocessing, power stations, research, medical and industrial sources up to the year 2030 showing the amount from each of the above sources and the extent to which any of the low-level waste could be categorised as very low-level waste.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to her answer, 12 May 1986, c. 358]: The figures given were incorrect. The following corrected figures are for conditioned wastes likely to arise by 2,030, assuming moderate growth in nuclear power generation and in reprocessing.

Source	HGW	ILW	LLW
Reactors (committed and proposed including decommissioning)	—	53,000 cubic metres	278,000 cubic metres
Reprocessing	8,300 cubic metres	109,000 cubic metres	840,000 cubic metres
Research/Medical		35,000 cubic metres	75,000 cubic metres
Industrial	—
Total	8,300 cubic metres	197,000 cubic metres	1,193,000 cubic metres

The LLW is assumed to be compacted.

The figure for heat-generating waste (HGW) relates to the form in which such wastes are currently stored: HGW will be solidified into glass blocks when the new plant is available and this will have the effect of reducing the volume to about one third.

It is not possible to estimate what proportion of LLW could be categorised as very low-level waste.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he received the letter of 4 April 1985 sent by Mr. R. A. Shearing of 43 Landsdowne Avenue, Grimsby, with regard to the proposed nuclear dump at Killingholme; if he has yet replied to this letter; and if he will make it his policy to allow Mr. Shearing time to reply to him before he brings forward the special development order;

(2) when he received the letter of 7 April 1985 from Mrs. V. Ingram of 116 Pelham Avenue, Grimsby, with regard to the proposed nuclear dump site at Killingholme; if he has yet replied to this letter; and if he will allow Mrs. Ingram time to reply to him before he brings forward his proposals;

(4) if he will make it his policy to reply to Councillor Doug Pitchett of 198 Broadway, Grimsby DN34 5QJ, about the South Killingholme potential nuclear waste disposal site in sufficient time for the recipient to reply before any special development order is laid; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if he will reply to Councillor John Colebrook of 56 Gloucester Avenue, Grimsby, South Humberside DN34 5BZ about the South Killingholme potential nuclear waste disposal site in sufficient time for the recipient to reply before the special development order is laid, and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to the answer, 15 May 1986, c. 549]: I wrote to the hon. Member on 14 May in response to his letter covering that from Mrs. Ingram. Replies to outstanding letters from the hon. Member covering letters from his constituents will be sent as soon as possible.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he intends to collect evidence from the Anglian water authority on the four possible nuclear dump sites before a special development order is laid;

(2) what consultations he has had with the Anglian water authority about the drainage, water table, dampness and water flow problems of the land at Killingholme, South Humberside, selected by NIREX as a possible nuclear dump.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his answer, 16 May 1986, c. 549]: I consulted the authority over the terms of the special development order. Consultations with the authority on specific hydrogeological factors are initially a matter for NIREX.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites will be producing waste which will be taken to the Government's proposed low-level nuclear waste dump once it is in operation; how many are accessible for rail transportation; how many would be sending waste by road; what preference he has expressed to NIREX for transportation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his answer, 15 May 1986, c. 550]: There are some 2,000 premises in England and Wales where radioactive substances are produced. Many of these will probably make use of the proposed disposal facility. It is not possible to say at this stage how much waste will travel to the site by road or rail. My Department has not expressed any preference, but mode of transport will be taken into account when the proposals from UK NIREX Ltd are considered.

Mr. Lyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place a copy of research report number DOE/RW/85-124 referred to in the reply to the hon. Member for Mid-Bedfordshire of 12 May column 358 in the Library.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his estimate of the proportion by volume of low-level nuclear waste produced each year by reprocessing of (a) British nuclear waste and (b) imported nuclear waste and his estimate of the amount by volume of low-level waste when the THORP reprocessing plant is completed;

(2) what is the difference between the radiological risks of storing nuclear waste on nuclear power station sites and those for early disposal in nuclear dumps.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the letters protesting at the inclusion of Killingholme in the special development order on nuclear dumping he replied to before publishing it.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer this question shortly.

Conservation and Development Conference

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the members of the United Kingdom delegation to the international conference on conservation and development in Canada; how many United Kingdom delegates are women; if the Overseas Development Administration health and population division is represented; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The world conservation strategy conference, to be held in Ottawa from 31 May to 5 June, is not an intergovernmental conference. However, a number of British organisations will be represented. The Department of the Environment will be represented by my hon. Friend the Minister for Environment, Countryside and Local Government. Within the United Kingdom the occasion will be marked by the publication of the United Kingdom Government's response to the world conservation strategy, "Conservation and Development: The British Approach," which will record the United Kingdom's achievements in the field of environmental conservation, and relate these to the guiding principles of the world conservation strategy.

The Overseas Development Administration will be represented at the conference by Mr. Eamoinn Taylor from its natural resources and environment department and Dr. David Butcher, its senior social development adviser with special responsibility for women in development. In representing the ODA, this team will incorporate the concerns of the health and population department.

Nuclear Dumping

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff in his Department are currently engaged in replying to correspondence on nuclear dumping.

Mr. Waldegrave: The division which deals with administrative matters concerning radioactive waste management policy, including the bulk of correspondence on the subject, currently consists of 14 staff, of whom one is supernumerary. The number of staff dealing with correspondence at any one time depends on the volume and urgency of other work.

Radioactivity (Sussex)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what radioisotopes were detected in air, rainwater and surface deposits in East and West Sussex, respectively, over the period between Monday 21 April and Monday 12 May; and what are their respective chemical and biological half-lives.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the bulletins issued by my Department and the data collated by the National Radiological Protection Board. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Kirby Town Football Club

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the way in which Knowsley council has monitored, on behalf of his Department, the work carried out with public funds at Kirby town football club; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Allegations that public funds have been misappropriated are the subject of police investigations. I cannot comment further until those are complete.

Lionise Development Company

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail the public funds that have been made available to the Liverpool development company, Lionise.

Sir George Young: An urban development grant of £99,000.

Sewage

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give details of the locations around the coast of the United Kingdom where macerated or screen sewage not subjected to any form of biological treatment is deposited directly into the coastal waters;

(2) if he will give details of all locations around the coast of the United Kingdom where macerated or screened sewage not subject to any form of biological treatment is deposited directly into coastal waters above the 100 m high water mark;

(3) if he will give details of the sites around the coast of the United Kingdom where sewage sludge is deposited in the coastal waters;

(4) if he will give details of all locations around the coast of the United Kingdom where untreated sewage is put directly into coastal waters above the 100 m high water mark;

(5) if he will give details of all places around the coast of the United Kingdom where untreated sewage is put directly into coastal waters.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information sought by the hon. Member is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Planning (County Councillors)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the declaration of interest required of county councillors dealing with and voting on planning matters in which they may have an interest.

Mr. Tracey: The statutory requirements governing the declaration of pecuniary interests by local authority members are contained in sections 94 to 98 and 105 of the Local Government Act 1972. These are summarised in Department of the Environment circular 105/73. Guidance on the declaration of non-pecuniary interests is contained in the national code of local government conduct, published as DOE circular 94/75.

Housing Staff College

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the proposal by the Audit Commission in the report entitled "Managing the Crisis in Council Housing" for a housing staff college.

Mr. John Patten: We are considering how best to use the clause 11 provisions in the new Housing and Planning Bill, if enacted, to make grants for housing management, education and training. The Audit Commission's proposal for a housing staff college will be one of the potential initiatives examined in that context.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if pursuant to his reply of 16 January, Official Report, column 662, he will list the 50 English housing authorities which owned the highest number of the 13,500 dwellings which had been vacant for more than two years; and what percentage of the stock this figure represents.

Mr. John Patten: The 51 English local authorities which, in their housing investment programme returns, reported owning more than 20 dwellings vacant for more than two years (including those which were closed) at 1 April 1985, are as listed:

Local Authority	Vacant more than two years
	Number	Per cent. of stock
1 Liverpool	2314	3·65
2 Manchester	1058	1·31
3 Hackney	860	1·88
4 Tower Hamlets	528	2·83
5 Sunderland	491	1·07
6 Newham	452	1·45
7 Sheffield	348	0·38
8 Lewisham	324	0·77
9 Oldham	317	1·21

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if, pursuant to his reply of 15 January, Official Report, columns 573-6, he will give a breakdown of the numbers of dwellings shown in sections D1 and D13 as vacant and available for letting which had been in this condition for (a) more than three months, (b) more than six months and (c) more than one year;

(2) if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr, of 28 January, Official Report, column 470, he will list for each housing authority the numbers of empty dwellings vacant for more than one year and which had been available for letting for more than one year.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not collected about how long local authority dwellings vacant at any date have been available for letting.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 50 most deprived housing authorities as measured by his Department using the housing Z score, giving the figure for each authority.

Mr. John Patten: I shall answer this question shortly.

Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to ensure that the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee has no members from the board of NIREX.

Mr. Waldegrave: This suggestion will be borne in mind in considering the Government's response to the Environment Committee's recommendation on the membership of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee.

Housing (Land Availability)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of his inspector's report of 25 February on the appeal by Crest Homes plc in respect of land in Ferndown, he will make a statement on the availability of land for housing in south-east Dorset.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend understands that sufficient land is available in south-east Dorset to meet the housing provision in the south-east Dorset structure plan. Structure plan policies are only one of the material considerations to be taken into account when determining planning applications. It is declared Government policy that there is a presumption in favour of allowing development unless harm would thereby be caused to interests of acknowledged importance.

Rates

Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of total personal disposable income was expended on domestic rates in the years 1956-57, 1979-80 and in 1984-85.

Mrs. Rumbold: Domestic rate payments, net of rate rebates, as a proportion of total personal disposable income in the United Kingdom are estimated to be 2 per cent. in 1956-57 and 1979-80, and 2·3 per cent. in 1984-85. The 1956-57 figure is not comparable with those for later years as it includes charges for water and sewerage.

Smith Houses

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the criteria used in determining the terms of the designation order for Smith houses in Leicester with particular reference to the availability of an approved scheme or system of repair; and whether he will make a statement on the position of owner-occupiers of such houses in Leicester.

Sir George Young: The definition of the Smith designated class and qualifying defect were based on the Building Research Establishment's findings. Copies of the BRE's reports on Smith houses are in the Library: these describe the way these houses were constructed and the defects found. The cut-off date specified (19 December 1985) is the date of publication of the BRE's most recent report. My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction announced on that day that the government intended to designate Smith houses nationally under the housing defects legislation. That designation is now in force and owners are now entitled to assistance. For assistance via grant aid for reinstatement, Leicester city council has to be satisfied that the works proposed deal satisfactorily with the qualifying defect and that the other conditions set out in the legislation are met. I am not currently aware of a Smith repair system yet confirmed as satisfying all those requirements. But I hope such systems will be developed, as they are being for other designated types. If not, or where it would be unreasonable to expect owners to await the carrying out of repairs, the legislation provides for repurchase, at 95 per cent. of defect-free value.

London Residuary Body (Chairman)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the chairman of the London Residuary Body is permitted under his terms of appointment to accept paid directorships.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The terms of the chairman's appointment take account of the guidance to Departments on non-departmental public bodies issued by the Cabinet Office (MPO) and Her Majesty's Treasury. A copy of the guidance is in the Library. The terms of appointment do not preclude the chairman from accepting other paid appointments. However, they do require him to declare any potential conflict of interest, financial or otherwise, to the members of the London Residuary Body's board; and to agree arrangements with them to avoid any such conflict.

Dog Licence Fees

Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from individual councils regarding his Department's consultation on dog licence fees.

Mrs. Rumbold: Some 80 borough, district and county councils and some 50 town and parish councils responded to our consultation paper on future dog licensing arrangements in Great Britain. We have also received about 40 further representations since the end of the consultation period.

Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when a decision will be announced regarding the public response to his Department's consultation paper on dog licence fees; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We will announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

Water Industry

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the provision for first-time sewerage and new developments in rural areas following privatisation of the water authorities.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have no plans to change the basic principles governing these matters, but our recent consultation paper on water and sewerage law proposed some detailed changes in the requisitioning arrangements. The consultation period ends on 30 May.

Queen's Gallery, Buckingham Palace

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why access to the Queen's Gallery at Buckingham Palace has been made impossible for visitors in wheelchairs; if he will take steps to remove the obstacles; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Access to the Queen's Gallery has had to be temporarily diverted whilst construction work is in progress on an adjacent site. In order to maintain access to the gallery during the course of this work, a temporary staircase has been erected. Regretfully this is the only safe entrance for the public and this temporary arrangement will have to remain in place until the construction work is completed in the spring of 1987.

Nuclear Dumps

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will reply to the letter to him from Councillor S. J. Norton of 38 Melrose Way, Grimsby, South Humberside, about the South Killingholme potential nuclear waste disposal site in sufficient time for the councillor to have a reasonable opportunity to reply before the special development order is laid; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy to reply to Councillor J. F. Orchard of 8 Worsley Close, Immingham, South Humberside, about the South Killingholme potential nuclear waste disposal site in sufficient time for the recipient to have a reasonable opportunity to reply before the special development order is laid; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make it his policy to reply to the letter to him from Councillor A. M. Webster of 66 Caister Drive, Grimsby, South Humberside, about the South Killingholme proposed nuclear waste disposal site in sufficient time for the councillor to have a reasonable opportunity to reply before the special development order is laid; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will make it his policy to reply to Mrs. J. Bourne of 25 Edge Avenue, Grimsby, about the South Killingholme potential nuclear waste disposal site in sufficient time for her to have a reasonable opportunity to reply before the special development order is laid; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if he will make it his policy to reply to Councillor N. Perkins of Oakhurst, 66 Station Road, Great Coates, Great Grimsby, about the South Killingholme potential nuclear waste disposal site in sufficient time for him to have a reasonable opportunity to reply before the special development order is laid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to the answers, 9 May 1986, c. 308, and 12 May 1986, c. 358]: Replies will be sent to all letters received as soon as possible.

Nuclear Energy

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps his Department takes to keep informed of the substance of contacts between British and Soviet scientists on nuclear energy matters;

(2) what information is given to his Department about discussions between British scientists and the International Atomic Energy Agency;

(3) what guidance his Department gives to British scientists about the formality and substance of contacts they have with eastern bloc scientists on nuclear energy matters.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Norman Shaw South (Drinking Water Taps)

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the additional drinking water taps in Norman Shaw South to be connected to the water supply as referred to in the answer of 25 July 1985, Official Report, columns 705-6, by the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young).

Sir George Young: They have been connected. I regret that the work was not completed as quickly as anticipated.

Water Industry

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he intends to issue the document "Water Privatisation: Proposals for Water Companies" for public comment; and if he will make a statement;

(2) to whom he circulated the document "Water Privatisation: Proposals for Water Companies"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Palace of Westminster (Lighting and Ventilation)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria are applied in the Palace of Westminster for determining lighting and ventilation standards in the office areas; and if he will arrange for an independent review of their adequacy.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The lighting standard applied by the Property Services Agency to office areas in the Palace of Westminster is 350 lux, which is a measure of brightness. In office areas with openable windows ventilation is mostly by natural means alone; in other office areas the agency applies the criteria recommended in the Chartered Institute of Building Services Engineers guide and London borough byelaws.

The provision of satisfactory lighting and ventilation in the Palace, and the associated operational problems, are subject to ongoing review; although I do not consider that a general review of this wholly atypical building would serve a useful purpose at this juncture. But if the hon. Member has any particular areas in view that require more light being thrown upon them, I will see what can be done.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Monetary System

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the implications for the completion of the internal market of the European Economic Community of the rate of participation of member states in the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The completion of the internal market does not depend directly on the participation of member states in the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

EC (Taxes and Duties)

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all regulations made by him since 1983 relating to the implementation of value added tax, other indirect taxes, customs duties and excise duties, in accordance with European Community rules.

Mr. Brooke: Following is the information:

Regulations:—

SI 1984/155 —The Value Added Tax (General) (Amendment) Regulations 1984.
SI 1985/105 —The Value Added Tax (General) (Amendment) Regulations 1985.

National Balance Sheet

Mr. Higgins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates have been made by the Government or their associated public bodies as to the state of the Government or national balance sheet; and whether any future publication of such a balance sheet is planned.

Mr. Lawson: The Central Statistical Office publishes balance sheet information in a number of places:

(i) tables published annually in the June edition of "Financial Statistics" give figures for financial assets and liabilities by sector at market value. For the non-bank private sector only, this information is supplemented by tables published in each edition of "Financial Statistics".
(ii) the annual publication "United Kingdom National Accounts" (the "Blue Book") gives estimates for each sector, and the nation as a whole, of the stock of fixed capital at replacement costs, both gross and net of depreciation.
(iii) the annual publication "United Kingdom Balance of Payments" (the "Pink Book") shows the United Kingdom's overseas assets and liabilities.
(iv) the February edition of "Financial Statistics" gives a table which analyses the debt of the public sector at nominal value by type of instrument and sector of holder.
(v) the February edition of "Financial Statistics" also gives a table showing the balance sheet of the personal sector (physical assets and financial assets and liabilities) at market value. Full balance sheets of this kind for all sectors were last published in "Economic Trends", November 1980 with data up to the end of 1975.

Agricultural Expenditure

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether an increase in agricultural spending above the guideline in one year raises the ceiling for the next year under the agreed formula.

Mr. Brooke: No. The base for calculating the level of EC agricultural spending consistent with the financial guideline is the average of the expenditure outturn in 1984 and 1985.

EC Budget

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the forecast contribution to the European Economic Community budget this year, including supplementaries, as a percentage of the contribution in 1979 in terms of sterling, (b) the corresponding increase in expenditure by the United Kingdom Government and (c) the increase in the retail prices index.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring up to date the figure for gross receipts from, and gross payments to, the European Economic Community budget given in his reply of 7 July 1983; if he will provide an estimate for 1986, including forecast supplementaries, together with a forecast for next year; and how the figure for refunds is made up.

Mr. Booke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the table published in the Official Report on 3 April 1984, Official Report, columns 451-2, giving details of the United Kingdom contribution to the European Economic Community budget; and if he will add an estimate for this year and the forecast for next.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Government are satisfied with the results achieved in the EEC budgetary field as a result of the Fontainebleau agreement; what has been the increase in the share of the European Community budget spent on agriculture since 1983; what is forecast for this year and next; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing what the United Kingdom gross contribution to the European Economic Community budget is expected to be this year, before allowance is made for any rebates, the amount of the rebate, and the amount which is represented by the 0·4 per cent. addition to the United Kingdom's value added tax contribution.

Mr. Brooke: The Fontainebleau agreement has been working as expected. We have already received £605 million in respect of 1984, and are receiving our 1,400 mecu abatement for 1985 at the rate of £75 million a month. The Commission will propose to increase this by 500 mecu (£25 million a month) in the supplementary budget it is to introduce.

The percentage points increases in the share of the budget taken by agriculture, and the forecasts for 1986 and 1987, are as follows:

	Actual share per cent.	percentage points increase
1983	64·9	—
1984	66·6	+1·7
1985	70·2	+3·6
1986*	62·4	−7·8
1987	62·6	+0·2

* includes full amount proposed by Commission for supplementary budget

The other information requested is as follows:

	mecu
Gross contribution (at uniform VAT rate) assuming Commission's proposed Supplementary budget is adopted	6,796
Total abatement (inc proposals in supplementary budget)	1,900
Yield of 0·4% VAT in 1986	1,324

Mr. Portillo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the payment in May of non-value-added tax own resources to the European Communities.

Mr. Brooke: In accordance with article 10(2) of Council regulation 2891/77, the Commission has again invited member states to advance the payment of own resources other than VAT in respect of agricuitural, sugar and isoglucose levies and customs duties collected by the Government on its behalf.

In accordance with this request, the Government propose to make an advance payment of some £131 million on 20 May. This will be financed initially by a repayable advance from the contingencies fund, pending parliamentary approval of a summer Supplementary Estimate. The payment of levies and duties on 20 June under section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972 will be reduced by the amount of the advance. There will therefore be no net addition to forecast public expenditure for 1986-87.

Drugs

Dr. Marek asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the value of drugs seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise at (a) London Heathrow, (b) Dover, (c) other points of entry to the United Kingdom and (d) elsewhere in the United Kingdom for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Brooke: The street value of all drugs seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise during 1985 was £107 million. It would not be in the public interest to disclose information about the value of seizures made at specific locations.

Private Investment

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the volume of private fixed investment in the years 1980 to 1985 inclusive, excluding housing but including such information as he has about investment by enterprises privatised during the period.

Mr. MacGregor: Figures of gross domestic fixed capital formation by the private sector, excluding dwellings and transactions in land and existing buildings, at constant 1980 prices, are as follows:

1980	20,997
1981	19,385
1982	19,950
1983	20,040
1984	23,075
1985	25,339

These figures include fixed investment by privatised enterprises since their privatisation.

Figures of fixed capital formation by sector at current and constant prices are published annually in the CSO publication "United Kingdom National Accounts".

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the volume of private investment in housing, excluding purchases from the public sector, for the period 1980 to 1985, inclusive.

Mr. MacGregor: Figures of gross domestic fixed capital formation in dwellings by the private sector, at constant 1980 prices, excluding purchases from the public sector, are as follows:

	£ million
1980	5,883
1981	5,497
1982	6,065
1983	6,585
1984	6,715
1985	6,604

These figures are published in the CSO publication "Economic Trends", page 16.

Earnings

Mr. Favell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of jobs which would be created if the increase in average earnings remained at or below the rate of inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Evidence summarised in a paper by Treasury officials, published in January 1985 ("The Relationship between Employment and Wages"; HM Treasury), suggested that a 1 per cent. reduction in real wages could lead to between 110,000 and 220,000 extra jobs in the long run.

Cars (Freeports)

Dr. Marek asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the tax position in relation to the import and export of cars through freeports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Share Option Schemes

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many approved share option schemes have been set up in each year since the passage of the Finance Act 1984; and how many employees are covered by the approved share option scheme set up in each year.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many savings-related share option schemes have been set up in each year since the passage of the Finance Act 1980; and how many employees are covered by the savings-related share option schemes set-up in each year.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Share Trusts

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many approved deferred share trusts have been set up in each year since the passage of the Finance Act 1978; and how many employees are covered by the approved deferred share trusts set up in each year.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Wigley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimate of revenue forgone in 1985 from exempting gains in the value of sole or main residences from the provisions of capital gains tax in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Wales.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1986, c. 451]: Only very tentative estimates are possible. For 1985-86, (a) about £2,500 million; (b) less than £100 million. The estimates assume that there would be no relief for gains when disposal proceeds are applied to the purchase of another dwelling, and that there would be no consequential effects on the length of ownership and on the housing market.

Income Tax and National Insurance

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average amount by which public expenditure has exceeded the amount spent in 1978-79, in each year from 1979-80, in actual and real terms and as a percentage of 1978-79 figures.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1986, c. 564]: The outturn figure for the public expenditure planning total for 1978-79 given in the 1986 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702) was £65·7 billion. The latest estimated outturn for 1985-86 published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1986-87 was £133·9 billion. The average annual difference from the 1978-79 planning total over the period 1979-80 to 1985-86 was £44·5 billion, which is equivalent to 67·6 per cent. of the 1978-79 planning total. In real terms, the planning total has increased from £117·4 billion in 1978-79 to £126·3 billion in 1985-86 (base year 1984-85), with an average annual difference from 1978-79 of £6·1 billion, equivalent to 5·2 per cent. of the 1978-79 planning total in real terms.

DEFENCE

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Abse asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the research into the alleged presence of trichothecenes in samples of vegetation from south-east Asia provided from the United States of America by the Chemical Defence Research Establishment will be completed; whether the research includes a review of the Harvard university study relating to the bees' faeces; and whether he will make a statement on the implications of the results to date of the research for the validity of the United States of America State Department claims that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics supplied Vietnam with chemical weapons.

Mr. Stanley: Our chemical defence establishment at Porton Down has analysed a number of environmental and biomedical samples from alleged chemical warfare attacks in south-east Asia to see whether traces of trichothecene mycotoxins could be detected. These have yielded negative results.

The absence of positive results is not necessarily incompatible with positive findings elsewhere from different samples. We are, however, confident that our analytical techniques would have detected trichothecenes had they been present in the alleged chemical warfare samples analysed at CDE.

Whilst our investigation into trichothecene mycotoxins has proved negative, it is our view on the basis of epidemiological evidence that chemical warfare attacks probably did take place in south-east Asia. We are, however, unable to identify the agent or agents used; nor can we say for certain who may have supplied them.

CDE has also reviewed the Harvard university study, as presented in Scientific American of September 1985, to which the hon. Gentleman refers. CDE has concluded that its own findings neither support nor contradict the theory that "yellow rain" could be bee faeces.

Royal Fleet Auxiliary Orders

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he expects to begin tendering for any Royal Fleet Auxiliary orders in the financial years 1986-87 or 1987-88.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Defence, on 24 April at column 434, concerning the auxiliary oiler replenishment vessel. No decisions have been taken on the timing of further new build orders, nor are there any plans at present for other classes of RFA ships.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if anything in the memorandum of understanding with the United States of America on strategic defence initiative research affects other existing United Kingdom treaty obligations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I have been asked to reply.

The MOU is not a treaty. Existing treaty obligations of both sides were taken fully into account in the negotiations of the MOU and will not be affected.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Statistics

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the number of young people reaching minimum school-leaving age in each year from 1970 to the present, showing the number who stay on in education (a) at school and (b) at college or elsewhere; and what was the first destination of those who left school showing, where possible, separately, whether it was (a) full-time work, (b) part-time work, (c) job creation programme, youth opportunities programme or YTS, (d) unemployed and (e) other.

Mr. Dunn: Information on the types of employment outcome of school leavers is not available from statistics collected by this Department. Available information on full-time education is in the table.

(c) Science graduates taking up first teaching posts in secondary schools.‡	1,550	Not Available	Not Available

* Source: Central Register and Clearing House and the Graduate Teacher Training Register. Applications to undergraduate courses in universities which recruit through UCCA are excluded.

† Total applications for entry to courses in the year in question.

‡ The information is not available in the form requested.

Secondary Education (Expenditure)

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the expenditure per pupil on secondary education of each of the metropolitan district local education authorities.

Mr. Dunn: The latest information available is for 1984-85 and is as follows:

Further Education Unit

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the annual cost of the further education unit; and how much of the cost can be ascribed to publications.

Sir Keith Joseph: A general grant-in-aid of £1,999,991 was made available to the Unit in financial year 1985-86 together with a further £1,559,917 in respect of a series of special projects commissioned by the Department and the Welsh Office. Within the grant-in-aid, expenditure totalling £396,806 can be broadly related to dissemination and publicity activities.

Education Provision

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his policy towards the level of educational provision, in so far as it relates to the rate of school closures in response to falling rolls, in the light of the recent report of the Audit Commission for England and Wales.

Mr. Dunn: Targets for the removal of surplus school places to 1991-92 were promulgated in the Public Expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702) and are reflected in the Government's plans for public expenditure. In allocating resources for capital expenditure on education the Department gives priority to work arising from proposals for rationalisation approved under the Education Act 1980.

Teachers

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many teachers, by scale position, have left the profession in each of the past 10 years, before normal retirement age has been reached.

Mr. Dunn: Readily available information is as follows. It covers teachers under the normal minimum retirement age of 60 who have left full-time teaching in maintained nursery, primary or secondary schools in England and Wales other than to go to full-time teaching in other maintained, assisted or grant-aided establishments in England and Wales (mainly special schools and further education establishments).

Independent Schools

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about the number of pupils currently attending independent schools.

Mr. Dunn: In January 1985, the latest year for which figures are available, there were 501,422 full-time and 14,723 part-time pupils in independent schools in England. Full details are published in "Statistics of Eucation, Schools 1985", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate he has made of the implications for the education budget of the abolition of independent schools.

Mr. Dunn: The effect would be complex but the annual cost to public funds, including some allowance for any necessary capital work, might be of the order of £250 million to £350 million at 1985-86 prices.

Student Grants

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to review the student grant system in the light of the proposed changes in eligibility for social security benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The Government are still considering the report of the Social Security Advisory Committee on the proposed changes in eligibility for social security benefit, and a statement will be made in due course.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Capital Expenditure Allocations

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, if he will list in the Official Report, for each local education authority, his Department's capital expenditure allocation at outturn and at constant prices from 1981-82 to 1986-87; and what were the original bids received by his Department for each year.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 28 April 1986, c. 284]: The information is shown in the following two tables.

* Allocations for 1981-82 were made on a different basis from those for later years and have therefore been omitted.
† The allocations shown are those announced before the start of the financial year in question and do not include subsequent revisions.
‡ Calculated at 1984-85 prices using the GDP deflator.
The allocations made may be greater than the planned expenditure shown in the table. The information provided on bids was sometimes incomplete and compensatory adjustments were made to allocations.
¶ The planned expenditure relates to new work only but the allocations included allowances for on-going projects.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools (Resources)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what evidence he has linking resources available to schools with quality of work by staff and pupils; and if there is a statistical correlation between the two factors.

Mr. Dunn: The latest report by Her Majesty's inspectors on the effects of LEA expenditure policies on education, published in May 1985, showed that there was a statistically significant association between work judged satisfactory or better and satisfactory levels of appropriate resources. However, there was no direct causal link established.

Some evidence linking resources in schools to examination results is available from statistical analyses carried out by the Department and published in Statistical Bulletin 13/84. The analysis demonstrated a strong statistical association between examination results achieved by pupils at schools in each local authority and social background data for each authority. When these factors are taken into account, the analysis showed a slight positive but statistically significant correlation between some of the measures of examination results and expenditure on teaching.

Brixton Church of England Primary School, Plymouth

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now consider, in the light of current expenditure by way of capital allocation for voluntary aided schools, making a grant for Brixton Church of England primary school near Plymouth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The available resources for capital projects at aided and special agreement schools in 1986-87 are fully allocated.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what allocations of prescribed capital expenditure on equipment, plant and machinery for advanced and further education under part 8 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 were made to local education authorities in England in respect of the 1985-86 and 1986-87 financial years.

Mr. Walden: The following table shows for each local education authority, whose bid distinguished advanced further education (AFE), the component for AFE equipment, plant and machinery included within the education allocations of prescribed capital expenditure in 1985-86 and 1986-87. The breakdown of allocations is informative rather than prescriptive since authorities are free under part VIII of the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980 to apply their allocations as they see fit, taking account of local needs as they perceive them.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what prescribed capital expenditure on equipment, plant and machinery in institutions of further and higher education each local authority in England has incurred every financial year from 1979-80 until 1984-85 in (a) cash and (b) real terms, distinguishing in each case between polytechnics and other establishments.

Mr. Walden: The information given in the tables shows, for each authority, outturn expenditure on equipment, plant and machinery in polytechnics and other maintained establishments of further education.

Barnsley College of Technology

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will ensure that consultations take place between the National Advisory Board for Public Sector Higher Education and the Barnsley metropolitan district council on the National Advisory Board's proposed cuts in high technology and advanced mining courses at the Barnsley college of technology before any decisions on cutbacks in these courses are taken.

Mr. Walden: The student number proposals for 1987-88 issued by the secretariat of the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education (NAB) are for consultation. Comments on the proposals have been invited from the institutions affected and their maintaining authorities by 13 June 1986. It is open to Barnsley metropolitan district council and to Barnsley college of technology to respond to that invitation.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will call for the reports of Her Majesty's inspectors of education on the quality and successes of the high technology and advanced mining courses at the Barnsley college of technology in recent years for his personal examination before any decisions are taken on the proposed cuts of the National Advisory Board for Public Sector Higher Education;

(2) before he accepts the proposals for cuts of £378,000 by his National Advisory Board in the Barnsley college of technology's specialists courses, if he will take into account the numbers of job losses at the college, the inconvenience of transfers affecting Barnsley students, the loss of specialist college facilities to local business men and businesses and the lessening prospects of attracting high technology firms to Barnsley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The consultative student number proposals for 1987-88 issued at the beginning of April by the secretariat of the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education are one stage of a planning exercise which will culminate in the submission of advice by the National Advisory Body to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The NAB committee will not determine its advice about student numbers in the public sector and their disposition in 1987-88 until the funding available is announced in the autumn. At that juncture, and in the light of the circumstances then prevailing, the NAB committee has indicated that it will wish to reconsider the question of the overall level of intakes in 1987-88 as well as the implications for individual institutions. The NAB usually submits its final advice to my right hon. Friend in December. It is only then that my right hon. Friend becomes involved, normally announcing his decisions about planned student numbers and the distribution of the advanced further education pool before Christmas. In reaching his decisions my right hon. Friend will have regard to all the relevant factors.

Teacher Training

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he held any consultations with the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education before making his provisional allocation of initial teacher training intakes for 1987 to 1989.

Mr. Walden: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have consulted or received advice from the council on this matter.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Corporal Peter Clark

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General (1) on what date the Director of Public Prosecutions' office decided that no criminal proceedings were appropriate in the case of Corporal Peter Clark;

(2) on what date the Director of Public Prosecutions' office informed the appropriate military authorities of its decision regarding Corporal Peter Clark.

The Attorney-General: At no time did the Director of Public Prosecutions consider that criminal proceedings in the civil courts were appropriate against Corporal Peter Clark, and notified this fact to the Minister of Defence on 11 April 1984.

Cyprus Secrets Trial

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General whether the Director of Public Prosecutions attempted to bring to the United Kingdom the Cypriot national alleged by the prosecution to be a KGB agent, to appear at the trial of service men from 9 Signals Regiment.

The Attorney-General: No.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Manpower

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his reviews of police manpower have been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: On 21 October I announced that I was setting in hand urgent work to assess where there were specific needs for increases in the establishment of the Metropolitan police. At the same time I asked Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary to conduct a parallel review of the manpower needs of provincial forces. These reviews have been completed, and I can now announce their outcome.

When this Government first took office in May 1979 the police service as a whole was about 7,500 below an establishment of 119,000 which was itself inadequate. The Metropolitan police was more than 16 per cent. below strength. My predecessors took vigorous action to put this right. The result is that total police strength in England and Wales at the end of March stood at 120,848—9,355 more than May 1979. Total strength, including civilians, has risen by 14,076 over the same period.

These substantial increases have been accompanied by a strong drive towards greater efficiency and effectiveness in line with our determination to secure better value for money throughout the public sector. We have emphasised the need to make the best use of the available manpower, for example through civilianisation, which resulted in the release of over 1,000 officers for operational duty in 1983-84 and 1984-85. This has been an essential part of our policy, and it will be maintained. The measures taken by chief officers have put their forces in a better position to cope with the increased demands which have been made on them.

But those demands—to deal with terrorism, drugs, crime and public order—have continued to increase. Accordingly, last autumn I decided that there should be a comprehensive look at police manpower, and set in hand the reviews which I announced on 21 October.

These reviews sought to assess the proven needs for additional police officers, and also the extent to which these needs could be met by civilianisation and other efficiency measures. As a result, we have decided that our objective should be further to increase police strength in England and Wales by about 3,200 and civilian manpower by around 2,000. This priority given to the police will be reflected in the 1987-88 rate support grant settlement.

I aim to approve total increases in the establishments of provincial forces of the order of 2,000. I am prepared to approve 430 of these additional posts in the current financial year. For the rest, I envisage a phased programme of increases over the next few years. I shall be considering applications from police authorities on the basis of the proven needs of the force, and in the light of advice from Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary. In particular, I shall need to be satisfied that any additional manpower is to be used to meet specific, measurable objectives. Police authorities applying for increases must, of course, be ready to carry their share of the cost, and the precise timing of these increases will depend on levels of spending and provision for future years. My approval is not required for increases in civilian manpower in the provinces, but I expect to see phased increases of approximately 1,350. This will provide scope for substantial further civilianisation resulting, I hope, in the release of at least 650 police officers for operational duty. Altogether this will amount to an increase in operational strength of more than 2,600.

The Metropolitan police will receive an increase of up to 1,200 police officers, on top of the increase of 50 for drugs work to which I announced my agreement in principle last October. There will also be provision for increases of 600 in the civil staff ceiling to assist with further civilianisation, which should lead to the release of at least 400 officers for operational duty. A further 200 officers will be released by the Commissioner's reorganisation of the force. Altogether this will amount to an increase in operational strength of up to 1,850 officers.

As the first step in this programme, I have confirmed the increase of 50 in the police establishment previously agreed in principle, and authorised a further increase of 300 for 1986-87. I have also agreed to an increase of 107 in the civil staff ceiling for 1986-87, on top of the 43 agreed by my predecessor last June. The cost of these increases will be contained within the cash limit previously announced. For each of the next three years up to the end of 1989-90 I can indicate now as police authority for the metropolis that I shall be prepared to agree to further increases of up to 300 in the police establishment and 150 in the civil staff ceiling. Before doing so I shall need to be satisfied that earlier increases have been effectively used in accordance with the agreed objectives, and that satisfactory progress has been made with civilianisation and the force reorganisation. My officials will be keeping in close touch with the Metropolitan police to monitor the results of the increases.

The day-to-day deployment of this additional manpower will be for chief officers of police to determine, in the light of the objectives they will have identified. I know that many wish to increase the visible police presence on the streets. I therefore expect to see a steady increase in the number of officers on foot patrol, deterring the criminal and the hooligan and protecting and reassuring the citizen. This will help achieve our twin objectives of curbing crime and reducing fear of crime. I also hope that increased resources will enable chief officers to strengthen further their investment in crime prevention initiatives such as neighbourhood watch.

Some specialised police units will be reinforced. The Commissioner plans to strengthen his squads dealing with organised crime, drug trafficking, fraud and armed robbery. There will also be increases for the vital anti-terrorist work of the Metropolitan police special branch; and additional resources will be available for protection duties.

News International, Wapping

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total policing costs to date of the News International dispute at Wapping.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests have taken place at Wapping, in connection with the print dispute, from 9 May to date.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Sixty-nine, up to 18 May.

Broadcasting (Political Bias)

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he next proposes to meet the director general of the British Broadcasting Corporation to discuss its charter in respect of political bias; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he next proposes to meet the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority to discuss political bias in programme content; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend has no plans to discuss this matter with either broadcasting authority. Parliament has given responsibility in this field direct to the broadcasting authorities, and not to the Government.

Television (All-night Programmes)

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, when he next meets the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority, he will raise with him the social and environmental impact of the proposed introduction of all-night pop video television programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend discussed this proposal with the chairman of the authority when he met him on 19 May. We understand that the plans are for an experiment on Yorkshire Television to guage the level of interest in all-night television services. All-night radio services have existed for many years, and the Government see no reason to believe that all-night television services will have any greater social or environmental impact.

Mr. Peter Harvey

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Mr. Peter Harvey has been employed at any time in any capacity, by his office.

Mr. Hurd: Yes. Mr. Harvey has been employed as a lawyer in the Home Office legal adviser's branch from 15 July 1948 to 17 April 1977 and again since 1 October 1983.

Immigration Officers (Airports)

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration officers are allocated to each airport in the United Kingdom and on what basis these numbers are determined.

Mr. Waddington: The United Kingdom airports at which there is a permanent immigration officer complement are:

	Number
Aberdeen	5
Birmingham	23
Bristol	4
Cardiff	4
East Midlands	10
Edinburgh	5
Gatwick	137
Glasgow	16
Heathrow	564
Bournemouth/Hurn	3
Leeds/Bradford	7
Luton	20
Lydd	2
Manchester	29
Norwich	4
Prestwick	6
Southend	5
Stansted	8

These numbers are determined on the basis of the volume and type of traffic and the time over which passenger movements are spread.

Adults and Children (Sexual Contacts)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department is sponsoring any research into sexual contacts between adults and children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Data in this area are kept constantly under review in the Department. An article on "Child homicide and child physical and sexual abuse" was published in the Home Office research and planning unit research bulletin No. 20 earlier this year. A study of rape offences (which will include offences against minors) is in the current programme of the research and planning unit.

Liverpool (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Liverpool.

Mr. Hurd: I visited Merseyside on 16 May. I visited the Department's computing and pay branch at Bootle where I discussed the work of the branch and met members of staff. After lunch with local business men and a visit to Albert dock, I visited the Merseyside police drug squad and had discussions with senior and operational officers about the scale of drug misuse in the area and the force's response in relation to drug misusers and to the activities of drug dealers and traffickers.

Prison Service (Garages)

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many garages are owned by Her Majesty's prison service; how many of these are let to prison officers; and how many of these are let to members of the public.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 9-10]: Approximately 6,600 prison officers occupy quarters, of whom about two thirds rent garages from the prison department. Very few garages are let to members of the public. Precise figures, and information on the total number of garages owned, could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on letting garages belonging to Her Majesty's prison service to members of the public resident nearby.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 9-10]: Only exceptionally are garages let to members of the public. When surplus to requirements, garages are normally sold.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 20 May.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 20 May.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 20 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

Housebuilding Statistics

Mr. McNamara asked the Prime Minister if, following her reply to the hon. Member for Heywood and Middleton (Mr. Callaghan), Official Report, 15 May, column 851, she will indicate those areas in the United Kingdom where the 1·3 million new homes were built last year and whether this is a record number of new homes built in the United Kingdom in any one year.

The Prime Minister: The figure to which I referred applies to the whole of the period since 1979.

WALES

Children's ENT Hospital, Cardiff

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to increase equipment and financial resources for the children's ear, nose and throat hospital in Cardiff, West; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The allocation of resources for the Children's ear, nose and throat hospital in Cardiff is a matter for South Glamorgan health authority to determine.

Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions during the year 1985-86 civil servants from his Department paid official visits to Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many appeals against refusals of planning permission by Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor were made to his Department during 1985-86; how many of these were upheld; how many rejected; how many withdrawn; and how many are still under consideration.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Since 1 January 1985 there have been 24 appeals against refusals of planning permission by Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor. Five were upheld (two with conditions), nine dismissed and three withdrawn. Seven are under consideration.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications for funds from the European Economic Community by Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor have been processed by his Department in each year since 1979; how many of these were successful; how much money was granted to Dwyfor in pursuance of each such application; and whether all the money has been taken up in each case.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor—(Dwyfor district council)—has made two applications, in respect of European regional development fund aid, since 1979, both of which were successful. The details are:

Year of Application	Project	Commitment Approved £	Payments to date £	Claims yet to be made by Council £
1979	Services to industrial estates	20,850	17,850	3,000
1982	Refuse Pulveriser	801,581	*nil	200,396

* A claim for payment of £601,185 is awaiting approval in Brussels.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications he has received from Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor for additional resources towards housing costs during the year 1985-86.

Mr. Mark Robinson: None.

Housing

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications he received from district councils in Wales during 1985-86 for special permission to use capital resources arising from the sale of council houses, in order to purchase houses from the public sector to let to people on the local housing waiting list; and if he will list these authorities together with the number of dwellings involved in each application, the numbers approved for each authority, and the capital expenditure entailed in these approvals.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Local authorities are not required to seek consent to acquire houses for addition to their permanent rented stock provided that the expenditure is funded from the prescribed proportion of their capital receipts. However, special approval is required if a local authority wishes to borrow in order to meet such expenditure. During 1985-86 Preseli Pembrokeshire was the only local authority to seek special consent; loan sanction for the purchase of three dwellings was sought and approved, of which two purchases were completed at a total cost of £43,500.

Enterprise Express

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what contributions he expects the Enterprise Express to make to youth employment in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Enterprise Express was a valuable means of telling young people how to take advantage of the opportunities for employment, training and enterprise which are available to them.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what liaison is planned between industry and the Manpower Services Commission Enterprise Express to ensure that proper and relevant advice and training are given in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Close and continuous liaison with industry is an integral part of the MSC's operations at all levels and was reflected in the excellent advice and information provided on the Enterprise Express.

Visual Arts

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the cost of the suggested reappraisal of the presentation of the visual and related arts in Wales, involving alterations to the buildings at Cathays Park, and the move of all or part of the departments not concerned with art to St. Fagans.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The preliminary appraisal by the advisory group estimated the cost of its three shortlisted schemes affecting the National museum building at Cathays Park as:

Estimated Capital Cost

	£ million
(a) the relocation of all or part of the museum departments to St. Fagans leaving Cathays Park wholly or substantially as a national gallery without any substantial development of the courtyard;	14·9—21·5
(b) the relocation of the museum departments to St. Fagans with the development of a theatre in the courtyard;	28·5
(c) the retention of all departments at Cathays Park in an expanded building providing separation between the museum and national gallery and much better visitor circulation	14·4

I am now discussing these possibilities, together with the other recommendations in the report, with interested parties. A copy of the report was placed in the Library on 15 April.

Bathing Beaches

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are being taken by his Department to improve the conditions of the beaches used for bathing in Wales following the report of the European Community Commission on the subject.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to paragraphs 2.2, 2.3 and 5.2 to 5.5 of the "Government Response to the Committee on Welsh Affairs' Report on Coastal Sewage Pollution in Wales' a copy of which is in the Library.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the number of school leavers employed on YTS in each of the Welsh counties in each year since the scheme was introduced; and how many of these have found full-time employment on completing the scheme.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information is not available in the precise form requested. Available information relates to the number of entrants by Manpower Services Commission area office. The number of entrants were as follows:

	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86
Gwent	3,927	3,933	4,152
Dyfed and West Glamorgan	5,185	5,535	5,601
Mid and South Glamorgan	7,160	8,409	8,143
Clwyd, Gwynedd and Powys	5,388	5,732	5,799

Information at this level on those finding full-time employment is available only for 1985-86 when the 100 per cent. follow-up survey was introduced. The percentage of leavers between April and November 1985 finding full-time employment within three months of leaving were:

	Per cent.
Gwent	45
Dyfed and West Glamorgan	42
Mid and South Glamorgan	41
Clwyd, Gwynedd and Powys	52

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many school leavers were employed by British Rail in Wales as part of the YTS in 1985; and how many were later offered permanent positions with British Rail.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There were 47 entrants to British Rail YTS schemes in Wales during 1985-86. The Manpower Services Commission does not hold information on numbers of trainees who are already employees or are offered permanent employment during or after their traineeship by specific employers.

Orion Electric

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people will be employed by the Japanese company Orion Electric, recently established in the Welsh Development Agency factory at Kenfig Hill.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I understand that the company has said that it intends to employ about 100 people within 12 months.

Hospital Beds

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if the Government's health care scheme will lead to a reduction in the number of hospital beds needed in Welsh hospitals.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The Government's policies are aimed at providing appropriate, accessible and cost-effective health provision to a high standard. The Government's recent consultative paper "Primary Health Care: An Agenda for Discussion" explores ways in which the primary care services can be improved. The document is not directly concerned with hospital provision. However, improvements in primary care, including the promotion of good health and preventive medicine, have a bearing upon future hospital provision.

Production and Construction Industries

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the output of production and construction industries in each of the Welsh counties since 1981.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Direct Government support for industry is provided through regional development grants and regional selective assistance. Only the latter is available to the construction industry. Figures for regional development grants approved under the arrangements operating before November 1984 are not available by county. The total expenditure in Wales since 1 April 1981 has been £488·81 million. Up to 31 March 1986, offers of regional development grant under post November 1984 arrangements have amounted to:

	£ million
Clwyd	8·57
Dyfed	2·02
Gwent	3·05
Gwynedd	0·38
Powys	0·03
Mid Glamorgan	11·27
West Glamorgan	3·32

Offers of regional selective assistance to production and construction industries which were accepted in the period 1 April 1981 to 30 March 1986 amounted to:

	£ million
Clwyd	34·174
Dyfed	5·726
Gwent	52·548
Gwynedd	1·710
Mid Glamorgan	39·455
Powys	2·065
South Glamorgan	15·755
West Glamorgan	14·200

This takes no account of the wide range of construction related expenditure undertaken by Government and Government agencies, and made possible by grants to local authorities.

Hospitals (United States Authorities)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales at which hospitals in Wales the United States authorities have the right to use facilities in the event of an emergency; and under what arrangements they have these rights.

Mr. Mark Robinson: United States casualties may be treated in NHS hospitals under the United Kingdom-United States lines of communication arrangement. No hospital in Wales is designated for exclusive use by United States authorities in an emergency.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cincinnati Slaughter Pens

Mr. Richard Page asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of Cincinnati slaughter pens currently in use.

Mrs. Fenner: We are not aware of any Cincinnati pens in use in England and Wales.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Richard Page asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of licensed slaughterhouses.

Mrs. Fenner: In England and Wales there are 112 licensed poultry slaughterhouses, and about 910 red meat slaughterhouses, including those operated by local authorities which are not subject to licensing requirements.

Radiation (Milk)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the date and time at which the first sample of milk was taken for analysis for caesium 137, the number of samples subsequently taken and the period which normally elapses between collection of a milk sample and completion of analysis for this radioisotope.

Mrs. Fenner: The first sample of milk for analysis for caesium 137 was taken on the morning of 29 April and over 600 samples have since been taken by my Department. Samples have also been taken by Welsh Office agriculture department, Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland and the National Radiological Protection Board.

The great majority of results are available on the day following collection, but, if necessary, some have been made available within a few hours. The period which elapses between collection of a milk sample and completion of analysis would normally depend on the distance from the sampling point to the laboratory.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer of 1 May concerning net farm incomes, Official Report, columns 473-76, whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing in terms of costs and prices the reason for the increase in real incomes on cropping farms between 1968-69 and 1983-84.

Mrs. Fenner: Detailed information on between-year movements in the costs and revenues of cropping farms is published in the annual reports of the "Farm Management Survey, Farm Incomes in England and Wales" for the years 1967-68 to 1970-71 (tables 30 and 36) and "Farm Incomes in England for the years 1979-80 to 1983-84" (tables 19 and 21 for 1979-80 to 1982-83; tables 21 and 23 for 1982-83 and 1983-84). Copies of these reports are available in the Library of the House.

Beer

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions have been placed by Germany on the import of British beer; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

Defective Housing

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if Leicester city council was eligible to submit a bid for additional funding for Boot houses under the Housing Defects Act;

(2) if he will publish a list in the Official Report of local authorities which have submitted bids for additional funding under the Housing Defects Act.

Sir George Young: My Department's circular 9/85 (dated 27 March 1985) gave local housing authorities the opportunity to bid for additional housing investment programme allocations if these were needed to meet expected statutory obligations in 1985-86 under the housing defects legislation. Leicester city council did not apply: the authorities which have done so are listed. Of these, 28 were notified, in August 1985, that they were likely to be eligible for assistance: a further six have now been notified on the basis of end December 1985 monitoring returns.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many repair systems to Smith houses that meet PRC Homes Ltd.'s rules have been registered; how many have been considered; and how many are under consideration.

Sir George Young: Though none has yet been submitted to PRC Homes Ltd., I hope appropriate repair methods for Smith houses will emerge in due course.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of (a) PRC Homes Ltd. and (b) the National House Builders Council; and what was discussed.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met the National House Building Council on 14 January, for a general discussion. My officials attend all meetings of the PRC Homes Ltd. assessment committee: the most recent was on 13 May, at which repair systems for Airey, Cornish Unit, Stent and Unity houses were discussed. My officials also attend meetings of the NHBC executive committee: the latest was on 1 May. The repair of Smith houses was not discussed, but the NHBC had confirmed, in January, that the PRC Homes Ltd.'s approval and warranty scheme was being extended to include Smith houses.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the applicability to Smith houses of the criteria used by PRC Homes Ltd. for approving and registering repair systems for prefabricated reinforced concrete houses.

Sir George Young: The Smith house is not a prefabricated reinforced concrete house and I expect that the detailed design criteria used by PRC Homes Ltd. in appraising proposed repair systems will therefore differ from those for PRC houses, but its general criteria for the durability of the repaired house will no doubt remain the same.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update the information in the answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 466, in respect of approved repair schemes for houses designated under the Housing Defects Act.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986]: PRC Homes Ltd. has now approved 14 repair systems, covering the Airey, Cornish Unit, Unity and Woolaway house types. Details of progress on the approval of repair systems (provided by PRC Homes Ltd.), are as follows for all designated types.

Radiation (Public Inquiry Service)

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the operation of the radiation public inquiry point service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The public inquiry point service operated by my Department has handled over 3,000 calls up to 15 May. The information provided has been greatly appreciated.

Graphite Fires (Consultations)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, pursuant to his statement of 6 May, Official Report, column 31, he will now state when he was informed that British scientists were consulted by Soviet scientists about graphite fires; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I was informed of this by the hon. Member on 6 May, who drew my attention to the report in The Scotsman dated 3 May. I now understand that a British scientist working at the International Atomic Energy Agency telephoned staff of the CEGB on 29 April 1986 to ascertain who would be able to advise on graphite fires.

Property Services Agency (Museums)

Mr. Rathbone asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the service provided by the Property Services Agency to museums in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The national museums and galleries are housed for the most part in old, and often historic, buildings. These require extensive and expensive care and maintenance which, under present arrangements, is the responsibility of the Property Services Agency.

The agency is currently pursing a programme of planned maintenance and renovation within the limits of the finance that can be made available for this work. Following the eighth report of the Education, Science and Arts Committee, the Government are now engaged on a review of the relationship between the PSA and the national museums and galleries in England, with particular reference to the provision of works services.

Gloucestershire and Cheltenham (Rate Support Grant)

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the amount of rate support grant for (a) Gloucestershire county council and (b) Cheltenham borough council in (i) 1984-85, (ii) 1985-86 and (iii) 1986-87, showing for 1986-87 what it was (y) before and (z) after the grant recycling.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to my reply given on 14 April 1986, at column 308, about Gloucestershire county council's block grant entitlement in 1985-86 and 1986-87. The council's latest entitlement for 1984-85 is £71·041 million under the third supplementary report. For Cheltenham borough council the figure (i) for 1984-85 is £1·920 million, (ii) for 1985-86 is £1·882 million under the second supplementary report, and (iii) for 1986-87 is £2·456 million under the "Rate Support Grant Report (England) 1986".

As my right hon. Friend announced on 7 May, the total estimated grant underclaim is now about £628 million. This would be distributed to local authorities at the first supplementary report; on this basis Cheltenham's grant entitlement would increase by £220,000 and Gloucestershire's by £6·027 million. In the meantime, all the money is being paid to authorities as a single percentage enhancement of their grant entitlement.

NIREX

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of NIREX.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 11 March at columns 431-32, to my hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown).

Labour Mobility

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to assist in the mobility of labour.

Sir George Young: We proposed extending the assured tenancy scheme in the Housing and Planning Bill in order to stimulate the private rented sector to provide accommodation, thereby helping those who move for employment purposes. In the public rented sector, we have provided additional resources for the National Mobility Office, to promote the national mobility scheme for tenants wishing to move between local authority areas.

Sports Clubs and Premises (De-rating)

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to introduce legislation de-rating sports clubs and premises; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have no plans to do so, and I have received no representations on this matter.

Nuclear-free Zones

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Leicester, East of 12 May, Official Report, column 365, if he will publish in the Official Report such information as is available to his Department about local authorities' nuclear-free zones activities; if he will take steps to collect detailed information on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Section 137 of the Local Government Act 1972 allows local authorities to incur expenditure which in their opinion is in the interests of their area, up to the product of a 2p rate. I believe that some authorities use this power to fund nuclear-free zones activities, but my right hon. Friend has no powers to require local authorities to give him information about their discretionary spending. The representations referred to in my previous reply do not provide information for publication.

Ealing (Housing)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young) has anything to add to his statement to the House of 22 April, Official Report, column 222, on the Labour party's housing policy for Ealing; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: In column 222 I referred to 21 lines of housing policy in Labour's manifesto in Ealing, based on 81 pages of documents which I had available at the time. I have subsequently discovered 10 pages of housing policy in a separate document, so the remark was inaccurate and I regret it.

While my remarks on the quantity of policy were inaccurate, my reservations about its quality remain unallayed.

Mansfield

Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has reached a decision on proposals submitted to his urban housing renewal unit by the Mansfield district council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I am pleased to announce my right hon. Friend's favourable response to a proposal for a scheme in Mansfield which the district council has worked up in close consultation with my Department's urban housing renewal unit and our East Midlands regional office.

The estate which will benefit from today's decision is the Pleasley estate in Mansfield. This estate comprises 220 terraced houses built between 1890 and 1910. It is at present rundown, neglected, litter-strewn and in need of basic renovation and repairs. It is Mansfield's No. 1 priority for action.

The council intends to devote extra senior staff time to local housing management, focusing on the Pleasley surgery. A caretaker will also be appointed, with responsibility for general oversight, minor repairs, litter picking and help with rubbish removal. I regard efficient localised management as an essential part of the package in order for the council to sustain the improvements which we expect to see as a result of the other steps being taken.

One such step will be a one-year scheme to enable up to 20 long-term unemployed local people funded by the Government's community programme, subject to consideration and support by the Manpower Services Commission's area manpower board, to carry out improvements to the environment and communal areas on their estate. Under the scheme dwellings will be redecorated internally, fences and walls will be rebuilt, and landscaping and planting of open spaces will be undertaken. Two part-time community workers will also be taken on to develop community groups and tenant participation, and to assist in the provision of welfare and financial budgeting advice.

I have also agreed to an additional capital allocation of up to £300,000 for UHRU's targetted housing investment programme resources in 1986-87 to enable the council to carry out urgently needed rewiring and a range of external works on the dwellings. Where necessary, doors, windows and rainwater goods will be replaced, and painting and re-roofing carried out.

This scheme is yet another example of the proposals being worked up through close co-operation between a local authority, my Department's urban housing renewal unit and regional offices. I now look forward to seeing these proposals being put into action for the benefit of the residents at Pleasley.

Blackburn

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has reached a decision on proposals submitted to his urban housing renewal unit by the borough of Blackburn; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I am pleased to announce my right hon. Friend's favourable response to a proposal for a scheme in Blackburn which the borough council has worked up in close consultation with my Department's urban housing renewal unit and our North West regional office.

The estate which will benefit from today's decision is the Green Lane estate in Blackburn. This estate, of traditional construction, consists of 175 houses and 16 flats built between 1923 and 1932 and 215 houses and 39 flats built between 1952 and 1956, a total of 445 dwellings.

The council intends to set up locally based management and repairs arrangements on the estate. An estate-based housing management office will be established and will provide a comprehensive housing service to residents. I regard this as an essential part of the package in order for the council to sustain the improvements which we expect to see as a result of the other steps being taken.

One such step will be a two-year community refurbishment scheme to enable local unemployed people funded jointly by my Department's urban programme and the Government's community programme, subject to consideration and support by the Manpower Services

Commission's area manpower board, to carry out improvements to the environment and communal areas on their estate and to improve energy efficiency and security. Resources of the order of £1,286,179 will be involved, including £665,279 of urban programme funding, which I am pleased to approve in principle.

I have also agreed to an additional capital allocation of £400,000 from UHRU's targeted housing investment programme resources in 1986-87 to enable the council to modernise 133 houses by renewing kitchens and bathrooms, installing central heating and insulation, re-wiring and renewing roofs, doors and windows where necessary. The council proposes to carry out similar work on 190 other houses out of its main HIP programme.

This scheme is yet another example of the proposals being worked up through close co-operation between a local authority, my Department's urban housing renewal unit and regional offices. I now look forward to seeing these proposals being put into action for the benefit of the residents at Green Lane, Blackburn.

Newham

Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has reached a decision on proposals submitted to his urban housing renewal unit by the London borough of Newham; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I am pleased to announce my right hon. Friend's favourable response to three proposed schemes in Newham. These schemes, which are designed to improve housing conditions on the Rathbone estate and at James Sinclair and Dennison Points, have been worked up by the London borough of Newham in close consultation with the Department's urban housing renewal unit and Greater London regional office.

On all three estates the council will be taking steps to improve security for residents. The proposed works include the provision of door entry systems and improved lighting. In addition, James Sinclair Point and Dennison Point will benefit from improvements in management and environmental works and secondary glazing to reduce traffic noise will be provided at the Rathbone estate. I have agreed in principle to a targetted HIP allocation of £1,085,000 for all these works.

I look forward to seeing these proposals being put into action for the benefit of all the residents on these estates in Newham.

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he intends to issue the document "Water Privatisation: Proposals for Water Companies" for public comment; and if he will make a statement;

(2) to whom he circulated the document "Water Privatisation: Proposals for Water Companies"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986]: The document, which sets out proposals for the detailed implementation of policies contained in paragraph 43 of the White Paper "Privatisation of the Water Authorities in England and Wales" (Cmnd. 9734), was sent to the Water Companies' Association and the Water Authorities' Association, whose members it directly concerns.

I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library of both Houses of Parliament.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the proportion by volume of low-level nuclear waste produced each year by reprocessing of British nuclear waste and by imported nuclear waste and his estimate of the amount by volume of low-level waste when the THORP is completed.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986]: Approximately 5 per cent. by volume of the current and anticipated waste arising from reprocessing Magnox fuel originates from reprocessing fuel from overseas.

Approximately 75 per cent. by volume of the estimated volumes of THORP wastes will arise from the reprocessing of overseas fuel.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the difference between the radiological risks of storing nuclear waste on nuclear power station sites and those for early disposal in nuclear dumps.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986]: I refer the hon. Member to table 9, of the report on "Assessment of best practicable environmental options for management of low and intermediate level solid radioactive wastes", HMSO 1986 which sets out the impact of early disposal, and table 10, which summarises the impact of long-term storage at nuclear sites.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the letters protesting at the inclusion of Killingholme in the special development order on nuclear dumping he replied to before publishing it.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986]: Thirty-five. In addition, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State and I responded to a number of letters requesting meetings with deputations by agreeing to such meetings.

Nuclear Energy

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department takes to keep informed of the substance of contacts between British and Soviet scientists on nuclear energy matters.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986]: The scientists employed by my Department make every effort to keep themselves informed on nuclear energy matters by attending conferences and reading the literature. Such activities would naturally include British and Russian contacts.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is given to his Department about discussions between British scientists and the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986]: Formal contacts between the United Kingdom Government and the International Atomic Energy Agency are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. Through his Department my officials are kept fully informed of the activities of the IAEA which are relevant to their responsibilities for waste management and environmental protection.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance his Department gives to British scientists about the formality and substance of contacts they have with Eastern bloc scientists on nuclear energy matters.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986]: None in general, but special procedures govern meetings between British scientists employed by my Department and representatives of Eastern bloc countries.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Sir Paul Bryan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied with the state of private and public housing in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The provision of housing remains of priority commitment for the Hong Kong Government, whose aim is to ensure that every family eventually has a permanent, self-contained home, at a rent or price it can afford. To this end, about one third of its total annual capital expenditure and one tenth of recurrent expenditure is devoted to public housing. The Government-sponsored housing authority has a subsidised public housing programme which aims to produce annually over 40,000 flats (30,000 for rental and 10,000 for ownership). In 1985, they constructed a record 49,724 such flats. In addition to quantity, the authority places emphasis on steadily improving the quality of new public housing, and redeveloping existing stock. At present 2·6 million people, or about 47 per cent. of the population, live in public housing.

The private sector produced some 30,000 units of accommodation in 1985 and production of about 33,000 units is expected in 1986.

Demand for both public and private housing continues to exceed supply, and outstanding demand for public rental flats alone is estimated to be over 330,000 units. Assuming no untoward occurrences and maintenance of current production targets, the bulk of this rental demand should be met by the mid-1990s.

Petty Officer John Black

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he raised with Spanish Ministers or officials the case of the late Petty Officer John Black during the recent state visit of the King and Queen of Spain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: This case was not raised during the recent state visit. At that time we were aware that a reply from the Spanish judicial authorities was on its way to the Spanish Foreign Ministry, although we did not know its precise terms. A formal reply has now been received through Her Majesty's embassy in Madrid and its contents have been conveyed to my hon. Friend in writing.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Grants

4. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Paymaster General what plans he has to increase the present weekly amount paid in training grants.

Mr. Trippier: There are no plans to increase the £25 per person per day payable under the local training grants to employers scheme.

ACAS (Code)

5. Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General when he expects the revised Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service code to be laid before Parliament.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service has not set a precise timetable for publishing its revised code of practice on disciplinary and other procedures in employment. Comments on the draft code were requested by 28 February 1986 and the service is currently studying those received.

In due course, the draft code will be submitted to Ministers for approval, before being laid before Parliament.

Young Workers Scheme

11. Mr. Corbyn asked the Paymaster General what proportion of people employed under the young workers scheme have retained their job after 12 months.

Mr. Lang: A survey of the young workers scheme in 1985, conducted for my Department, suggested that employers expected at least 90 per cent. of young workers would continue in their current job beyond the period of eligibility for young workers scheme support. We recently commissioned further research in this area to test how many young people are actually retained.

Small Businesses

16. Mr. Rowe asked the Paymaster General what plans he has to promote the use of flexible and distance learning to meet the training needs of the small business sector.

Mr. Trippier: I am anxious to encourage all forms of training to meet the needs of the small business sector, and the Manpower Services Commission, as an integral part of the adult training strategy, is exploring the use of flexible and distance learning in depth.

Already the MSC's open tech programme has commissioned open learning material specifically to meet the training needs of supervisors and managers in the small business sector whilst under its training for enterprise scheme it is currently investigating the potential of open learning as a medium for teaching skills necessary for the management of small businesses.

Greater London

17. Mr. Marlow asked the Paymaster General how many unemployed people there are under 25 years of age within Greater London.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, the number of unemployed persons aged under 25 years in Greater London was 142,469.

Employment Committee (Report)

18. Mr. Dixon asked the Paymaster General what practical measures he intends to pursue following the Government's response to the Employment Committee report on special employment measures and the long-term unemployed.

39. Mr. Clelland asked the Paymaster General what measures the Government are undertaking and planning to assist the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We shall be spending £1,200 million this year on specific measures to give practical help to long-term unemployed people. This includes the restart programme under which, from July, every long-term unemployed person will be offered individual positive help towards employment. The full range of measures to encourage employment, training and enterprise are described in our booklet "Action for Jobs —opening more doors."

21. Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received concerning the Government response to the Employment Committee report on special employment measures and the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Lang: None.

40. Mr. Eastham asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received following the Government response to the Employment Committee report on special employment measures and the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Lang: None.

Area Manpower Boards (Membership)

19. Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General how many members of area manpower boards are registered unemployed; and how many registered unemployed currently serve on other bodies which advise him.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Tourist Industry

20. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the job prospects in the tourist industry, showing the annual employment figures for each of the last five years, the numbers of female workers and the number of part-time workers, respectively.

Mr. Trippier: Details on the total number of employees in the main tourism-related industries in hotels, catering and leisure services are published in table 8.1 of labour market data in Employment Gazette for May 1986. A copy of which is in the Library.

The following table shows the available separate details for female and part-time employees in the main tourism-related industries covered in table 8.1 referred to above.

Thousands in June

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Female employees	709	728	707	748	773
Of which: Part-time employees	475	492	499	537	555

Notes:
(1) Groups 661 to 663, 665, 667, 977 and 979 of Standard Industrial Classification, 1980
(2) Annual estimates of part-time male employees are not available.

Labour Statistics

22. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently registered as unemployed within the east midlands area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: On 10 April 1986 the number of unemployed claimants in the east midlands region was 205,847.

The Government's economic strategy is providing the climate of low inflation and sustained growth which is the only sensible way to secure real jobs in the east midlands and elsewhere. The east midlands will also benefit from the new package of measures announced in the Budget to accelerate the growth of enterprise. Boost opportunities for the young, and help the long-term unemployed find work.

23. Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the latest unemployment figures.

Mr. Lang: On 10 April 1986, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 3,325,058.

27. Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General how many persons aged under 25 years have been unemployed for more than 12 months at the latest available date.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age and duration is available, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom aged under 25 years who have been unemployed for more than 12 months was 349,586.

29. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Paymaster General what percentage of the total number of persons aged under 25 years and unemployed have been unemployed for more than 12 months.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age and duration is available, 28 per cent. of unemployed claimants aged under 25 years in the United Kingdom had been unemployed for more than 12 months.

33. Mr. Deakins asked the Postmaster General how many workers were in (a) full-time employment and (b) part-time employment in 1979, 1983 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Lang: Estimates of the numbers of self-employed persons and of male employees are not separately available for full and part-time workers. The available figures are as follows:

Civilian employed labour force in Great Britain

December of each year	Males and full-time female employees	Part-time female employees	Self employed persons
1979	18,792,000	3,880,000	1,896,000
1983	16,635,000	4,081,000	2,298,000
1985*	16,665,000	4,407,000	2,604,000

* The latest date for which an estimate is available.

36. Mr. Strang asked the Paymaster General how many people were unemployed for more than 12 months at the latest available date; and what was the comparable figure five years ago.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available, the number of claimants in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for over 12 months was 1,371,632. The corresponding number of unemployed registrants as at 15 January 1981 was 455,402. The figures are not strictly comparable because of changes in the way the figures are collected.

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General (1) what was the level of youth unemployment in the Liverpool travel-to-work area at the latest date; what was the comparable figure for May 1979; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the level of youth unemployment on Merseyside at the latest date; what were the figures for May 1979; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what was the level of youth unemployment in England and Wales at the latest date; what were the figures in May 1979; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what was the level of youth unemployment in the Liverpool, Riverside constituency at the latest date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The table gives the numbers of unemployed claimants aged under 25 years in England and Wales, Merseyside metropolitan area, the Liverpool travel-to-work area and the Liverpool, Riverside parliamentary constituency as at 9 January 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age is available.

Comparisons of unemployment over the period specified are difficult to make because of changes in the method of collection and compilation of the data. The table also shows the numbers of unemployed registrants aged under 25 years in England and Wales, and for the jobcentre areas which closely correspond to the Merseyside metropolitan area and the travel-to-work area as defined in 1978, in April 1979 (not available for May 1979.

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General (1) what was the level of long-term unemployment in the Liverpool, Riverside constituency at the latest date; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the number of long-term unemployed on Merseyside at the latest date and the comparative figures for May 1979;

(3) if he will list the number of long-term unemployed in the Liverpool travel-to-work area at the latest date and the comparable figures for May 1979;

This includes the restart programme under which, from July, every long-term unemployed person will be offered individual positive help towards employment. The full range of measures to encourage employment, training and enterprise are described in our booklet "Action for Jobs — opening more doors."

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General what plans he has to reduce youth unemployment in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: A reduction in youth unemployment in England and Wales depends on a sustained improvement in the performance of industry, business and the economy as a whole. Our economic policies are designed to create the conditions for that improvement and we are making substantial progress. We also need levels of pay which ensure the competitiveness of our industry.

Our employment and training measures such as two-year YTS and the recently announced new workers scheme will particularly help the employment prospects of young people.

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General what plans he has to reduce youth unemployment in the Liverpool travel-to-work area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: A reduction in youth unemployment in Liverpool depends on a sustained improvement in the performance of industry, business and the economy as a whole. Our economic policies are designed to create the conditions for that improvement and we are making substantial progress. We also need levels of pay which ensure the competitiveness of our industry.

Our employment and training measures such as two-year YTS and the recently announced new workers scheme will particularly help the employment prospects of young people.

The Government are directing special help to particularly hard hit areas such as Liverpool. Since May 1979 Liverpool has received over £170 million in regional assistance.

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General (1) how many job vacancies there were on Merseyside at the latest date; and what was the figure for May 1979;

(2) how many job vacancies there were in the Liverpool travel-to-work area at the latest date; and what was the figure for May 1979.

Mr. Lang: On 4 April 1986 there were 3,098 unfilled vacancies at jobcentres and 80 unfilled vacancies at careers offices closely corresponding to the Merseyside metropolitan area, and 2,429 and 80 unfilled vacancies respectively at offices corresponding to the Liverpool travel-to-work area (including self-employed vacancies and excluding vacancies handled by professional and executive recruitment). Comparisons with May 1979 are difficult to make because of changes in the method of compilation of the data. However, the numbers of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres and careers offices corresponding to the Merseyside metropolitan area in May 1979 were 3,916 and 151, respectively. On the same date there were 2,406 unfilled vacancies at jobcentres and 71 unfilled vacancies at careers offices corresponding to the Liverpool travel-to-work area as defined in 1978 (excluding self-employed vacancies and including vacancies handled by professional and executive recruitment).

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General (1) how many people were unemployed in the Liverpool travel-to-work area at the latest date; and what were the figures for May 1979;

(2) how many persons were unemployed on Merseyside at the latest date; and what were the figures for May 1979.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. On 10 April 1986 the numbers of unemployed claimants in the Liverpool travel-to-work area and the Merseyside metropolitan area were 106,432 and 140,371, respectively. Comparisons with May 1979 are difficult to make because of changes in the method of collection and compilation of the data. However, in May 1979, the number of unemployed registrants in jobcentre areas closely corresponding to the Liverpool travel-to-work area, as defined in 1978, and the Merseyside metropolitan area were 57,060 and 79,644, respectively.

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Paymaster General, further to his answer on 6 May, Official Report, column 34, regarding the errors made by Central Regional council in submitting its returns for the 1981 census of employment, if he will list the effects on all the relevant travel-to-work areas of the published unemployment figures.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1986, c. 504]: The following table shows the effect on the unemployment rates in the relevant travel-to-work areas for 10 April 1986.

	Published rate using revised denominator	Rate using uncorrected denominator	Difference
Stirling
male	18·4	16·2	+2·2
female	10·0	7·7	+2·3
total	14·2	11·7	+2·5

Alloa
male	20·9	21·8	−0·9
female	13·3	16·0	−2·7
total	18·0	19·8	−1·8

The effects of the revision on the unemployment rates will vary over time.

Merseyside

24. Mr. Wareing asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently unemployed on Merseyside; and if will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: On 10 April 1986, the number of unemployed claimants in the Merseyside metropolitan area was 140,371.

The Government's economic strategy is providing the climant of low inflation and sustained growth which is the only sensible way to secure real jobs on Merseyside and elsewhere.

Furthermore, Merseyside will benefit from the new package of measures announced in the Budget to accelerate the growth of enterprise, boost employment opportunities for the young and help the long-term unemployed find work.

Local Enterprise Agencies

25. Mr. Cash asked the Paymaster General how many local enterprise agencies have been set up; and what future development of this network is anticipated.

Mr. Trippier: There are currently 336 local enterprise agencies throughout the United Kingdom, of which 246 are approved under the terms of the Finance Act 1982, which allows business sector sponsors tax relief on their contributions to such bodies. The main future development in this sector is expected to be a strengthening of the existing agencies and, in particular, of their role as a focus for local networks of support to small businesses. This is a major objective of the Government's local enterprise agency grant scheme.

Workfare Schemes

26. Mr. Colvin asked the Paymaster General when he will introduce workfare schemes for the unemployed.

Mr. Lang: The restart programme for the long-term unemployed, which is to be launched in July, will include a number of elements which feature in workfare programmes for unemployed welfare claimants in the United States of America, in particular job clubs to help and encourage the unemployed to seek work.

Youth Training Scheme

28. Mr. Boyes asked the Paymaster General when he will next meet the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss the implementing of the two-year YTS.

Mr. Trippier: I have regular meetings with the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss a range of issues amongst which is the implementation of two-year YTS.

Suffolk

30. Mr. Yeo asked the Paymaster General what recent steps have been taken to promote employment in Suffolk.

Mr. Lang: The Government's economic strategy is providing the climate of low inflation and sustained growth which is the only sensible way to secure real jobs in Suffolk and elsewhere. Suffolk will also benefit from the new package of measures announced in the Budget to accelerate the growth of enterprise, boost opportunities for the young, and help the long-term unemployed find work.

Self-Employment

31. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the current volume of self-employment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: In December 1985, the lastest date for which figures are available, the number of self-employed people in the United Kingdom was provisionally estimated to be 2,665,000. The increase in the number of self-employed since 1979 has been very encouraging.

American Tourists

32. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Paymaster General what is his estimate of the number of tourists from the United States of America visiting the United Kingdom so far in 1986.

Mr. Trippier: There were about 330,000 visits to the United Kingdom by north American residents in the first two months of 1986. Separate figures for United States residents are not yet available.

Wage Levels

34. Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General what has been the comparable change in wage levels of the highest and lowest decile since 1979.

Mr. Lang: Between April 1979 and April 1985 the gross weekly earnings of full-time adult employees at the highest decile increased by 103 per cent. for males and by 135 per cent. for females. Over the same period, the corresponding increases at the lowest decile were 76 per cent. for males and 85 per cent. for females.

YTS (Civil Service)

35. Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General what steps the Manpower Services Commission is taking to seek to increase the number of YTS places in the Civil Service.

Mr. Trippier: The Manpower Services Commission is engaged in continuing discussions with my Department and with the Management and Personnel Office which aim to establish how best to carry forward the development of YTS in the Civil Service.

Unemployment Count

37. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Paymaster General if he is satisfied with the arrangements for counting the number of people out of work.

Mr. Lang: I am satisfied that the monthly unemployment count is an accurate record of those claiming benefits. Less frequent estimates of those without jobs seeking work are available from surveys. Preliminary results of the labour force survey conducted in spring 1985 showed some 1,080,000 people included in the monthly count who either had a job or were not seeking work, while 760,000 people without jobs and seeking work were excluded from the claimant total.

38. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General how many changes have been made since 1979 in the way in which the unemployment figures are counted.

Mr. Lang: Since 1979 there have been six changes which have had a discernible effect on the unemployment count, and three of these have been minor.

Manufacturing and Construction Industries (Accident Figures)

41. Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General what were the major accident and death figures for the manufacturing and construction industries for 1981 and 1984.

Mr. Trippier: The table gives the information requested.

Year and industry	Reported deaths	Reported major injuries
1981
Manufacturing	119	4,139
Construction	129	1,766
1984
Construction	124	2,434

The figures are of occupational deaths and major injuries to employees and others, reported under the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations (NADOR) 1980 to authorities responsible for enforcing the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. Major injuries are as defined under NADOR.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Holt asked the Paymaster General how many actors, musicians or other semi self-employed persons are drawing unemployment benefit; and if there are any in the above categories resident in Cleveland.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the form requested. According to analysis of the labour force survey, there were about 17,000 claimants included in the monthly unemployment count in Great Britain in spring 1985 who said they were currently self-employed but not with a permanent job. The information is not available for Cleveland because of the sampling errors that would be involved.

Long-term Unemployment

Dr. McDonald asked the Paymaster General if he will publish the latest number of long-term unemployed interviewed under the restart scheme in each of the pilot areas, together with a breakdown of the results of these interviews, showing the numbers placed into jobs, the community programme, and other measures, and how many long-term unemployed have had their benefits reduced under section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975 following a restart interview.

Mr. Lang: The information requested for the period from 6 January to 9 May (the latest date for which figures are available) is given in the table.

The figures in the table relate only to placings which have resulted directly from the restart interview. It is not known how many of those interviewed go on to find jobs or other positions themselves as a result of being remotivated by restart, although a total of some 2,200 long-term unemployed people have ceased to claim unemployment benefit after being interviewed.

Thirty-seven people's benefit has been suspended or reduced for refusing suitable employment or training at a restart interview, pending a decision on their case by an adjudication officer. Five have subsequently had their benefit restored.

† Figures relate to those attending courses in the period up to 2 May.

Adult Training

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General when he will next meet the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss adult training.

Mr. Trippier: I have regular meetings with the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss a variety of issues including adult training.

School Leavers

Mr. Wigley asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table showing the average number of school leavers claiming unemployment benefit or social security in each of the Welsh counties in each year since 1981.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The table shows, for each county of Wales, the average numbers of school leavers under 18 years of age claiming unemployment benefit, supplementary benefit or national insurance credits at unemployment benefit offices in 1984 and 1985. Comparable figures for years prior to 1984 are not available because of the change to a ward-based system of allocating claimants to localities. Also, prior to October 1982, the statistics related to registrants at jobcentres rather than claimants.

Unemployed school leavers aged under 18 years

	Average number 1984	1985

SCOTLAND

Youth Training Scheme

43. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people are currently participating in youth training schemes operated by local authorities and health boards in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Precise information is not available. However, information compiled between 1 March and 13 May 1986 suggests that around 9,550 young people in Scotland are participating in YTS programmes operated by local authorities and some 180 in those operated by health boards. The support of YTS by these bodies is greatly appreciated.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of youth unemployment in Scotland at the latest date; and what were the figures for May 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is not available for May 1979, but in April 1979 the number of unemployed people under the age of 25 years was 67,844. In January 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the corresponding figure was 146,209. The figures are not comparable due to changes in the compilation of stasistics over the period.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of long-time unemployed in Scotland at the latest date and the comparable figure for May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is not available for May 1979, but in April 1979 the number of registered unemployed people in Scotland who had been unemployed for 12 months or more was 45,578. In January 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of unemployed people claiming benefit who had been unemployed for 12 months or more was 146,976. The figures are not directly comparable because of various changes over the period in the compilation of unemployment statistics.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of job vacancies in Scotland at the latest date; and what was the figure in May 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The number of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres in Scotland in May 1979 was 23,855. In April 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number was 19,296. The figures are not comparable, however, because of changes in the basis of the statistical compilation. The number of vacancies notified to jobcentres is estimated overall to be only about one third of the total of vacanices available at any time.

Job Creation

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to reduce long-term unemployment in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on 3 July 1985 at column 155. As my right hon. and learned Friend the Paymaster General has indicated in his reply today to the hon. Member for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon), the Government are spending £1·2 billion in the current year on help for long-term unemployed people throughout Great Britain.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to reduce youth unemployment in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my right hon. and learned Friend the Paymaster General gave him today. The key to improved employment prospects for all unemployed people, in Scotland as elsewhere in the United Kingdom, lies in the better economic performance and increased industrial competitiveness which the Government's policies are designed to secure.

In the meantime, the full range of the Government's special employment and training measures is available to young people in Scotland, who will benefit from the expansion of these measures announced in the Budget statement.

NHS (General Management)

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will undertake further consultation on the development of general management at unit level in the Scottish Health Service.

Mr. Rifkind: The Scottish Home and Health Department has issued a draft circular and a copy of the report by Coopers and Lybrand Associates on general management at unit level in the Scottish Health Service for consultation. Copies of both documents have been placed in the Library. Comments on them have been requested by Friday 18 July 1986.

In my reply to my hon. Friend on 6 February 1986, at columns 233-34, I said that the full report of the Coopers and Lybrand study would not be an appropriate document for public consultation as it was likely to contain material confidential to the boards participating in the study. Having now seen the report, I am satisfied that it does not contain confidential material and, in the interests of informing the debate as far as possible, I am happy to authorise the wide dissemination of this useful report and the draft guidance based on it.

As I indicated in my reply of Thursday 6 February, Ministers will consider the results of this further consultation in the course of the summer and final guidance on general management at unit level will be issued in time for health boards to plan implementation following the holiday period.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Energy how big a part of the 20 per cent. saving in energy costs sought by the end of this Parliament has been achieved by the latest date for which figures are available; and if he still expects to achieve all of the saving originally sought.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government believe that they have set in motion an energy efficiency programme which will not only ensure that over the lifetime of this Parliament our rate of improvement exceeds that of our international competitors, but by the 1990s will bring about the achievement in full of the savings they have identified.

NCB (Subsidiaries)

Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he intends that the National Coal Board should sell its interest in British Fuel, and dispose of its subsidiaries, Southern Depots Ltd. and National Fuel Distributors Ltd.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a matter for the National Coal Board to decide.

Magnox Reactors

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if the details of the 20-year safety reviews on Magnox stations will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive will in future publish its conclusions on each long-term safety review, following discussion of those conclusions with the licensee.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all the Magnox reactors at present being operated within the United Kingdom and, in each case, give the date of commissioning.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is as follows:

Station	Number of magnox reactors	Date of first commissioning
Calder Hall	4	1956
Chapelcross	4	1958
Berkeley	2	1962
Bradwell	2	1962
Dungeness A	2	1965
Hinkley Point A	2	1965
Hunterston A	2	1964
Oldbury on Severn	2	1967
Sizewell A	2	1966
Trawsfynydd	2	1965
Wylfa	2	1971

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will adopt a timetable for the phasing out of all Magnox reactors within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: No.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy what research Her Majesty's Government have done into the siting of nuclear power stations underground; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The possibility of siting nuclear power stations underground has been examined from time to time. However, all reactors are designed to prevent emissions of radiation and radioactive materials. The best combination of excavation and building structures for that purpose will depend on individual site characteristics. No potential advantage in cost or effectiveness has been identified which would require specific research into underground siting.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy what research has been carried out into the practicality of de-commissioning existing nuclear power stations and converting their source to fossil fuel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Research and experimental work in the United Kingdom on the decommissioning of nuclear reactors is carried out by the Atomic Energy Authority. I am not aware of any studies of the conversion of nuclear power stations to fossil-fuel burning.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the total installed capacity of nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: At the end of 1985, output capacity of nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom was 7,064 MW.

Power Stations

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the current unused capacity of fossil fuel powered electric power stations in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: Generation at individual CEGB power stations depends on a number of factors including the demand for electricity, the cost of generation at each unit, fuel prices and supplies, and the availability of more economical plant elsewhere. At any one time a particular unit on the system may not be needed to meet demand, although it will be a part of the essential margin of capacity required to ensure that an uninterrupted supply of electricity is available.

Electricity in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Power Stations (Emissions)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the proportion of the capital cost of coal-fired power stations that would be required to provide these stations with equipment for the removal of sulphur dioxide from the emissions made by these stations.

Mr. Goodlad: I have been advised by the CEGB that the installation of equipment for a substantial reduction in the sulphur dioxide emissions from a 2,000 MW coal-fired power station would result in an increase of approximately 15 per cent. in the total capital cost.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Africa

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by country the current levels of British aid to African countries; and how much of it is targeted to famine relief.

Mr. Raison: In 1985 gross bilateral aid disbursements to Africa totalled £306 million; this includes £31 million of disaster relief aid and £25 million of food aid (not all directly famine-related). The amounts to individual countries are as shown. In addition, substantial British aid funds are channelled through multilateral aid agencies and the European Community to support long-term development and disaster relief in Africa; figures for 1985 by individual countries are not yet available.

Ethiopia

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what protest or other representations he has made to the Ethiopian Government concerning the impounding by the Ethiopian authorities of 51 tons of emergency medical supplies, blankets and bedding and food due for the Eritrean Relief Association from the "Band Aid Star" vessel at the port of Assab.

Mr. Raison: None. But I am concerned by press reports of the Ethiopian Government's action and have asked our ambassador for information.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Registration Prefix

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many letters he has now received (a) in support of and (b) against the move of the month of the year identifier prefix for vehicle registration.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We have received five letters from the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders and major vehicle manufacturers in support of the move of the month to change the vehicle age identification letter to October and 650 letters mainly on behalf of individual motor dealers in opposition to it.

Private Railway Sidings (Grants)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the applications under section 8 of the Transport Act for financial assistance, showing whether the applications were met in part or in full, or refused in any convenient period during the last 12 months.

Mr. David Mitchell: In the period 30 April 1985 to 30 April 1986 decisions were taken on 19 applications for grant made under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974. Of these, six were awarded at the level of grant sought, 10 at a reduced level and three were rejected. The full list is as follows:

Roads (Leicester)

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce whether the eastern district distributor road will be included in the approved structure plan for the county of Leicester.

Mr. Tracey: I have been asked to reply.

The proposed Leicester eastern district distributor road was one of the matters considered at the examination in public held last November. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to receive the report of the panel which held the examination within the next few days. Following his consideration of that report, my right hon. Friend will publish within the next few months any modifications which he proposes to make to the submitted alterations to the plan. After publication of the proposed modifications, there will be a further opportunity for representations to be made on them to my right hon. Friend before he makes his final decision on the plan.

M40 (Traffic Count)

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport why no count of traffic on the M40 between the M25 and Beaconsfield has been undertaken since March 1984; what steps he has taken to assess the reliability of the figures given in the reply to the hon. Member for Beaconsfield of 10 April, Official Report, columns 160-2; if he will take steps to install automatic counting equipment on the section of the M40 to the west of the M25; if he will now arrange for an immediate traffic count to be undertaken on this section of the M40; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The basis of my answer on 10 April was an estimate of traffic flows for December 1985, before the remaining parts of M4-M25 interchange were opened.

A count took place on 12 May. Current flows are now significantly higher. The revised figures are given in the table:

Current Flow (average two-way 24-hour flow over 7-days)	Forecasts for the year 2000 (average two-way 24-hour flow over 5 days)
Vehicles per day	Without M40 extension Vehicles per day	With M40 extension Vehicles per day
61,000	77,000-90,000	91,200-107,200

Flows on the adjoining section from Beaconsfield to Wycombe East are likely to have increased similarly.

The detector loops of the Buckinghamshire county council's automatic count equipment at Hedgerley are no longer reliable. The Department will install new loops soon.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Palace of Westminster (Cleaning)

Mr. Harrison asked the Lord Privy Seal who provides the services for cleaning the Members' rooms in the Palace of Westminster; how many personnel are involved; what percentage is directly employed; and what percentage is privately employed.

Mr. Biffen: Members' Desk Rooms in the House of Commons are cleaned by part-time cleaners of the Serjeant at Arms Department. Thirty six cleaners are involved in cleaning these and other rooms, all of whom are directly employed.

Heating System

Mr. Lilley asked the Lord Privy Seal on how many sitting days in 1986 the temperature outside the Palace of Westminster has risen above that at which the heating is turned off; what is the external temperature reading at which the heating is cut off; and at what internal temperature reading the heating may be cut off.

Mr. Biffen: I understand that the heating has been turned off. In the absence of a defined external temperature below which heating must be provided, it is turned off, by agreement with the Serjeant at Arms, when outside temperatures are judged to have settled to a reasonably stable summer level.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC (Industrial Advantages)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advantages will be available to United Kingdom industry when the European Economic Community market is completed; and to what extent he envisages that United Kingdom industry may derive relatively greater benefits than industry in other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Butcher: Completion of a unified liberal internal market in the Community will benefit British industry through the removal of barriers to trade with other member states; and is one important condition for the creation of a European industrial capability which can compete effectively on world markets. The precise balance of advantage may of course vary from sector to sector, depending on the United Kingdom's competitive position in each, but we believe that there should be clear net benefits for United Kingdom business as a whole.

EC (Trade Statistics)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, pursuant to the reply of 14 May, Official Report, column 473, he will provide the figures on trade deficits and surpluses in manufacturing with the European Economic Community and the rest of the world on the overseas trade statistics basis.

Mr. Butcher: In the 12 months ending March 1986 there was a crude deficit on trade in manufactures with the European Community of £10·0 billion and a crude surplus of £4·0 billion with the rest of the world.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of merchant shipbuilding orders have been placed by British shipowners in (a) Britain, (b) other EC countries and (c) other countries in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The following table shows the percentage of new orders in compensated gross tonnes for merchant ships placed in United Kingdom, other EC and non-EC yards that are destined for the United Kingdom flag. The information as requested is not available.

	United Kingdom	Other EC	Non EC

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the most recent information he has on the numbers employed in merchant shipbuilding in each of the countries of the EC.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The following is the most recent comparable information:

Employment in EC Merchant Shipbuilding in 1984

	Numbers
Belgium	4,060
Denmark	10,300
France	16,940
Germany	22,189
Greece	2,000

Netherlands	7,530
United Kingdom	14,655

Spain and Portugal joined the EC in 1985. In 1984, 23,900 were employed in merchant shipbuilding in Spain. Figures for Portugal are not separately recorded.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the most recent information he has on the tonnage of new orders won by each EC country, Japan and South Korea in 1985 and the first month of 1986.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The following is the most recent information.

Thousands of compensated gross tonnes

	1985	January 1986

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many employees there were in merchant shipbuilding in (i) Britain and (ii) other European Economic Community countries in (a) 1979 and (b) the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986]: The information is as follows:

Employment in shipbuilding in the Community

	1979	1984
Belgium	6,258	4,060
Denmark	9,900	10,300
France	23,000	16,940

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of new world orders for merchant ships were won by British Shipbuilders in each year since 1979; and what is the latest figure for 1986.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986]: British Shipbuilders' percentage share of world new merchant ship orders was as follows:

	Percentage
1979	1·8
1980	2·1
1981	2·3
1982	1·9
1983	1·2
1984	0·8
1985	1·5

There is no world order figures yet for 1986.

Uranium

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much uranium, tonnes of ore concentrates, was imported into Britain during 1985 for British customers.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend gave him on 25 March 1986, at column 397.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Board and Lodging

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how many people have been unable to enter residential care due to the new board and lodging limits.

Mr. Newton: The supplementary benefit board and lodging limits allow reasonable charges for residential care homes to be met, and cover the charges in a large number of homes. In addition, local authorities have power to provide or pay for residential accommodation under the National Assistance Act 1948 and the National Health Service Act 1977, and in certain cases to "top up" the amount available from supplementary benefit. There is therefore no reason to attribute to the limits the effect implied in my hon. Friend's question.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what plans he has for introducing further categories of claimants under the new board and lodging arrangements for those people in residential care;

(2) if he intends to introduce new regional limits under the board and lodging arrangements for top people in residential care.

Mr. Newton: We are currently carrying out a review of the limits for all types of supplementary benefit board and lodging allowances, and will announce our conclusions in due course.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received on the board and lodging arrangements for people in residential care.

Mr. Newton: Since April last year, when new arrangments were introduced, we have received representations on the supplementary benefit limits for people in residential care from the main bodies with an interest in residential care in both the voluntary and private sectors, the local authority associations, individual local authorities and a large number of interested individuals.

Attendance and Mobility Allowances

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average time taken to process claims for renewal of attendance and mobility allowance, respectively.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is not available as renewal claims are not included in routine analyses of clearance times. However, procedures for dealing with renewal claims are such that their average clearance time is likely to be broadly the same as for new claims which are successful at the initial stage. Currently this is eight and a half weeks for attendance allowance and seven and a half weeks for mobility allowance. Renewal claims are invited four months (attendance allowance) and three months (mobility allowance) before the expiry of the existing award so that payments to claimants whose claims are successful should continue without interruption.

War Pensions

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he proposes to bring war pensions available to war widows in the period before 1973 into line with the levels of pension paid since that date; how much it would cost to increase all pre-1973 level pensions by £5 per week; how much it cost to pay war widows' pensions for the last five years for which figures are available; and how many persons are in receipt of war pensions in the area served by the Galashiels ILO in the Scottish Borders.

Mr. Major: Under the war pensions scheme, widows' pansions are paid at the same rate regardless of the date of the service man's death or of when he served. The precise number widowed before 1973 is not known, but the estimated cost of the increase suggested would be in the region of £16 million per year. The Department's expenditure on war widows' pensions was as follows:

Year	£ million
1980-81	146
1981-82	166
1982-83	174
1983-84	177
1984-85	184

The remaining information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hospital Projects, Cleveland

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been spent on hospital capital projects each year since Cleveland was formed.

Mr. Hayhoe: Total capital expenditure by health authorities in the Cleveland area and (from 1982-83) the Hartlepool, North Tees and South Tees districts, as shown in the authorities' accounts, was:

	£'000s
1974-75	2,093
1975-76	1,559
1976-77	3,269
1977-78	5,582
1978-79	6,026
1979-80	6,985
1980-81	5,323
1981-82	6,821
1982-83	7,417
1983-84	7,429
1984-85	8,767

The figures include capital expenditure on both hospital and community health services, as full information on the breakdown between the two is not held centrally. They include capital expenditure by the Northern regional health authority on the former area health authority and the district health authorities which succeeded it.

Maternity Benefits

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the total public expenditure savings from the abolition of maternity grant.

Mr. Newton: Annual expenditure on maternity grant is currently estimated at £18·5 million. As the hon. Lady is aware, however, the proposal to abolish this provision is associated with other proposals to introduce maternity payments for low-income families at a significantly higher level than the present universal grant, and extending beyond those who might currently qualify for a supplementary benefit single payment for maternity needs. It is not yet possible to make a firm estimate of the overall effect on public expenditure.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what are the public expenditure savings from the loss of entitlement to maternity allowance;

(2) what are the total savings to public expenditure from the changes in maternity benefits.

Mr. Newton: As regards maternity grant and the proposed maternity payments, I refer the hon. Lady to my other answer to her today.

As regards our proposals for weekly maternity benefits, the effects on public expenditure are shown by the items marked with an asterisk in the following table giving the overall effect on the public sector borrowing requirement, which is estimated to be a net reduction of £13 million in 1987-88 and £23 million in 1988-89.

	1987-88 £ million	1988-89 £ million
PSBR reductions
Reduced expenditure on maternity allowance	*124	*158
Reduced expenditure on maternity pay	*70	*80
Savings on administration	*4	*4
Saving on maternity pay (see note)	*1	*1
Additional tax and national insurance contributions	15	20
	214	263
PSBR increases

	1987-88 £ million	1988-89 £ million
Reimbursement of statutory maternity pay (flat-rate element) to employers	112	137
Reimbursement of statutory maternity pay (earnings-related element) to employers	70	80
Increased sickness benefit and supplementary benefit	*19	*23
	201	240

Note:

Maternity pay is at present reduced by the standard rate of maternity allowance. These savings arise because of the proposed rate of the flat-rate element of the new statutory maternity pay is higher than the existing maternity allowance.

Within these figures, the net reduction in public expenditure attributable to women failing to qualify for benefit which they would have received under existing provisions — almost entirely those who had given up work before their pregnancies began—is estimated to be £29 million in 1988-89, the first year of the scheme not subject to transitional provision. At the same time, there will be additional expenditure on maternity allowance, or extra revenue forgone in reimbursement of statutory maternity pay, of some £11 million to women who would not have qualified under existing provisions.

Primary Health Care

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how widely the leaflet "Primary Health Care: The Government's Proposals for Discussion on Health Services Outside Hospital" has been distributed.

Mr. Hayhoe: Copies of the leaflet have been distributed in England to family practitioner committees, district health authorities, local authorities and local authority social services departments, community health councils, and main libraries. Copies are also being sent to every general medical practitioner, general dental practitioner, community pharmacist and optician in contract with a family practitioner committee.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will consider making copies of his Department's Green Paper on primary health care available free to libraries, community health councils, and similar bodies, for consultation by members of the public.

Mr. Hayhoe: Copies of the discussion document have been distributed to community health councils and to numerous voluntary and consumer bodies in England. Copies of the summary leaflet have been distributed to main libraries.

Age Concern England (Exhibition)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the work of Age Concern England to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Major: I understand that under procedures agreed by the Services Committee arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 16 June to Friday 20 June 1986.

Local Authority Finance

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what increase there has been in the total sum received by local authorities from the Exchequer in the form of rent and rate rebates and housing benefit between the years 1982-83 and 1985-86.

Mr. Major: The total sum received by local authorities from the Exchequer in respect of expenditure on rent and rate rebates, rent allowance and housing benefit, either in the form of direct subsidy or taken into account in calculating entitlement to block grant, was for 1982-83 £1,523 million and for 1985-86 £4,521 million.

Severe Weather Payments

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the amounts of exceptionally severe weather payments paid by each local office in Scotland in 1986 to date; and if he will provide an estimate of the average payment made.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is not available and I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 19 May.

"Bridges Over Troubled Waters"

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what representations he has received about the Health Advisory Services' Report "Bridges Over Troubled Waters"; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) whether he is satisfied with the national provision for the treatment of disturbed adolescents; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: We have received several representations about the Report's references to the Bethlem and Maudsley hospitals, but none about the wider issues which the report addresses.

"Bridges Over Troubled Waters" highlights shortcomings in the services provided by the various authorities concerned with the care and treatment of disturbed adolescents. It contains over 100 recommendations for improvements. The majority of the recommendations are for action which can be taken at local level to improve the co-ordination and effectiveness of services. We shall this week be issuing a health notice inviting health and social services authorities to consider, in the light of these recommendations, what measures they can take to secure a more effective service.

Bethlem Royal and Maudsley Hospitals

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for High Wycombe (Mr. Whitney), received about the future of the Bethlem Royal hospital and the Maudsley hospital on his visit to the Maudsley hospital on 15 May; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I greatly appreciated the opportunity of meeting staff and patients and seeing something of the work of the joint hospitals during my visit last week. During my visit I received representations for additional funding, but these must be considered both against the increase of 5·9 per cent. in the budget granted over last year and in the light of other additional demands on the Health Service. I have agreed to meet representatives of the special health authority in order to discuss their proposals further, early next month.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the approximate time it takes his Department to reply to a letter from an hon. Member; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Drugs (Expenditure)

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will set out in a table the latest expenditure in pounds sterling per head on drugs in those EEC countries for which figures are readily available.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 18 April 1986 c. 531]: The table contains the information requested by my hon. Friend. Expenditure figures for drugs in other countries of the European Community which have been obtained from the Organisation of Economic Corporation and Development, include the cost of drugs dispensed to consumers by pharmacies, and the cost of remunerating pharmacists. Expenditure on drugs by hospitals is excluded. The expenditure figures have been converted into sterling by means of general purchasing power parity exchange rates for 1982. Since the expenditure figures for the United Kingdom do not correspond exactly with the expenditure figures for other members of the European Community, comparisons of underlying expenditure levels can by only approximate.

*Expenditure on Pharmaceutical Goods per Head of Population 1982

Belgium	63·20
Denmark	20·20
France	84·30
Germany	96·60
Italy	51·10
Netherlands	45·60

* Information from OECD sources is generally not available after 1982. Information for the United Kingdom is mainly derived from expenditure information for 1982-83.

† The United Kingdom expenditure figures include both the cost of the supply of drugs by Family Practitioner Services and the cost of remunerating pharmacists and dispensing doctors. An estimate for over-the-counter purchases of medicines, which was derived from national accounts sources was also included. The expenditure figures exclude the cost of drugs used by National Health Service hospitals and the cost of drugs used by private health services. Including the cost of drugs dispensed in NHS hospitals, the United Kingdom spent £42·70 on drugs per head of population in 1982.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail changes in the housing benefit scheme since its inception, together with planned future changes, giving the number of claimants subject to changes to all or part of their entitlement, the average value of each the changes and the net savings to public expenditure; and if he will express each of these changes to public expenditure as a percentage of the total cost of the scheme.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 19 March 1986, c. 229]: The principal changes made to the housing benefit scheme since its inception in April 1983 are as follows:

April 1984

Rent rebate taper above needs allowance increased 5 per cent. to 26 per cent.

Rate rebate taper above needs allowance increased 2 per cent. to 9 per cent.

18-20 year old non-dependant deductions incorporated into the adult rate and increased to £6·15 for rents and £2·05 rates, and deductions for 18-20 year olds on supplementary benefit on Youth Training Scheme abolished.

November 1984

Rent rebate taper above needs allowance increased 3 per cent. to 29 per cent.

Minimum payments above needs allowance increased to 50 pence.

Non-dependant deductions for 16-17 year olds not on supplementary benefit, Youth Training Scheme or non contributory invalidity pension introduced at the lower rate.

50 pence real improvement to dependant child's needs allowance.

April 1985

High rent scheme thresholds raised to 130 per cent. of average rents.

November 1985

Rate rebate taper above the needs allowance increased 4 per cent. to 13 per cent.

95 pence real improvement to dependant child's needs allowance.

The numbers affected by these changes and the net savings are given in the table. Estimates of the average effect of each change are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Planned adjustments to students' entitlement, non-dependent deductions for 21 to 24-year-olds, and entitlement of part III residents are subject to final consideration following consultation with the Social Security Advisory Committee and the Local Authority Associations. The details of planned changes for April 1988, together with illustrations of the possible effects, are outlined in the White Paper "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9691).

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the gain to the National Insurance

Fund or the Exchequer of removing the upper earnings limit from national insurance payments for the self-employed (a) with present tax relief and (b) without it.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 6 May 1986, c. 78]: If the upper profits limit for class 4 national insurance contributions for the self-employed were removed from 6 April 1986 the full year effect on the national insurance fund including treasury supplement and interest, is estimated to be a gain of £205 million. (This figure is calculated on the same basis as the Report by the Government Actuary on the draft of the Social Security (Contributions, Re-rating) Order 1985, (Cmnd 9672).).

The hon. Gentleman's question contains alternative assumptions about tax relief on the additional class 4 contributions that would be raised if the upper profits limit were abolished. Tax relief has no effect on the class 4 receipts to the national insurance fund, but does, of course, affect the tax receipts to the Exchequer. If, on the one assumption, tax relief was available on 50 per cent. of the additional class 4 contributions collected above the upper profit limit, the tax forgone would be in the order of £40 million. If, on the other assumption, tax relief was removed entirely, the extra tax collected in respect of 50 per cent. of class 4 contributions below the upper profit limit (currently eligible for relief) would be about £60 million.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give the number of applications for mobility allowance in each quarter of the last five years; and if he will give a percentage that are successful for each quarter;

(2) how many people applied for mobility allowance; and what percentage were successful in each quarter for the last five years.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 16 May 1986, c. 588]: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The table shows the number of initial claims decided, and the percentage of those that were successful, in each of the specified quarters.

Year	Quarter	Number of claims decided	Percentage successful
1981	1	14,300	67

Benefits

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the amount of money saved by his Department each year by the failure of people to claim benefits for which they would be eligible.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986]: No estimates are available for unemployment benefit. For supplementary benefit payable to the unemployed (including appropriate housing costs) it is estimated, on 1981 family expenditure survey data, that £410 million was unclaimed throughout the year.

Surrogate Mothers

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to amend the Surrogacy Arrangements Act 1985 so as to make payments to surrogate mothers for the keeping of a diary during their pregnancy a specific criminal offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986]: I understand the recently reported case involving surrogate mothers receiving payments for keeping a diary is the subject of police investigation under the Surrogacy Arrangements Act. I shall keep the need for amending legislation under review.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Profit-sharing Schemes

44. Mr. Freeman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received since the Budget on the Government's initial proposals for encouraging profit-sharing schemes.

Mr. Brooke: The preliminary discussions with employers and others referred to in my right hon. Friend's Budget speech are under way. There has been a discussion in the National Economic Development Council. In addition, a small number of letters from members of the public has been received.

European Community Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his answer of 7 May, Official Report, column 137, concerning the appropriations under the European Economic Community budget, he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the principal items of non-agricultural expenditure for 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Brooke: The information is as follows:

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the operation of the financial guidelines for the EC budget on the same basis as the answer of 14 May 1985, Official Report, columns 84-85, to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby.

Mr. Brooke: The financial guidelines for EC agricultural spending in 1986 was subsequently reduced to 20,619 million ecu for the Community of Ten. There has been no further change. The EC Commission has proposed a supplementary budget in excess of the guideline, on the ground that expenditure requirements have been increased by exogenous factors, such as the fall in the value of the US dollar against the ecu. These matters will be for consideration by the Council of Budget Ministers.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the forecast contribution to the European Economic Community budget this year, including supplementaries, as a percentage of the contribution in 1979 in terms of sterling, (b) the corresponding increase in expenditure by the United Kingdom Government and (c) the increase in the retail prices index.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986]: The Government's latest forecast of the United Kingdom's net payments to the Community budget is that published in the public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702). This does not take account of this year's supplementary budget. The comparison between the White Paper forecast for 1986-87 and the outturn for 1979-80, together with the change in the public expenditure planning total for the same period, is as follows. Details of the retail price index for 1986 are not available; however, the growth in the index between 1979 and 1985 is also shown.

European Monetary System

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the role of central banks in European Economic Community states which are full members of the European monetary system in respect of participation within the European monetary system; and how this role compares with the present role of the Bank of England.

Mr. Ian Stewart: This is a matter for the member states concerned, but I have no reason to suppose that participation in the exchange rate mechanism has led to constitutional changes in the role of central banks in those member states.

IMF Adjustment Programme

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to put forward proposals at the International Monetary Fund for a full study of the effects on children and the poor of the proposed International Monetary Fund adjustment programme before it is approved.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The provision of financial assistance by the IMF in support of agreed adjustment programmes is intended to enable countries with balance of payments difficulties to achieve the necessary adjustment over a longer time and at a lower social and economic cost than would otherwise be possible. Within this framework it is the responsibility of the debtor countries themselves to decide domestic priorities. In co-operation with the World Bank the IMF also seeks to encourage the countries concerned to implement economic reforms which will promote higher growth and employment in the longer term.

The IMF recognises the particular difficulties faced by the poorest countries in carrying out economic reforms and has recently agreed to set up a new structural adjustment facility totalling SDR 2·7 bn. This will provide loans at highly concessional rates to 60 of the poorest countries undertaking medium-term structural adjustment programmes.

Income Tax and National Insurance

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the total revenue obtained from income tax plus national insurance contributions together in each year since 1978-79 at current and at constant 1978-79 prices.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1986, c. 564.]: The information requested is as follows:

DEFENCE

RAF Mount Pleasant

42. Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the move from RAF Stanley to RAF Mount Pleasant has now been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Yes. The new international airport at Mount Pleasant, which will be used by both Service and civil aircraft, became fully operational on 1 May 1986. All concerned in this project, particularly the Property Services Agency and the construction consortium of Laing, Mowlem and Amey Roadstone, can be justifiably proud of their achievement in completing an international airport on a green field site 8,500 miles from Britain in less that two and a half years.

Chemical Weapons (NATO)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek to ensure that the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation gives a public commitment to no first use of chemical weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: All the members of NATO are parties to the 1925 Geneva protocol which prohibits the use of chemical weapons, although some countries have reserved the right to retaliate with chemical weapons against states which first use chemical weapons against them. All NATO countries are therefore in effect committed to no first use of chemical weapons.

United States Military Interests (Wales)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence at which military establishments in Wales United States military interests are represented.

Mr. Stanley: The United States armed forces are represented in Wales by a permanent presence at RAF Brawdy in Dyfed and RAF Caerwent in Gwent.

Army Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will now make it his policy to publish the names of the countries invited to the British Army equipment exhibition;

(2) whether countries with records of human rights violations and countries involved in armed conflict will be invited to the British Army equipment exhibition.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall answer shortly.

Falkland Islands Exclusion Zone (Harassment)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the harassment of shipping within the Falkland Islands exclusion zone by an Argentine vessel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The garrison's task is to monitor activity in the Falkland Islands protection zone and take such action as may be necessary. Our information is that the Japanese vessel the Chidori Maru was arrested by an Argentine vessel on May 10 outside the zone. No threat was posed to the Falkland Islands.

Turkey (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence which arms manufacturers are accompanying the Minister of State for Defence Procurement in his delegation to Turkey commencing on 21 May.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall answer shortly.

United States Air Force (Military Aircraft)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any civil airports in Scotland have been authorised for use by United States Air Force fighter planes or bombers.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1986, c. 546]: United States Air Force combat aircraft were authorised to use Edinburgh airport for transit purposes as part of a routine NATO exercise which took place from 3 March to 16 March 1986. No other civil airport in Scotland has been authorised recently for actual use by United States combat aircraft. Contingency plans for transition to war envisage the use of a number of civil airports in Scotland by the United States Air Force, as well as elsewhere in the United Kingdom, but the details are classified.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 21 May 1986

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received regarding the future of the Anglo-Irish agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: Over recent weeks I have received a number of letters from members of the public about the future of the Anglo-Irish agreement. The majority expressed concern about its impact in Northern Ireland. I have also had discussions with representatives from a cross-section of the community in Northern Ireland, some of whom are in favour of the agreement while others have expressed reservations about it. The Government remain convinced that the agreement has the potential to offer considerable benefits to all sections of the community in Northern Ireland.

Navan Fort (Quarrying)

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is yet in a position to announce the decision on the planning application to continue quarrying on land adjacent to Navan fort.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment has today issued a decision refusing planning permission for the proposed development.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Property Disposal (Estate Agents)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners if the Commissioners maintain a list of approved estate agents for the sale and disposal of property for which the Commissioners are responsible; and if he will make a statement.

Sir William van Straubenzee: The Commissioners do not maintain an approved list. The bulk of the Commissioners' property is managed by five firms of chartered surveyors, individual partners within each firm being appointed as agents of the Commissioners. These firms are Messrs Chestertons; Messrs Cluttons; Messrs Donaldsons; Messrs Hillier Parker May and Rowden; and Messrs Smiths Gore. The sale and disposal of any property is usually handled by the agents previously responsible for its management, although in a few cases other firms may be asked to act as joint agents. The same principle applies to those few properties which for various reasons are managed by other agents.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Convictions (Forensic Evidence)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in his Official Report all those cases in the past 20 years where persons have been convicted of offences on the basis of forensic evidence and where that conviction has subsequently been overturned because of doubt about the validity of that forensic evidence; and if he will indicate in which of these cases compensation has been paid for wrongful imprisonment.

Mr. Mellor: We have information on cases where the Home Secretary has made an ex gratia payment in respect of a wrongful conviction, but information regarding the grounds on which convictions are quashed is not recorded centrally.

Institute of Criminology, Cambridge University

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what Government funds are made available to the Institute of Criminology at the University of Cambridge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Institute of Criminology is part of the University of Cambridge and hence receives Government funds through the University Grants Committee. Additional funds are provided from Government sources for specific research or training initiatives. The Home Office research and planning unit made research grants to the institute totalling £68,000 in the financial year 1985-86, for studies concerning neighbourhood watch and the development of delinquency. I understand that the institute also received research grants from DHSS for work on intermediate treatment, and from the ESRC (Economic and Social Research Council), as part of its initiative on crime and criminal justice. The institute receives further funds from a variety of sources for specific training and seminar initiatives, including during 1985-86 £6,000 from the Home Office research and planning unit.

Questionnaires (Sexual Experiences)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to make Uit an offence to circulate questionnaires seeking to discover past sexual experiences of individual members of the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans to introduce such legislation. It is of course open to members of the public to decline to complete questionnaires which seek information about previous sexual experiences.

Passports

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average delay being experienced at present by applicants for (a) new and (b) renewed British passports.

Mr. Waddington: Because of industrial action earlier this year and an increase in demand, passport applications are taking longer to process than is normal at this time of year. Non-urgent applications for both new passports and other services are taking between five and six weeks to process. Priority is being given to applications which indicate an early date of travel and every effort is being made to reduce the backlog as quickly as possible.

Prisoners (Disciplinary Proceedings)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in Wandsworth and Featherstone prisons, respectively, were disciplined for (a) assaults on prison officers and (b) assaults on other prisoners in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to my reply, 8 May 1986, c. 206]: The information available centrally relates to the number of offences punished and is given in the table. Data for 1985 are not yet available.

Offences of violence against officers and inmates punished at Featherstone and Wandsworth prisons, 1980-84*

PRIME MINISTER

Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. Ottaway asked the Prime Minister what was the outcome of the Cabinet Office review of the pollution inspectorate; and if she will publish its report.

The Prime Minister: The report of the scrutiny team has been received and set out options for further study, which is now in hand. When Ministers have received the results of this further work, I will consider whether and if so in what form the scrutiny team's report might be published.

Nuclear Reactors (Ministerial Responsibility)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Prime Minister which Secretary of State has responsibility for the specific operating cycle for the Calder hall and Chapelcross nuclear reactors.

The Prime Minister: British Nuclear Fuels plc is responsible for these reactors, which it operates in accordance with its commitments to its customers.

Famine Relief

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Prime Minister if she will make it the policy of Her Majesty's Government to increase the funds they provide for famine relief by an amount equal to the estimated value added tax revenue received in connection with the fund-raising activities of Sport Aid; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I applaud the Sports Aid initiative and the remarkable effort which has been put in to it by thousands of people throughout the world. I hope to meet Mr. Omar Khalifa, the Sudanese athlete, in connection with Sports Aid at the weekend. Successive Governments have, however, taken the view that to allow special VAT relief or matching refunds for charitable fund raising events is not the right way to help in such circumstances. Nevertheless, our contribution to famine relief in Africa has been very considerable: it amounted to £81·4 million in 1984, £96·5 million in 1985, and £27 million in the first quarter of 1986 alone. We shall continue to play our part in the international relief effort.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

UGC (Allocations)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will announce the recurrent grants allocated to universities for the academic year 1986-87 by the University Grants Committee.

Mr. Walden: As my right hon. Friend told the House yesterday, the University Grants Committee has announced universities' recurrent grants for 1986-87. These are shown in the table. Copies of the general letter of guidance that the chairman of the UGC has sent to all universities have been placed in the Library of the House. The general letter will be followed in about a week's time by an institutional annex relating to the student numbers by subject and research funding of each university. These annexes will also be placed in the Library.

The total grant distributed by the UGC as announced above does not include items for which provision is allocated separately, such as local authority rates and the overseas research student awards scheme, nor the committee's small central reserve out of the total recurrent grant available to it of £1,340 million.

Boarders (Costs)

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average cost per annum of each pupil with a boarding place at a maintained sector secondary school.

Mr. Dunn: Information to provide an answer to this question is not collected routinely. However, a special exercise carried out some years ago by a departmental working group indicated that the average gross cost of a maintained sector boarding place was £1,805 in 1977-78.

School Population

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list (a) for the Christchurch constituency, (b) for Dorset and (c) for England the total number of schools and the population therein for the last 10 years and the total population for each of those years.

Mr. Dunn: The number of maintained primary, secondary and nursery schools in Dorset and in England in the years 1976 to 1985, the number of pupils attending those schools and the total resident population are as follows. Comparable figures for Christchurch are not available centrally.

	England			Dorset
	Schools	Pupils	Population	Schools	Pupils	Population

Student Awards

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much of a student's income is disregarded in respect of scholarship or sponsorship income and earnings from tutoring and demonstrating in the calculation of awards to postgraduate research students by the British Academy and each of the research councils.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Economic and Social Research Council currently disregards £1,280 of a student's income from those sources. The British Academy and the other four research councils each generally disregard £1,230. In the case of some studentships funded jointly by the Agriculture and Food Research Council and industry a higher disregard of £1,655 is applicable. The first £425 of any other income is also disregarded. University or college prizes or gifts are not treated as income and are totally disregarded.

Grange Hill Anti-drug Abuse Video

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what officials from his Department were present at the launch of the Grange Hill anti-drug abuse video "Just Say No", and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I attended the launch of the Grange Hill anti-drug video "Just Say No" with two officials. The BBC is to be congratulated on producing the "Just Say No" campaign against drug misuse by the young. This initiative is both timely and useful and will certainly arouse interest in the local education authorities.

Part-time Students (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to respond to the letter from the hon. Member for Stretford, dated 11 February 1986, concerning weighting given to part-time students as full-time equivalents at polytechnics.

Mr. Walden: In order to give a full reply it has been necessary to seek advice outside the Department. This has recently been received and I shall write to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Photosensitivity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research has been and is being funded by the Medical Research Council into the causes, prevention and treatment of photosensitivity.

Mr. Walden: I understand that in the financial year 1984-1985 the Medical Research Council spent £227,000 on projects which have relevance to the causes, prevention and treatment of photosensitivity. I have asked the council to write to the right hon. Member with details.

Nursery Education

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the proportion of under-fives in nursery education in the United Kingdom; and what information he has about the equivalent figures for France, Japan and the United States of America.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 14 May 1986, c. 460]: The figure in column 4 of the table in respect of the United States was incorrectly printed in the Official Report.

There is no standard definition of "nursery education". The forms of pre-school provision vary between and within countries, as does practice in the age and times of year at which children are admitted to compulsory education. The table shows the latest available comparative information on all forms of grouped provision for young children. Rates for both three and four, and three to five-year-olds are shown, as in the other countries compulsory schooling starts at age 6.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

United Kingdom Provident

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make a statement on his Department's involvement with United Kingdom Provident;

(2) on what date his Department gave advice to United Kingdom Provident that it should reduce its future rates of bonus;

(3) to what extent his Department made inquiries into the free reserves of United Kingdom Provident.

Mr. Howard: Under the Insurance Companies Act 1982 the Secretary of State may exercise certain powers if he considers that a company may be unable to meet its liabilities or to fulfil the reasonable expectations of the insurance policy holders. In February the Government Actuary's Department, which examines for my Department the statistical returns of life insurance companies, reported that it had been in touch with the actuaries of the United Kingdom Provident Institution and that the company might be in financial difficulties. My officials met representatives of the company, who undertook to prepare urgently a detailed assessment of its solvency position as at the end of 1985 and to retain a firm of consulting actuaries to assist in this work.

Officials of the Government Actuary's Department, after discussing the company's assessment of its solvency position with the company's own actuaries and the actuarial consultants, were satisfied that the company could honour its liabilities, including bonuses already allotted, and had sufficient free reserves to meet the required margin of solvency.

The company was questioned in February about its ability to continue paying bonuses at the rates then in force. Neither my Department nor the Government Actuary's Department formally advised the company to reduce its rates because the company's actuaries, after making their own assessment, accepted the need for a reduction.

On 10 March I reviewed with representatives of United Kingdom Provident the alternative courses of action open to the company. They mentioned the possibility of a merger with Friends Provident Life Office. I encouraged them to pursue this option and also made my views known to Friends Provident. Agreement between the two companies on a merger of their operations was announced on 8 April. My Department continues to be in frequent contact with the new management about progress.

None of the powers of intervention under the Insurance Companies Act 1982 have been exercised in this case, because the remedial action taken by the company has been considered satisfactory.

Communications Industry (Employees)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people were employed on 1 January in each year since 1979 in (a) the postal service and (b) the telephone and other telecommunications services in the public sector.

Mr. Butcher: The following is the information requested, at 31 March each year, according to information published by the Post Office and British Telecom in annual reports available in the Library of the House:

	*Postal business	Telecommunications business
1979	173,981	233,447
1980	178,406	240,056
1981	181,310	246,725
1982	177,778	245,882
1983	176,158	245,976
1984	175,287	241,124
1985	177,381	‡nil

* Part-time staff counted as half.
† Part-time staff counted as half until 1982, thereafter as one.
‡ British Telecom no longer in the public sector but on 31 March 1985 employed 235,178 people.

Man-made Fibres (Imports)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has concerning anti-dumping procedures recently taken by the European Commission concerning polyester staple fibre imports from the German Democratic Republic, Rumania, Turkey and Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No formal anti-dumping investigation into these imports has yet been initiated; but the European Commission is prepared to take such action once it is presented with a well-founded complaint that dumping is taking place which is damaging the Community industry.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the European Commission to take action in response to the complaint lodged last year by the International Rayon and Synthetic Fibres Committee about unfair imports of acrylic fibres.

Mr. Butcher: The European Commission has almost completed its investigation into these imports and the result is likely to be announced in the next few weeks.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what has been the percentage of total imports of man-made fibres and man-made fibre products represented by such imports in each of the last five years from (a) East Germany, (b) Rumania, (c) Turkey and (d) Yugoslavia;

(2) what information he has concerning the volume and value of imports of synthetic fibres and synthetic fibre products from the following countries in each of the last five years for which figures are available: (a) East Germany, (b) Rumania, (c) Turkey and (d) Yugoslavia.

Mr. Butcher: Figures for synthetic and other man-made fibre products are not available as they are not separately identified in the trade statistics. Information on fibres and yarns is as follows:

(a) United Kingdom imports of synthetic fibres and yarns

British Shipbuilders Enterprise Ltd.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how the sums of money announced on 14 May, Official Report, column 705, for British Shipbuilders Enterprise Ltd. will be allocated between the different areas affected by recent redundancies in the shipbuilding industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: British Shipbuilders is pressing ahead with the arrangements for British Shipbuilders Enterprise Ltd., including the appointment of a board and recruitment of key personnel. It will be for the new company to determine how the moneys should be allocated, though clearly the pattern of spend will be influenced by that of the redundancies the new company is charged to help.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Building Societies

Mr. Portillo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the ability of building societies to make preparations for the new legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: A number of representations have been received about whether building societies have the power to do preparatory work before Royal Assent for their new powers under the Bill. In the light of these concerns, and for the avoidance of doubt, I am proposing that the Building Societies Bill should contain appropriate provisions.

It is clearly sensible for a building society to be able to do preparatory work, provided that its scale is reasonable and takes account of the possibility that the Bill might not be enacted in precisely its present form or that the members might not pass the special resolution necessary for the adoption of a particular power. Many societies have done preparatory work in good faith on the correct presumption that the provisions already in the Bill against anticipation of powers are intended to catch the provision of services to the public, not such preparatory work.

I have accordingly tabled an amendment to schedule 16 to the Bill which treats societies as having had powers to do such preparatory work since 19 December 1985, the date of Second Reading of the Bill. A new clause provides that societies will have a similar preparatory power in respect of additional powers conferred in future by a statutory instrument under the Bill, in the case of a resolution requiring approval in draft from the date of an affirmative resolution by either House, and in other cases from the date of laying.

HMSO Publications

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if documents published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in London are published simultaneously in Cardiff.

Mr. Brooke: Major items particularly those of Welsh interest, are published simultaneously in Cardiff and London whenever feasible. However, the tight time scales laid down for the publication of most parliamentary papers and Government reports inevitably result in them being available at the HMSO London bookshop a day earlier than elsewhere.

Share Option Schemes

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many savings-related share option schemes have been set up in each year since the passage of the Finance Act 1980; and how many employees are covered by the savings-related share option schemes set up in each year.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 91]: The information requested in as follows:

Tax Year	Finance Act 1980 Schemes approved	Number of directors and employees granted options under all approved Finance Act 1980 schemes
1980-81[1]	22	10,600
1981-82	115	88,600
1982-83	78	95,000
1983-84	73	105,000
1984-85	115	245,000
1985-86	111	n.a.
1986-87[2]	9	n.a.
	523

[1] The start date for the schemes was 15 November 1980.
[2] Up to 30 April.
[3] Provisional estimate.
The number of employees benefiting under approved savings-related share option schemes to date cannot be calculated by aggregating the annual totals since the same employee may be granted options in successive years.
n.a. Figures not yet available.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many approved share option schemes have been set up in each year since the passage of the Finance Act 1984; and how many employees are covered by the approved share option schemes set up in each year.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 91]: The information requested is as follows:

Tax year	Finance Act 1984 Schemes approved	Number of directors and employees granted options under all approved Finance Act 1984 schemes
1984-85	202	65,000
1985-86	1,251	n.a.
1986-87[1]	75	n.a.

[1] To 30 April.
[2] Provisional estimate. The figure includes options granted in 1984-85 under 907 schemes submitted to the Inland Revenue for approval on or before 31 December 1984. Such schemes were able (by virtue of paragraph 1(5) of Schedule 10 to the Finance Act 1984) to grant options in advance of formal approval and in many cases approval was not received until the next year.
n.a. Figures not yet available.

EC Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the table published in the Official Report on 3 April 1984, columns 451-52, giving details of the United Kingdom contribution to the European Economic Community budget; and if he will add an estimate for this year and the forecast for next.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 88]: The information is as follows. The Government's latest forecast of the United Kingdom's gross payments to and receipts from the 1986 and 1987 Community budgets is contained in the public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702). The forecast in the White Paper does not take account of the supplementary budget for 1986 and was made before details of the 1987 preliminary draft budget were available. On the basis of the figures for United Kingdom contributions in the 1986 budget and the 1986 supplementary budget, and those likely to be contained in the 1987 preliminary draft budget, our gross contribution in 1986 will be 6796 mecu before abatement, and, in 1987, 7328 mecu. The budgets do not contain estimates of United Kingdom receipts.

* The figures include a total of £39·9 million (£12·9 million for customs duties and £27 million for agricultural levies) in respect of an earlier underpayment arising from the civil service industrial action in 1981.

† The United Kingdom contributed to two IGAs in 1985. It paid £119 million in respect of the 1984 IGA, and £250 million in respect of the 1985 IGA.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring up to date the figure for gross receipts from, and gross payments to, the European Economic Community budget given in his reply of 7 July 1983; if he will provide an estimate for 1986, including forecast supplementaries, together with a forecast for next year; and how the figure for refunds is made up.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 88]: The information for the years 1983 to 1985 is set out in the table. The Government's latest forecast of our net payments to the European Economic Community budget for the years 1986 and 1987 remains as set out in the public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702). The White Paper does not take account of this year's supplementary budget and was prepared before details of the preliminary draft budget for 1987 were available. On the basis of the figures for United Kingdom contributions in the 1986 budget and the 1986 supplementary budget, and the figures likely to be included in the 1987 preliminary draft budget, the United Kingdom's gross contributions in 1986 will be 6795 mecu (before abatement), and, in 1987, 7328 mecu. The budgets do not give information on United Kingdom receipts. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 14 May 1986, at columns 487-88, concering the formula for calculating the United Kingdom's rebates.

Share Trusts

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many approved deferred share trusts have been set up in each year since the passage of the Finance Act 1978; and how many employees are covered by the approved deferred share trusts set up in each year.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 91]: The information requested is as follows:

ENVIRONMENT

Nuclear Waste Disposal

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer of 8 April to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, Official Report, column 29, what progress NIREX has reached in consideration of compensation for home owners and local authorities for blight on value and development following the laying of the special development order.

Mr. Waldegrave: Since 8 April NIREX has announced that where there is written evidence that house sales, which had been agreed prior to the sites' announcement on 25 February, have fallen through as a result of the announcement, it will purchase the properties at the price agreed between the vendor and purchaser before the sale was called off. This applies to houses within the immediate areas of the four sites. This is in addition to NIREX's previous announcement that it intends to provide compensation for householders within one mile of the boundary of any eventually selected site, should that be necessary.

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

15. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes meeting the local authority associations to discuss proposals to privatise the water authorities in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have no plans to do so at present.

41. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received on his White Paper: "Privatisation of the Water Authorities in England and Wales."

Mr. John Patten: My Department has received 237 letters from organisations and others interested following publication of the White Paper.

43. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he had received by 16 May to the White Paper: "Privatisation of the Water Authorities in England and Wales."

Mr. John Patten: My Department had received by 16 May, 227 letters from organisations and others interested following publication of the White Paper.

Green Belt

16. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the area of green belt land in (a) the London area and (b) the London borough of Ealing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: There are some 1·2 million acres of green belt in London and the home counties, but I have no recent estimate of how much of that is within London itself. In the Ealing borough plan, which has just been adopted, there are 682 acres of green belt within the London borough of Ealing.

Housing (Liverpool)

17. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to meet leaders of Liverpool city council to discuss Government financial support for its housing programme.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has offered to meet a small deputation of councillors during his visit to Merseyside on 23 May. In doing so he has made clear that they should expect no treatment beyond what would be available to other similar authorities.

Voluntary Organisations

18. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next proposes meeting representatives of voluntary organisations in Greater London and the metropolitan areas to discuss funding arrangements for 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers).

Housing Investment Programmes

19. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what factors he will take into account when deciding on funding for local authority housing investment programmes for the coming financial year.

Mr. John Patten: Decisions on the method of making housing investment programme allocations for 1987-88 will be taken later in the year, when the Government have fixed the total to be allocated and after consultation with the local authority associations.

Business Rates

20. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average rate poundage paid by businesses in (a) the north-east and (b) the south-east.

Mrs. Rumbold: The average non-domestic rate poundage in 1986-87 is 287p in the north-east and 190p in the south-east.

36. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had from the business community regarding the Government's proposals for reform of business rating contained in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received about 50 written representations, together with many more informal representations.

It is too early do draw any conclusions from these.

Radiation

21. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement as to the latest information on damage to the environment arising from the most recent discharges of radioactivity.

Mr. Waldegrave: Preliminary estimates suggest that the levels of radioactivity experienced in the United Kingdom following the Chernobyl accident are transient and have already considerably declined. However statistical models predict that small traces of radionuclides will be detectable for many years.

38. Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied that the results of radiological monitoring are accessible to and comprehensible by members of the public.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am aware of the difficulty of presenting these technical issues in a simple way. However I believe that statements like that contained within the bulletin prepared by my Department on 9 May 1986 present the results of radiological monitoring in a way that is comprehensible and available to the public through news media.

42. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on the latest levels of radiation following the Chernobyl disaster; and what trend is indicated by the relevant data.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the daily bulletins prepared by my Department which are in the Library of the House. Further statements will be issued if and when necessary.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the calibre of atomic weapons, in TNT equivalent, that would be likely to produce the equivalent amount of radioactive material as that released by the accident at Chernobyl.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is not possible to make this calculation until the Russian authorities supply information on the amount of material released from the core of the Chernobyl reactor.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now make it his policy to make public information on all incidents involving the release of radioactive materials from where they are intended to be ; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury (Mr. Crouch) on 15 May at column 554.

Chernobyl Nuclear Station

22. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he was first informed that British scientists were talking to their Russian counterparts in Chernobyl.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on Tuesday 20 May.

Housing Waiting Lists

23. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the size of the waiting list for accommodaion by local housing authorities in England and Wales at the latest available date; and what was the comparable figure for 1979.

Mr. John Patten: I do not have this information. Local authorities only report the number of households on their waiting lists which are in certain categories of housing need, for example overcrowding.

Enterprise Zones

24. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the outcome of his most recent assessment of enterprise zones.

Mr. John Patten: My Department's most recent assessment was published in "Enterprise Zone Information 1983-84", a copy of which is in the Library. A further assessment is in progress.

Sefton (Rates and Services)

25. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has about the level of services and rate levels in Sefton in relation to the level of employment in the area over the past seven years.

Mrs. Rumbold: Of the five Merseyside district councils, Sefton provides major services at the least cost per head, has consistently levied the lowest local rate poundage, and has the lowest level of unemployment.

Homeless Persons

26. Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homeless households applied to local authorities in England in 1985; how many were accepted; how many were accommodated in bed-and-breakfast hotels at the end of December 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the statistics published quarterly by my Department, copies of which are in the Library.

32. Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now investigate the reason for the rise in the number of homeless families in 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 30 January. Further information is expected to emerge from various projects in the Department's current research programme.

Rate Support Grant

27. Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to call a special meeting of the consultative council on local government finance to discuss the 1987-88 rate support grant settlement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has no plans to hold a special meeting of the consultative council on local government finance. As usual there will be two further meetings of the consultative council this year, which among other things, will discuss the 1987-88 rate support grant settlement.

34. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends announcing provisional details of the 1987-88 rate support grant settlement before the end of July; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I expect to announce the aggregates of provision and grant in July.

Coal-fired Power Stations

29. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to monitor emissions from coal-fired power stations.

Mrs. Rumbold: Her Majesty's air pollution inspectorate requires power station emissions of smoke and fine particulates and, where practicable, grit and dust, to be monitored continuously.

Emissions of sulphur dioxide (SO_2), oxides of nitrogen (NOx) and Hydrocarbons (HC) from power stations are calculated on a national basis by reference to the sulphur and nitrogen content of fuel used and, in the case of NOx and HC, by reference to the combustion conditions at plants. Individual plant emissions can be calculated if necessary. My Department has recently asked the Department of Trade and Industry's Warren Spring laboratory to measure some power station emissions of SO_2, NOx and HC in order to verify the calculations currently used.

Agricultural Buildings

30. Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to bring to the attention of local planning authorities his statement of 30 April, Official Report, column 414, of the circumstances in which planning permission might be granted for a change of use of redundant agricultural buildings in green belts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: My Department issued a news release containing the text of the statement and copies were sent to the local authority associations and to other planning bodies.

Rates

31. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in the last six months on the reform of the system of rates; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Nearly 300 written representations on this subject have been received in response to the Government's Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", which was published on 28 January. The consultation period continues until 31 October.

Defective Housing (Basildon)

33. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about defective housing in Basildon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: Since my hon. Friend's Adjournment debate on 9 April and my reply on 23 April to my hon. Friend's similar question at column 169. I have received a further letter from my hon. Friend on the question of Lindsay Parkinson HSSB houses at Vange, Basildon, and seen the remarks he made about these houses in the debate on the spring Adjournment on 12 May at column 524. My Department has also received a number of letters direct from owners of these houses. We are carefully considering possible ways of dealing with the problems facing these owners, and a decision will be taken as soon as possible.

Superstores

35. Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications for superstore developments in the past two years have been determined on appeal; and how many such appeals have been upheld.

Mr. Tracey: In the two years to 31 December 1985, 39 planning applications for superstore developments of 50,000 sq. ft. or more were determined on appeal by the Secretary of State. Of these, 18 were allowed.

Radioactive Waste (West Lindsey)

37. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the latest representations received from West Lindsey district council on the disposal of nuclear waste.

Mr. Rumbold: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment, Countryside and Local Government wrote to the chairman of the council on 14 May in response to the representations received.

Central Council for Physical Recreation and Sports Council

39. Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet the chairmen of the Central Council for Physical Recreation and the Sports Council to discuss the future of those bodies in the light of the report of the Environment Committee.

Mr. Tracey: My plans and proposals in the light of the Select Committee's report will be set out in my Department's formal response.

London Marathon

40. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received over the past year about the future arrangements for the London marathon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: I have had a number of contacts with the race director. I have received 17 letters and have answered two parliamentary questions on this subject. The Government will continue to give support and encouragement to the London Marathon, as it has this year and in previous years.

Private Rented Accommodation

44. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the proportion of households which live in privately rented accommodation.

Sir George Young: About 8½ per cent. of the Dwellings in England at December 1985 were rented from landlords other than local authorities, new towns and housing associations.

Local Authorities (Capital Receipts)

45. Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Macclesfield borough council on the controls on the spending of local authority capital receipts; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Macclesfield borough council's response to the proposals in the consultation paper on the review of the local authority capital expenditure control system, including the use of new and accumulated capital receipts, was sent to the Department on 10 April. My right hon. Friend is considering this, along with the other responses that have been sent to us, before deciding how best to proceed.

South Bank

28. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning responsibility he has for the south bank of the Thames in central London.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend has no special planning responsibilities for the south bank.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will define the very small quantities of alpha emitters and small amounts of trace elements mentioned in his reply of 3 May to the report of the Environment Committee on nuclear waste; and if he will specify what quantities of each can cause human harm.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government have stated their intention that only wastes which are broadly classed as low level wastes should go into a near surface facility. Detailed control over the type of waste disposed of would be exercised through the site authorisation issued under the RSA 60, together with the nuclear site licence issued by the NII.

Any site authorisation would take careful account of the characteristics of the chosen site. It is therefore premature to define precisely what levels of alpha emitters and trace elements would be appropriate.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the health risk arising from nuclear waste in nuclear waste dumps; and on what basis these figures are calculated.

Mr. Waldegrave: The risk assessment methodology used by the Department is described in research report DOE/RW/86.076, and in an article published in the journal of the British Nuclear Energy Society (London, 1984). A copy of this article has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will refund the rail fares of those delegates invited to London to give their arguments for the exclusion of Killingholme from the special development order on nuclear dumping.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received the letter of 7 April 1985 from Mr. J. W. Saville of 61 Yarrow road, Grimsby, with regard to the proposed nuclear dump site at Killingholme; and if he has replied to this letter.

Mr. Waldegrave: Mr. Saville's letter was received on 9 April. A reply was sent on 15 May.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment at what stage he will make available to local authorities the technical site selection criteria used in the choice of the four possible nuclear dumps.

Mr. Waldegrave: NIREX has already sent copies of its brochure explaining its site selection procedures to all county councils in England and Wales and regional councils in Scotland.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, at the time of the laying of the Town and County Planning (Nirex) Special Development Order (a) how many letters protesting at the proposals for nuclear dumping he had not answered, (b) how many requests from deputations for a meeting he had not answered and (c) how many of the four proposed sites he had visited.

Mr. Waldegrave: I and my colleagues met Members and delegations from all the areas in which a site is located before the SDO was laid. In addition, I was able to visit three of the four sites concerned and I visited the remaining site on 15 May. I have yet to reply to a request from Britain Against Nuclear Dumping for a meeting.

It has not been possible so far to reply to 600 of the letters received, but the points made have been considered.

Parish, Town and Community Councils

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to extend the Rates Act 1984 to parish, town and community councils.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has had any correspondence with county associations of parish or town councils or the National Association of Local Councils regarding the budgets of parish, town and community councils.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have had no such correspondence about the budgets of parish, town or community councils.

Palace of Westminster (Roller Towels)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many roller towel points are available in the Palace of Westminster for toilet facilities; how many are non-functional; and who is responsible for the maintenance of such facilities.

Sir George Young: There are 209 towel cabinets in the Palace of Westminster of which 170 are in the House of Commons. The towel service is supplied under a PSA contract, renewed at three-yearly intervals, providing for maintenance of the cabinets and replacement of roller towels as necessary. Replacement of faulty towel cabinets is arranged by the authorities of both Houses direct with the contractor.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he has any plans to bring forward proposals to change the basis of current expenditure controls on local authorities in England;

(2) whether he intends to instigate a review of the present basis of current expenditure controls on local authorities in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government", reviews the present system of local government finance and makes proposals for reform. These aim to make local accountability the main determinant of expenditure and priorities in local services.

Norman Shaw South (Drinking Water)

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new drinking water taps have been installed in the Norman Shaw South building since the contamination of tap water on 4 June 1985; and how many of these have not yet been connected to the drinking water supply.

Sir George Young: Six new drinking water taps have been installed. All have now been connected to the drinking water supply. I regret that the work took longer than anticipated.

Redundant Churches

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications he has received for urban development grant in respect of the conversion of redundant churches in England.

Sir George Young: One. This was for the conversion of the redundant church of St. Michael and All Angels, Tower Hamlets into flats. Urban development grant of £350,000 was approved in January 1985.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of sites of special scientific interest in England and Wales have been re-notified in accordance with the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and when he expects completion of the re-notification programme.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that by 31 March 1986, 45 per cent. of SSSIs in England notified under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act, and 71 per cent. in Wales, had been re-notified under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

The re-notification of sites to owners and occupiers is expected to be substantially complete, in Wales by the end of this year, and in England and Scotland, (because of unforeseen technical and legal difficulties which have been overcome), shortly after.

Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many proposed sites of special scientific interest have been notified to him by the Nature Conservancy Council since the coming into force of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and what percentage of those have since been notified as sites of special scientific interest in accordance with the provisions of the Act.

Mr. Waldegrave: By 31 March 1986, 841 new SSSIs and 1,972 SSSIs previously notified to local authorities under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 had been notified by the Nature Conservancy Council to the Secretary of State, local authorities and owners and occupiers. The NCC does not give advance notice of proposed SSSIs to the Secretary of State.

Acid Deposition

Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money the Government have spent in each of the last three years on research into the causes and prevention on acid deposition.

Mrs. Rumbold: Total spent by Departments other than the Meteorological Office was:

	£ million
1983-84	2·02
1985-86	3·97

In addition, the Meteorological Office spend about £0·5 million a year on research into meteorological problems relevant to atmospheric transportation of pollutants and acid rain; more precise figures are not available as the work is not readily separable from that on other issues.

Farming and Wildlife Advisory Groups

Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money the Government have spent, whether through the Countryside Commission or otherwise, on supporting farming and wildlife advisory groups in each of the years 1984 and 1985; and how the 1986 figures are expected to compare in real terms with the 1985 figures in actual and percentage terms.

Mr. Waldegrave: The total amounts paid by, or likely to be available from, the Countryside Commissions (for Scotland and for England and Wales), the Forestry Commission, the Nature Conservancy Council, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and the Welsh Office are set out below. These figures include grant aid for the employment of conservation advisers, most of whom are employed directly by farming and wildlife advisory groups but some by county councils in pursuit of the same objectives.

Financial year	Total payments provision £
1983-84	20,000
1984-85	92,000
1985-86	c. 160,000
1986-87	c. 250,000

The provision for 1985-86 is equivalent to £166,000 in 1986-87 terms, representing a real increase of £84,000, or 51 per cent. in 1986-87.

Radioactivity

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to why dosage emergency reference levels differ, for iodene-131 in milk, in the countries of western Europe and of the extent to which they differ; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer this question shortly.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the levels of the actinides and strontium 90 in the environment and food at the present time.

Mr. Waldegrave: A collation of environmental monitoring data in the United Kingdom following the Chernobyl incident has been placed in the Library of the House. A more comprehensive listing of strontium-90 and actinide levels in the environment will be published when they are available.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the dosage emergency reference levels used by the National Radiological Protection Board take into account the fact that fission products, namely, iodine 131, caesium 137, strontium 90, and so on, will not normally appear individually in the environment.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for the north-west region (a) the highest recorded radioactivity of a litre of milk, *(b)*the highest recorded level of radioactivity in rain-water and (c) the highest hypothetical dose received.

Mr. Waldegrave: Representative peak values for radioactivity in milk and rain-water are given in information bulletin No. 5, published by the Department on 11 May 1986. Preliminary dose estimates for the United Kingdom were published in Nature on 15 May 1986: these estimates will be refined in due course.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer of 15 May 1985, Official Report, column 554-5, if he will specify the criteria given to the radiochemical inspectorate on the basis of which they will report incidents of release of radioactivity from nuclear power stations to him, and the time scale on which these are to be reported.

Mr. Waldegrave: The radiochemical inspectorate has been instructed to report all incidents involving the release of radioactivity from nuclear power stations; and to do so as soon as it receives the relevant information.

Environmental Monitoring Data

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will initiate measures for the establishing of one organisation which would both collate and disseminate environmental monitoring data to the public in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: Overall responsibility for initiating and co-ordinating environmental monitoring lies with the Department of the Environment. Nuclear site operators, as part of their authorisation, carry out environmental monitoring and publish their results annually. Following the Chernobyl incident, the Department will be reviewing procedures for the collation and dissemination of monitoring data.

Nuclear Waste Dump, South Killingholme

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received a letter from Mr. and Mrs. Plasnett of Cross Coates road, Grimsby, with regard to the proposed nuclear waste dump at South Killingholme; and when he intends to reply.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department has no record of a letter from Mr. and Mrs. Plasnett. If a copy can be forwarded to me I shall arrange for a reply to be sent as soon as possible.

Steel-Framed Houses

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the first report of the Building Research Establishment's investigation of steel-framed houses will be published.

Mr. John Patten: The Building Research Establishment's first report, which looks at the most numerous steel-framed house type, the British Iron and Steel Federation house, is published today. The report is reassuring. It confirms that, although BISF houses are now 30-40 years old, the majority are structurally sound and that where corrosion has occurred this can be relatively simply repaired.

The main elements of the house, the way they are assembled and the points where deterioration may occur are identified in clear and simple drawings. I hope that this feature of the report will be particularly helpful to building societies and their surveyors when considering lending on properties of this type. I believe that local authorities and other owners will find the report equally helpful when approaching the repair and maintenance of these houses.

Copies of this report are being sent today to local authorities in England which own BISF houses, and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales are taking similar action. Copies are also being made available to the Building Societies Association for distribution to its members. A copy has been placed in the Library.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet the chairman of the London Residuary Body to discuss matters relating to the consequences of the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My noble Friend, and I expect to meet all the chairmen of the residuary bodies on 30 May to discuss matters relating to the consequences of abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils.

Home Improvements

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how he monitors the effectiveness with which his Department's policy on home improvement is implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The five-yearly English house condition survey measures changes in the overall condition of the stock; the next survey starts this autumn. In addition, we use regular returns from local authorities on the action they have taken to secure improvements and also commission research where appropriate.

TRANSPORT

Disabled Persons (Parking)

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to arrange for local authorities to issue temporary disabled parking discs to those who are temporarily disabled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Parliament approved the present Orange Badge scheme only after wide consultations. In order to maintain its value and effective operation, it is restricted to permanently disabled people as those most in need of its benefits.

Buses (Deregulation)

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory on investigating the impact of bus deregulation, both in direct research and in commissioned work by outside bodies; and how much is budgetted for future spending.

Mr. Ridley: Transport and Road Research Laboratory expenditure on monitoring the impact of bus deregulation up to 31 March 1986 was: direct research—£226,000; commissioned work by outside bodies—£72,000.

Estimated expenditures for the financial year 1986-87 are: direct research—£300,000; commissioned work—£360,000. Similar amounts are anticipated for 1987-88; the programme for subsequent years is yet to be determined.

Shipping (Immersion Suits)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what regulations govern the carriage of immersion suits aboard British registered merchant ships.

Mr. Ridley: There are no regulations governing the carriage of immersion suits on board British registered ships at present, but I shall shortly be laying draft regulations before the House requiring the carriage of immersion suits on certain new United Kingdom registered ships. These are intended to come into effect on 1 July. Further regulations, extending this requirement to existing ships, will be introduced by 1991 to give effect to amendments to the 1974 SOLAS convention.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department has about whether other European Community countries require immersion suits to be carried on fishing vessels registered in those countries.

Mr. Ridley: Belgium, Denmark, Holland and West Germany have no such requirements for fishing vessels under 100m in length. French regulations, however, require the carriage of immersion suits for all on board fishing vessels over 15m in length which go more than 30 miles to sea. I have no information about other EC countries.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has now had with the fishing industry about the compulsory carriage of immersion suits aboard fishing vessels.

Mr. Ridley: None, but the industry will be consulted shortly in the current review of the Fishing Vessels (Safety Provisions) Rules 1975.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 8 April, Official Report, columns 1 and 2, if he has yet received the views of British Rail about suggestions for improvements in the rail network in the regions leading to the proposed Channel fixed link and on other matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Transport, wrote to the chairman of the North of England Regional Consortium on 19 May with British Rail's views on the consortium's suggestions. He has sent a copy of his letter to the right hon. Member.

National Bus Company

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to reach a decision on the National Bus Company's disposal programme.

Mr. Ridley: I have approved, without modification, the disposal programme submitted to me by the National Bus Company on 15 May in accordance with section 47 of the Transport Act 1985. Copies of the programme have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The programme provides for the disposal of NBC's 65 or so subsidiaries as individual units, as quickly as possible. NBC will continue to advertise and stimulate interest among potential purchasers to create a wider market for its subsidiaries. However, where broadly comparable bids are received from management or employee groups and from third parties, NBC will give preference to the management or employee group, but they will not expect this preference to exceed 5 per cent.

Negotiations are now well under way for the sale of a number of subsidiaries. It is clear that NBC and the many management and employee groups who have expressed an interest in mounting buy-outs are as determined as I am to achieve speedy privatisation. I wish them every success.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sahara (Refugees)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to make United Kingdom aid available to the refugees from the war in the western Sahara, now lodged in camps in Algeria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: Assistance from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees's general programme, to which Britain is contributing £3·5 million from the aid programme, already includes projects in Algeria. At a cost of £2·4 million these projects are helping to meet the immediate needs of 2,000 Sahrawi refugees.

Gibraltar

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the funds so far paid to Gibraltar, under the agreement of July 1983, to meet the initial costs of commercialisation of the naval dockyard; and what changes have taken place in working practices since, in accordance with the agreement.

Mr. Raison: Out of the £28 million promised, a sum of £26·286 million has been spent meeting the cost of capital equipment, civil engineering work, relocation, refurbishment and start-up expenses, and local operating costs. Most of the balance is in the process of being spent, for example, bills in the pipeline. The agreement called for new commercial working practices. It is understood from the company that progress has been made towards a higher level of flexibility, bringing about some improvement in productivity, since it commenced its operations on 1 January 1985. Recent differences in approach between management and the union are the subject of current discussions and it is hoped these will very quickly be resolved.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the 1985 annual report and accounts of the Commonwealth Development Corporation will be published.

Mr. Raison: The report and accounts will be published on 22 May. Copies will be laid before Parliament on that day and placed in the Libraries of both houses.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Library

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal what is the estimated number of books currently held in the Library; what is the policy of the Library towards accepting complimentary copies of books; what was the cost of purchasing new books in 1985-86; what has been the number of books purchased in each of the last five years; if there are any plans to expand the area of the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: Books held in the House of Commons Library amount currently to approximately 150,000 volumes. The Library is not offered many complimentary copies of books, but is happy to accept those books that may be useful to Members and the Library. In financial year 1985-86 the cost of purchasing new books and pamphlets was £59,965. In each of the last five years the number of books (excluding pamplets) purchased by the Library has been:

	Numbers
1981-82	3,886
1982-83	1,860
1983-84	2,529
1984-85	2,568

There are no plans to expand the area of the Members' Library. However, a substantial part of the Library's services will be moved to the northern section (Nos. 45, 46 and 47) of the new building in Parliament Street, which is planned for completion in 1990. The Members' Library will remain unchanged, but the Library will vacate most of its existing premises in the Norman Shaw buildings and some of its office accommodation in the Palace when this move to the new building takes place. The recommendations of the Services Committee in this respect are contained in paragraphs 8-13 and in appendix II of their third report of 1983-84 (HC571).

In accordance with the recommendation of the Informal Joint Committee on Library and Record Office Storage Accommodation (HC309, 1984-85), it is hoped that some basement storage accommodation under the new conference centre in Broad Sanctuary will be made available to the Library at a future date. The Library is meanwhile following another recommendation of the Informal Joint Committee for continuous systematic weeding and disposal of its out-of-date material.

Self-sealing Envelopes

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Lord Privy Seal what steps he is taking to provide hon. Members with self-sealing envelopes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: I understand that the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee of the Services Committee approved the permanent introduction of three types of self-seal white post paid envelopes at their meeting on 19 May. An order has been sent to Her Majesty's Stationery Office and deliveries are expected within eight weeks.

ENERGY

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will state the destinations, excluding sea dumping, of the intermediate radioactive wastes that have been transported from nuclear plants; if he will provide a list of all registered sources of nuclear activity in the United Kingdom from which such shipments have been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Most intermediate level waste is stored on the sites where it arises, pending the availability of disposal facilities. However, some ILWs have been transported from nuclear licensed sites to Harwell and Sellafield for storage, and small volumes of ILW have also been disposed of at Drigg in accordance with the terms of the authorisation under the Radioactive Substances Act, 1960.

A complete list of all sources in the United Kingdom from which shipments of ILW have been made would have to include nuclear power stations, other nuclear installations, hospitals, laboratories, and industrial users.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply, Official Report, 1 May, column 460, to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy if he will list the reactors of origin from which nuclear material which have been withdrawn from safeguards since 1978.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Nuclear Power Production

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the present production of nuclear power in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: In the year to December 1985, 53,766 gigawatt hours of electricity were sent out from nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom.

Nuclear Waste Disposal

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to give a direction that no further contracts for advanced gas-cooled reactor spent fuel be entered into until all options for nuclear waste disposal have been further considered.

Mr. Goodlad: No. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment said in his first stage response to the Environment Committee's report on radioactive waste, his Department has already published an analysis of the best practicable environmental options for the disposal of low level and intermediate level waste. A principal conclusion of this study was that there are practicable and financially realistic options for the storage and disposal of radioactive waste which also satisfy regulatory constraints in relation to safety and environmental protection. The Environment Committee has also concluded that safe disposal routes are available to the United Kingdom.

WALES

Cervical Cytology

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures for the average time between the taking of a specimen for cervical cytology and the availability of the result of such an investigation to the family medical practitioners carrying out the test in each of the health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Coleman) on 10 February at column 320.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many additional cervical cytology pathology officers have been employed by each of the health authorities in Wales in each of the past three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The table gives information on the whole-time staff equivalents employed on cervical cytology laboratory work in the health authorities in Wales 1982 to 1984.

WALES

Cervical Cytology

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many cervical cytology smear tests carried out by family medical practitioners in each of the Welsh health authorities fall outside the Department of Health and Social Services guidelines covering payment per item of service; and what percentage such examinations represent of the total, for the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Information is not collated on the number of smear tests carried out by family medical practitioners which are outside the guidelines covering payment.

Employment Schemes

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing for each district council in Wales for 1985-86 how many persons were sponsored to work under (a) the community industry scheme and (b) Manpower Services Commission schemes.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Comprehensive information on community industry and schemes run by the MSC is not available broken down to district council level.

What is available is information on community industry schemes where district councils contribute to funding and YTS and the community programme schemes where district councils are sponsors.

Bills

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the Bills of which Ministers in the Welsh Office have been sponsors in each Session since 1979-80.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

St. David's Hospital, Cardiff

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he plans to increase the number of doctors, nurses and ancillary staff at St. David's hospital in Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Staffing levels at individual hospitals are operational matters for the health authority concerned. It is for the South Glamorgan health authority to determine the staffing requirements at St. David's hospital, Cardiff.

Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many letters he received from Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor during the year 1985-86, addressed to him; and of these how many related to (a) responsibilities vested in district councils and (b) other extraneous matters.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have received 16 letters from Dwyfor district council since January 1985. Of these, eight related to responsibilities vested in local authorities and eight related to extraneous matters.

Housing

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the present (a) total housing stock and (b) public sector housing stock in each district authority area in Wales the houses sold from the public sector, since the enacting of the Housing Act 1980, comprise.

Mr, Mark Robinson: The information is given in the following table:

Labour Statistics

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest figures for male unemployment, males in part-time employment and males in full-time employment in each of the Welsh counties; and what were the corresponding figures for each of the previous five years.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The latest figures for male unemployment are for April 1986. Comparable figures for years before 1984 are not available. Figures for 1984 and 1985, although not strictly comparable due to changes in compilation made earlier this year to remove overcounting, are provided in the following table.

County	April 1984	April 1985	April 1986
Clwyd	16,132	16,539	16,766
Dyfed	12,427	13,552	14,138

Salmon Poaching

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what losses have been caused to the rightful owners by salmon poaching in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: It is impossible to quantify the effect of illegal fishing for salmon.

Shell Oil (Small Business Scheme)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance his Department has offered to Shell Oil to implement its proposed £500,000 investment programme in small businesses established and run by young people in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: My Department's assistance is not required. The fund is an important, very welcome, wholly private sector initiative established by Shell (UK) Ltd. and run independently by local enterprise agencies, including Cardiff and Vale Enterprise.

Bathing Beaches

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what will be the cost of cleaning bathing beaches on the Welsh coast to the European Economic Community standards.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The Welsh water authority has embarked upon a 15-year programme of remedial works, estimated to cost £200 million, to improve the bathing waters around the Welsh coast to enable all identified waters to meet the conditions specified in the EC directive (76/160 EEC).

Gresford-Pulford Bypass

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has had any contact with Clwyd county council regarding the Rossett interchange section of the proposed Gresford to Pulford bypass since receiving the local inquiry inspector's report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: For any trunk road schemes in preparation there is on-going contact with the design agents preparing the proposals. This has been the case with our agents, Clwyd county council, over the continued preparation of the Gresford-Pulford scheme.

The county council was not consulted about the content of the inspector's report following its receipt or prior to the announcement of our decision on the Rossett interchange proposals on 16 May 1986.

Snowdon (Land Disposal)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he is considering any proposals relating to the disposal of the land at the summit of Snowdon which is currently in his ownership.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Following an approach by the Snowdonia National Park Authority, and having considered the matter very carefully, we have concluded that it could be beneficial for the authority to have a more direct responsibility for the summit area. This would allow it further to develop its strategy for the management of a crucial area which is, in many ways, the focal point of the whole park. We have, therefore, instructed officials to open negotiations with the national park authority with a view to granting it a lease on the land. Any leasehold agreement would, of course, contain provisions to secure and safeguard public access.

Women's Refuges

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many women at present living in women's refuges in Wales have been living there for 10 weeks or more, in each of the local authority areas in Wales;

(2) how many women live in women's refuges in Wales at present; and what was the figure for each year since 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 35]: This information is not held centrally.

Battered Women (Rehousing)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are his Department's guidelines to local authorities in Wales for rehousing women who have left home due to domestic violence, and who are living in temporary accommodation.

Mr. Mark Robinson [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 35]: The Department's code of guidance to local authorities on their responsibilities under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977, a copy of which is in the Library, advises local authorities to accept as homeless and in priority need for accommodation those who are at risk from domestic violence. The code recognises the value of women's refuges as a source of temporary accommodation, but it points out that authorities remain under a duty to secure permanent accommodation for women temporarily accommodated in refuges.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Parliament (Premises)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have given their agreement to the proposals of the European Parliament to purchase permanent premises at 2 Queen Anne's gate, London, at what stage the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland is given an opportunity to express its opinion on such a proposal within the Community institutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No. The building at present is leased by the European Parliament. It is for the Parliament to decide how to allocate its expenditure within the limits set by the EC Budget agreed annually by the Council of Ministers and the European Parliament.

Wilton Park

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the present function of Wilton park.

Mr. Eggar: Wilton park aims to bring people together from different countries and different walks of life to exchange views on subjects of international concern, to build friendship and remove misunderstandings. Wilton park is free to choose its own subjects for discussion and to invite the speakers and participants it wishes. Academic independence and integrity are guaranteed by an international advisory council of the OECD ambassadors and high commissioners in London, and by an academic council of distinguished Britons. Wilton park is largely financed by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, though it also raises its own funds from conferences. All discussion is off-the-record. Wilton park conferences are sometimes co-sponsored by other institutions in Britain or abroad, and grants and donations are accepted for specific purposes from foundations and business.

Falkland Islands (Shipping Harassment)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received about harassment of shipping within the Falkland Islands protection zone.

Mr. Eggar: Reports are still being assessed. I have nothing at present to add to what my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces said yesterday, but can confirm that there was no threat to the Falkland Islands.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North of 28 April, Official Report, column 340 what is his latest estimate of the percentage of the 775,000 people who have a second job who are included twice in the monthly figures of employed persons.

Mr. Lang: The quarterly estimates of the employed labour force include twice some people who have a second job as an employee. There are no direct estimates of the numbers of people who are in this way counted twice in the quarterly estimates of the employed labour force. However, out of the 775,000 people identified in the preliminary results of the 1985 labour force survey as having two jobs, two-thirds reported working as an employee in their second job.

Community Programme

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General (1) whether he will list the agencies employing long-term unemployed people under the community programme for the east London area; and what is the amount of running costs per participant given to each of the agencies (excluding contributions towards office premises);

(2) whether he will list for each agency employing long-term unemployed people under the community programme for the east London area the amount of money received from the Government in connection with the cost of office premises.

Mr. Lang: Under the community programme agents are reimbursed up to £440 per year to cover running costs, including premises costs, in respect of each authorised place for workers other than managers and supervisors. When applying for support, agents must set out what they propose to spend under various running costs headings, including rent and rates. Agents are required to maintain detailed records of expenditure but it is not necessary for each head to be separately identified in their accounts. The amount received by each agency in the last year for which final audited accounts have been rendered is shown in the table, and information on office premises is provided where it is known.

Note: Some Agencies have not yet rendered accounts

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General whether he will list for each agency employing long-term unemployed people under the community programme for the east London area the numbers of (a) women, (b) men full-time, (c) women and (d) men part-time workers employed on a permanent basis, together with their job titles.

Mr. Lang: The community programme provides temporary jobs for long-term unemployed people. None of the workers employed on the programme are employed on a permanent basis. The normal period of employment is up to 52 weeks, but a small proportion of managers, supervisors and key workers are employed for longer.

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General how many long-term unemployed are involved in the community programme in east London for each of the agencies operating in that area; and what are the projected figures for the next two years.

Mr. Lang: At the end of April, the latest date for which figures are available, the number of people employed on the community programme by agencies operating in the east London area was as follows:

Title of Agency	Filled places at 30 April 1986
Forest Projects	310
Globe Town	60
London Borough of Havering	769
Interface	295
London Union of Youth Clubs	14
MENCAP	15

The allocation of places to the area from October onwards is 3,723 places. Individual agencies are subject to annual renewal, and it is not possible to give projected figures for them.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Freud asked the Paymaster General what information is available to his Department, in respect of the participation of pupils with special educational needs, in the technical and vocational education initiative scheme (a) in total, (b) as a proportion of the total numbers involved in the technical and vocational education initiative and (c) as compared with the percentage of the secondary school population designated as having special educational needs; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The national criteria for the technical and vocational education initiative require that projects consider accommodating some students with special educational needs. So far over half of the 74 projects currently operating have done so, but no figures of the number of pupils involved are available.

Mr. Freud asked the Paymaster General what proportion of participants in technical vocational and education initiative schemes were girls; and how this compares with the overall secondary school population at the latest available date.

Mr. Trippier: Across the 74 projects in Great Britain currently operating under the technical and vocational education initiative, 43 per cent. of students starting projects were girls. This compares with 49 per cent. for the population in maintained secondary schools as at January 1985.

Mr. Freud asked the Paymaster General whether he will list in the Official Report for each local education authority in England (a) the sum received for technical and vocational education initiative projects, (b) the sum received for technical and vocational education initiative projects expressed as a percentage of the education budget, (c) the number of pupils engaged on technical and vocational education initiative projects, (d) the number of such pupils expressed as a percentage of the total in secondary education, (e) the number of secondary schools involved in the technical and vocational education initiative, (f) the percentage of secondary schools involved in technical and vocational education initiative, and (g) the percentage of pupils in participating schools engaged in technical and vocational education initiative projects in each case (i) during the pilot scheme and (ii) under the proposed expansion of the scheme.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Shipbuilding Areas (Financial Assistance)

Dr. Godman asked the Paymaster General how much of the money announced on 14 May, Official Report, column 705, for the Manpower Services Commission following the recent redundancies in the shipbuilding industry will be allocated to each of the areas affected.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Manpower Services Commission will provide a further £1 million for the retraining of those made redundant from British Shipbuilders. It will not be allocated on a geographical basis but according to where the need arises.

Wages Councils

Mr. Madden asked the Paymaster General how many wages inspectors and other wages council staff were employed in each wages inspectorate division in each year since 1975.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 50]: The information requested is given in the tables:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1983 the value in terms of the dollar of the central rate used for determining common agricultural policy prices, the co-efficient for the United Kingdom and the effect of any change as a result of realignments in the European monetary system on the central rate and on the monetary co-efficient for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: A central rate is a rate expressing the relationship between the European currency unit (ecu) and any one of the currencies that constitute the ecu for the purposes of the European monetary system (EMS). It does not have a value.

The correcting factor ("coefficient") used in the calculation of monetary compensatory amounts for all member states was 1·033651 from 1 April 1984 to 23 July 1985, 1·035239 from 24 July 1985 to 8 April 1986 and since 9 April has been 1·083682.

Central rates usually remain unchanged between EMS realignments. The rates for the United Kingdom since 1 January 1983 have been:

Value of 1ecu in £ sterling

	Rate
1 January 1983 to 20 March 1983	0·560453
21 March 1983 to 17 May 1983	0·629848
18 May 1983 to 16 September 1984	0·587087
17 September 1984 to 21 July 1985	0·585992
22 July 1985 to 6 April 1986	0·555312
7 April 1986 to date	0·630317

The United Kingdom monetary coefficient is calculated from the mathematical relationship between the representative rate for sterling (the "green" pound) and the market rate of sterling against the ecu. The effect of a realignment on the market value of sterling cannot be distinguished from the effect of other market factors.

Radiation (Milk Samples)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many samples of milk in (a) East Sussex, (b) West Sussex, (c) Kent and (d) Hampshire have been collected and analysed in the last four weeks as a result of the Chernobyl disaster; and what were the results.

Mrs. Fenner: The results of monitoring of cows' milk notified to my Department in each of these four counties, together with the highest level of iodine 131 found in these samples and the date on which these were found, are as follows:

	Number of samples to 14 May 1986	Highest Results I-131 Bq/litre	Date of Highest Results
East Sussex	4	16·8	12 May
West Sussex	13	102	5 May
Kent	43	230	6 May
Hampshire	26	103	6 May

These results indicate that the levels of iodine 131 found in milk have been well within the level at which the Government would need to consider whether action should be taken.

Pesticides

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish an up-to-date list of all horticultural products freely purchasable that contain 2,4,5-T and 2,4-D, with the percentage by weight of each chemical in each product.

Mrs. Fenner: There are 147 products containing either 2,4,5-T or 2,4-D currently cleared under the pesticides safety precautions scheme for use in agriculture and horticulture. These are listed in the publication "Pesticides Safety Precautions Scheme 1986," and I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House. The percentage by weight of each chemical in each product could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Land Drainage, Flood Prevention and Coast Protection

Mr. Colvin asked the Minister of Agricultue, Fisheries and Food when the review following the Green Paper financing and administration of land drainage, flood prevention and coast protection in England and Wales is expected to be completed.

Mrs. Fenner: We expect to complete the review before the end of the summer.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Clay asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will state (a) purchase costs, (b) storage costs and (c) other related costs of maintaining beef intervention stocks;

(2) if he will state (a) purchase costs, (b) storage costs and (c) other related costs of maintaining cereal intervention stocks;

(3) if he will state (a) purchase costs, (b) storage costs and (c) other related costs of maintaining butter intervention stocks;

(4) if he will state (a) purchase costs, (b) storage costs and (c) other related costs of maintaining skimmed milk powder intervention stocks.

Mr. Jopling: Expected purchase costs are set out in subhead A1 of the 1986-87 Supply Estimate for class IV vote I (HC 284-IV). Storage costs, forming part of the totals for incidentals, are expected to be as follows:

	£ million
Beef	18·879
Butter	18·619
Skimmed Milk Powder	00·521
Cereals	72·426

Conservation and Efficiency

Mr. Ottaway asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what redeployment of his staff will take place, following enactment of the Agriculture Bill, to meet the requirement to have a duty to balance countryside conservation with agricultural efficiency when discharging any functions in connection with agriculture.

Mrs. Fenner: Clause 12 of the Agriculture Bill would, if enacted, give statutory backing to the present practice of my Department, which is to balance the need to promote and maintain a stable and efficient agricultural industry with other important interests in the countryside.

I do not expect additional resources to be required to implement this clause. However, in view of the importance of the interaction between agriculture and the environment, we recently strengthened the team of officials responsible for policy work in this area and established a co-ordinating environmental unit within ADAS.

Foodstuffs (Radiation)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what (i) domestically produced and (ii) imported foodstuffs have been withdrawn from public supply following exposure to more than 5 millisieverts/year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: None.

Badgers

Mr. Marland asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide further details on how Professor Dunnet's recommended interim strategy for badger control will be applied.

Mr. Jopling: I announced on 7 April that action against badgers would be confined to that part of the breakdown farm where it was believed tuberculosis was transmitted to cattle or the whole farm if it was not possible to be more precise. Professor Dunnet's recommendation on this point also proposed that prior sampling of badgers and delineation of social groups should be discontinued. With the support of the consultative panel on badgers and tuberculosis I have now accepted the recommendation that prior sampling of badger social groups should be discontinued since maintenance of this procedure within the new strategy would be statistically unsound and could weaken its effectiveness in disease control terms. On the question of the delineation of social group territories, under the new strategy I have decided, again with the support of the panel, that the technique should no longer be carried out as a standard procedure but that it should continue to be employed where reliable results can be obtained which will be useful for operational or research purposes and provided there is no delay.

Beer

Mr. Mason asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the European Economic Community Commission on behalf of the British brewing trade to allow British beers free access to the German market; whether any restrictions are imposed against the export of British beers in any other European Economic Community country; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 19 May 1986, c. 70]: The Government fully supported the EEC Commission in bringing the case currently before the European Court of Justice which challenges the legality under Community rules of the German beer purity laws. Similar Greek laws are also the subject of proceedings before the court.

Mr. Mason asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ascertain the specific reasons why British beers are not allowed to be exported to Germany and, in particular, whether there are substances, including formaldehyde in the beers which are causes for objection.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions have been placed by Germany on the import of British beer; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 19 May 1986, c. 71, and 20 May 1986]: The German beer purity laws provide that beer must be made exclusively from malted barley, hops, yeast and water. The use of other cereals and permitted additives in most British beers has meant their exclusion from the German market. While formaldehyde may be included at very low concentrations as a preservative in anti-foaming agents, I understand that the agents in use in this country do not, in fact, include formaldehyde, nor is it used as an additive for any other purpose in the production of British beers.

Bees

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will investigate the possibility of making sugar available to commercial beekeepers at subsidised rates to allow them to recover losses sustained as a result of the recent adverse weather conditions.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 19 May 1986, c. 70]: As I explained in my reply earlier today it was necessary to use the limited resources available to compensate those most seriously affected by adverse weather. Making sugar available to beekeepers at subsidised rates would not help directly to make good the recent losses of bees.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will introduce a scheme to give financial relief to commercial beekeepers who lose more than 50 per cent. of their stock because of adverse weather conditions.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 19 May 1986, c. 69]: I sympathise with those beekeepers who are amongst the many agricultural and other businesses which have suffered from the exceptionally poor weather over the last 12 months.

However, as my right hon. Friend the Minister explained in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) on 26 February, we had to direct the limited resources available to those sectors and areas which were most seriously affected.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Board and Lodging Limits

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how many private and voluntary homes have closed since the introduction of the new board and lodging arrangements.

Mr. Newton: Information collected centrally on nursing and registered residential care homes relates to the number operating on a particular day in each year and does not indicate how many may have closed or opened over a particular period. The latest available information for example is that the total number of private and voluntary residential care homes in England rose from 5,774 at 31 March 1984 to 7,021 (provisional) at 31 March 1985.

Photosensitivity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the centres which specialise in the treatment of photosensitivity.

Mr. Whitney: The great majority of cases of photosensitivity are treated in dermatology departments of district general hospitals. Cases requiring special investigation can be referred, in England, to St. Johns hospital for diseases of the skin, London, where special equipment and expertise in photobiology is available.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will ask the Committee on Safety of Medicines to assess the incidence and seriousness of photosensitivity as an adverse reaction to medical drugs;

(2) what research is being funded by his Department into ways of alleviating or curing photosensitivity resulting from an adverse reaction to medical drugs;

(3) how many adverse reaction reports there were in 1985 to the Committee on Safety of Medicines of a photosensitivy reaction to medical drugs; and which drugs were the most commonly involved.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the right hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Cancer Research Action Programme

Dame Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has reached a decision on the Government's response to the proposed European action programme on cancer research and treatment due on 29 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Women's Hospital, Liverpool

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the waiting list for private patients at the Women's hospital, Liverpool;

(2) how many National Health Service patients have received treatment at the Women's hospital, Liverpool, in each of the past three years;

(3) what was the waiting list at the Women's hospital, Liverpool, at the latest date for National Health Service patients; and if he will make a statement;

(4) how many private patients have received treatment at the Women's hospital, Liverpool, in each of the past three years.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Waiting Lists (Merseyside)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the waiting list at the Mersey regional health authority at the latest date; and what were the figures for May 1983;

(2) what was the waiting list at the Liverpool district health authority (teaching); and what were the figures for May 1983.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

South Killingholme

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people live within a 20-mile radius of South Killingholme.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

CIVIL SERVICE

Planners and Architects

Mr. Steen asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many town and country planners and architects are employed in central Government Departments; and if he will give a breakdown by Department for each of the last five years.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 28 April 1986, c. 319]: Information for town and country planners and architects as at 1 April each year is as follows:

SCOTLAND

Radiation Levels

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what radioisotopes were detected in air, rainwater and surface deposition in Scotland over the period between noon on Friday 2 May and midnight Sunday 4 May; what peak levels, in rems, were detected; and what are their respective chemical and biological half-lives.

Mr. Ancram: During the period 2-4 May air, rain and deposited radioactivity over Scotland contained a range of radionuclides attributable to the fallout from the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power station. The more significant in radiological terms were iodine 131, caesium 134 and caesium 137. The peak concentrations detected are shown in the table. The values are given in units of becquerel, this rather than the rem being the appropriate unit for measuring radioactivity. Also given in the table are the effective half lives of the radionuclides in man. The effective half life of a radionuclide takes into account its physical, chemical and biological characteristics.

Nuclide	Effective half-life (days)	Maximum measured activity in air (becquerels per cubic metre)	Maximum measured activity in rain (becquerels per litre)	Maximum measured activity in surface deposition (becquerels per square metre)
Iodine 131	7·5	2·7	9,400	8,000
Caesium 134	96	1·2	1,650	*1,200
Caesium 137	109	2·2	2,560	2,500

* This caesium 134 result was obtained in a different sample from that which gave the iodine 131 and caesium 137 result.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many samples of milk in Scotland have been collected and analysed for the presence of caesium 137; and what are the maximum levels which have been detected.

Mr. Ancram: Three hundred and six samples of milk were analysed for both caesium 134 and caesium 137. The highest values obtained in the period up to 13 May were:

	Cs 134 Bq/litre	Cs 137 Bq/litre
Cow's milk	175	351
Goat's milk	93	329
Ewe's milk	288	543

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any tests have been performed on children, or other critical sections of the population, in Scotland to establish the actual dose absorbed of iodine 131 by the thyroid gland; and what levels have been detected as a result of contamination from the Chernobyl disaster.

Mr. John MacKay: The National Radiological Protection Board has undertaken measurements on some primary schoolchildren in the Glasgow area. Preliminary analysis has shown that none of the children in the group will receive a committed dose to the thyroid of more than 3 mSv. This is small by comparison with the International Commission on Radiological Protection reference level of 50 mSv at which action would be considered.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many readings of radioactivity in the air over Scotland were taken and analysed on each of the days between 26 April and 8 May; and if he will list the sites involved and the levels of each radioisotopes detected.

Mr. Ancram: The Scottish Development Department does not maintain a record of all daily measurements of airborne radioactivity throughout Scotland. As part of the arrangements made to monitor the effects of fallout from the Chernobyl reactor accident, measurements were made by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority at Dounreay, Eskdalemuir and Lerwick, the South of Scotland Electricity Board at Hunterston and Chapelcross, the Ministry of Defence at Her Majesty's naval base Rosyth, and by the National Radiological Protection Board at Glasgow and Peterhead. For the period 2 to 8 May, the results of 78 measurements of radioactivity in air were reported to the Scottish Development Department. These results, which showed that levels of airborne radioactivity were of no significance in radiological terms, will be placed in the Library.

Chernobyl Disaster (Cancer Deaths)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what risk is posed to the public, in terms of the expected additional number of cancer deaths per 10,000 population, by levels of radioisotopes detected over Scotland as a result of the Chernobyl disaster.

Mr. John MacKay: The levels of radioisotopes detected over Scotland as a result of the Chernobyl incident have varied widely. These have, in all cases, been well within internationally agreed levels at which we would be required to consider taking action to protect individuals.

While it is extremely difficult to predict with any accuracy the extent to which the levels of radioisotopes detected might bring about an increase in the annual rate of mortality due to cancer, estimates based on models used by the National Radiological Protection Board and the International Commission for Radiological Protection indicate that the number of fatal cancers expected to occur over the next 35 years will be of the order of 0·02 per 10,000 population.

Airborne Radioactivity

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline the normal procedures for informing the public regarding precautionary measures to be adopted in the event of airborne radioactive materials reaching Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: The Chernobyl accident is the first occasion on which such measures have had to be adopted. Arrangements were made for the normal monitoring of the concentration of radioactivity in environmental material to be extended. The normal arrangements for informing the public by means of parliamentary statements and news releases were supplemented in this instance by the opening of an information room to deal with inquiries from the public.

Rainwater (Radiation)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those sites in Scotland at which samples of rainwater have been regularly collected and analysed for radioisotopes since 26 April; and if he will list those areas in Scotland receiving the highest diurnal rainfall over the same period.

Mr. Ancram: Rainwater is collected regularly at the following locations as part of the programme undertaken jointly by the Environmental and Medical Sciences Division, Harwell Laboratory and the National Radiological Protection Board:

Lerwick
Dounreay
Glasgow
Eskdalemuir

As part of the arrangements for monitoring fallout for the accident at the Chernobyl power station additional rainwater samples have been taken and analysed at the following sites:

Dounreay Nuclear Power Development Establishment (UKAEA)
Chapelcross Nuclear Power Station: (British Nuclear Fuels plc)
Hunterston Nuclear Power Station (SSEB)
Torness Nuclear Power Station (SSEB)

Information on rainfall in Scotland is available from the Meteorological Office.

Road Traffic Offences

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for the sheriffdom of Edinburgh (a) the number of convictions for road traffic offences resulting in death or serious injury and (b) a breakdown on sentences following conviction for such offences by fine, community services order, and custodial sentence.

Mr. John MacKay: Information on causing death by reckless driving is given in the table. Offences where serious injury results cannot be separately identified.

Deer Poaching

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many firearms and shotgun certificates have been cancelled by courts in Scotland under convictions for deer poaching in each of the last five years;

(2) what forfeitures have been ordered by courts in Scotland under convictions for deer poaching in each of the last five years.

Mr. Rifkind: I regret that this information is not available.

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many persons have been charged with, and how many convicted of, offences under the Deer (Scotland) Act 1959; and what was the total amount of the penalties imposed, in each of the last five years;

(2) how many persons have been charged with, and how many convicted of, offences under the Licensing of Venison Dealers (Prescribed Forms etc.) and (Application Procedures etc.) (Scotland) Orders 1984.

Mr. Rifkind: The table gives figures on offences relating to deer. A more detailed breakdown of such offences is not available.

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is satisfied with the operation of the legislation relating to offences of poaching of deer in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The additional offences and increased penalties introduced by the Deer (Amendments) (Scotland) Act 1982 have helped to increase the deterrents to poaching. The Act also introduced new provisions for the licensing of venison dealers, which were brought into effect from the beginning of 1985, and preliminary indications are that these provisions have helped the police to secure convictions. Overall, I consider that the legislation is working satisfactorily, but I shall of course keep the position under review.

Hospitals

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he plans to take to avoid or reduce errors in the design and construction of hospitals in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Guidance on the design and construction of health service buildings is issued to health boards from time to time to assist them in fulfilling their responsibilities in this area. Updating of the design and procedural guidance is a continuing process.

Errors in the design or construction of health service buildings are very much the exception. There have been a few cases of such errors, which have received much publicity. But these errors account for only a very small proportion of the £1 billion which has been spent on health service building in Scotland since the NHS reorganisation in 1974. Where problems are shown to be the result of errors in design or construction it is the policy of the Scottish Home and Health Department that the health board should seek redress.

Geriatric Services

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to increase resources for hospital, nursing and ancillary geriatric services for Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Resources are allocated to health boards according to the SHARE (Scottish Health Authorities Revenue Equalisation) formula which takes into account the higher demands for health care from the elderly. It is for individual boards to decide on local priorities. They should be guided by the report "Scottish Health Authorities Priorities for the Eighties," which identified a number of groups, including the elderly, which should be regarded as having particular priority in the provision of services.

Young Persons

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of young people reaching minimum school leaving age in each year from 1970 to the present, showing the number who stay on in education (a) at school and (b) at college or elsewhere; and what was the first destination of those who left school showing, where possible, separately, whether it was (a) full-time work, (b) part-time work, (c) job creation programme, youth opportunities programme or YTS, (d) unemployed and (e) other.

Mr. Allan Stewart: This information is not available in the precise form or for the full period requested. Broadly comparable information for a restricted range of years is contained in the following tables:

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate, for each year from 1970 to 1995, of the number of young people reaching or projected to reach (a) minimum school leaving age and (b) the age of one, two and three years after minimum school leaving age and, in each case, his estimate of the number known or expected to come on to the labour market in each year, separating all answers, to include separate figures for males and females.

Police

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is able to estimate the proportion of a police officer's time in Scotland which is devoted to administration; what steps are being taken to reduce this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The information required for such an estimate is not available centrally. It is for chief constables to ensure that the most efficient and effective use is made of the manpower and other resources available to them, and they are well aware of the need to reduce to a minimum, by such means as increased use of civilian staff and computers, the time spent by police officers on non-operational duties. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary will continue to examine the progress that is being made.

Child Abduction

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will discuss with chief constables the co-ordination of police intelligence and information on crimes involving the abduction of children.

Mr. John MacKay: In recent years the police have developed procedures, including the use of computers, to improve the co-ordination and dissemination of information relating to the investigation of crimes involving the abduction of children. More particularly, a circular will shortly be issued to chief constables, following consultations between the Scottish Home and Health Department and the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland), about the introduction of procedures to take account of the Child Abduction Act 1984. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans for further discussions at present.

Crime Statistics

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the police force areas in Scotland where the total number of crimes has risen by (a) less than 10 per cent., (b) less than 25 per cent., (c) less than 33 per cent. and (d) more than 50 per cent., since 1975.

Mr. John MacKay: The Scottish police forces were reorganised during 1975; therefore, a meaningful comparison with figures for that year cannot be made. In the period 1976 to 1985 the percentage increases were as follows:

Increase in Crimes Recorded 1976 to 1985 by Police Force Area, Scotland

	Per cent
Less than 33 per cent.
Strathclyde	31·2
33 to 50 per cent.
Northern	42·4
Over 50 per cent.
Dumfries and Galloway	53·8
Tayside	55·2
Lothian and Borders	63·7
Central	72·3
Grampian	76·8
Fife	99·1

Note:
In calculating the above percentages the 1976 figures have been adjusted to conform with the revised classification of crimes and offences introduced in 1980.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state for each year since 1975 the number of crimes in Scotland involving the use of (a) any firearm, (b) a shotgun and (c) a crossbow.

Mr. John MacKay: The available information is set out. Figures are not available for years prior to 1978 and details for crossbow offences are not separately identifiable in the statistics.

Crimes and Offences recorded by the Police involving the use of a Firearm: Scotland

	Total	Involving a Shotgun
1978	492	54
1979	682	47
1980	1,093	62
1981	1,314	84
1982	1,283	98
1983	1,336	120
1984	1,353	137
1985	1,673	127

Note:
From 1980 onwards the statistics cover all crimes and offences in which a firearm was alleged to have been involved. For years prior to that only "crimes" as defined in the pre-1980 crime classification are included. Thus, for 1978 and 1979 cases of petty assault and of minor property damage are excluded from the above figures.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the increase since 1975 in the number of victims of offences of violence against the person.

Mr. John MacKay: No information on victims is available from the routine statistics. However, between 1976 and 1985 the number of recorded crimes of violence against the person increased from 6,680 to 12,098.

For the purpose of this reply, the term "violence against the person" is taken to include all non-sexual crimes of violence (group 1 of the standard classification) apart from robbery, those crimes of indecency (group 2 which contain a violent element, and certain crimes involving malicious and reckless conduct.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many crimes in Scotland were not cleared up in each of the last three years.

Mr. John MacKay: The table sets out the information requested.

Crimes not Cleared Up by the Police: Scotland

	Numbers
1983	309,668
1984	328,738
1985	306,947

Homeless Persons

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many households applied to local authorities in Scotland for accommodation in 1985; how many were accepted; how many were accommodated in bed and breakfast hotels at the end of December 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The information available centrally about the numbers of applications for accommodation and acceptances is neither complete nor compiled on a uniform basis. I must therefore refer the hon. Member directly to the local authorities in which he is interested. Provisional figures indicate that some 230 households who had applied under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 were in bed and breakfast accommodation at the end of December 985.

It is primarily for local authorities to consider the level of housing need in their areas and to make proposals in the light of local circumstances and the resources available. The Government have increased the planned level of capital investment in public sector housing in Scotland this year to £322 million, an increase of £46 million over the figure at the beginning of the last financial year.

Housebuilding

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many public sector housing starts are planned for 1986-87; and what was the comparable figure for 1978-79.

Mr. Ancram: Information concerning the number of housing starts planned for any given period is not collected centrally.

Sexual Assault

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to issue fresh guidance to police forces on the manner in which they interview victims of rape and other forms of sexual assault; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Revised guidance on the investigation of complaints of sexual assault, including rape, was issued to the police service as recently as 14 November 1985 in the light of the Scottish Office social research study "Investigating Sexual Assault" and of consultations with the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland), the rape crisis centres and Scottish Women's Aid. The guidance, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, has been widely welcomed, and my right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to issue further advice.

M80 (New Construction)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he anticipates being able to announce his decision on the line of the proposed M80 motorway between Stepps and Haggs.

Mr. Ancram: As I told the hon. Member in my letter of 21 March 1986, there is a good prospect of a preferred line being selected during the latter half of this year, followed by the publication of draft orders during the first half of 1987. The assessment of possible lines for the motorway is going ahead with all speed.

Urban Programme

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set up in Scotland a scheme under the urban programme similar to the Operation Raleigh inner city scheme announced by the Secretary of State for the Environment on 29 April.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend would be prepared to consider on its merits any such proposal submitted to him.

Atmospheric Radioactivity

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, pursuant to the answer given by the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Ancram) on 8 May, Official Report, columns 221-2, he will publish the levels of radioactivity in the atmosphere as monitored at Lerwick, on each of the seven days commencing 3 May when such information becomes available.

Mr. Ancram: Results of the measurements made by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority at its monitoring station in Lerwick are included in the regular reports of radioactive fallout in air and rain published by the Harwell laboratory. I will write to the hon. Member with the results for May 1986 as soon as they are available. I shall place copies of the figures in the Library.

DEFENCE

United States Weapons (United Kingdom Bases)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish the terms of the agreement governing the use by the United States of America of conventional weapons based in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the relevant section of the communiqué published on the conclusion of the talks between the then British Prime Minister (Mr. Churchill) and the United States President (Mr. Truman) in January 1952. The section reads as follows:

"Under arrangements made for the common defence, the United States has the use of certain bases in the United Kingdom. We reaffirm the understanding that the use of these bases in an emergency would be a matter for joint decision by Her Majesty's Government and the United States Government in the light of the circumstances prevailing at the time."

Royal Navy Ships (Radiation)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the effect on ships of the Royal Navy, at present in the Mediterranean of the nuclear explosion in Chernobyl in the Ukraine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: We have been advised by the National Radiological Protection Board that in the Mediterranean the radiation level since the Chernobyl accident has not risen to a level that would give cause for concern.

Trebor Corporation of America

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any branch of the armed forces has purchased any of the following weapons from the Trebor Corporation of America: stun gun, stun burst and stinger 37; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I am not aware that any such purchases have been made.

Departmental Land (Wales)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence, what land is owned at present by his Department in Wales.

Mr. John Lee: At 1 April 1986 the Ministry of Defence owned 51,247 acres of land and foreshore. In addition, 179 acres were held on lease and there were rights over a further 3,683 acres.

Local Liaison Committees

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual budget of his Department for funding local liaison committees throughout Britain.

Mr. John Lee: The information required is not immediately available. My noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Support will write to the hon. Member.

Holy Loch (Anniversary Ceremony)

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to the Defence Estimates involved in the organising of the anniversary ceremony for the Holy Loch United States base held on 8 March in Dunoon.

Mr. Stanley: My Department was not involved in organising the ceremony. The identifiable extra costs incurred by the Ministry of Defence amounted to some £400 occasioned by representation at the ceremony and hospitality afforded on board HMS Naiad principally to United States navy officers and members of the local community.

NATO (Radiation Artillery Rounds)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether at the Montebello meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Nuclear Planning Group in 1983 SACEUR's proposal of a requirement for modern non-enhanced radiation artillery rounds to replace the current rounds was supported by the United Kingdom Government.

Mr. Stanley: I cannot add to the communiqué of the Montebello meeting, a copy of which is in the Library.

British Army Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will now make it his policy to publish the names of the countries invited to the British Army equipment exhibition;

(2) whether countries with records of human rights violations and countries involved in armed conflict will be invited to the British Army equipment exhibition.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1986]: It is the long-standing policy of successive British Governments to issue invitations to the British Army equipment exhibition on a confidential basis. I see no reason to depart from this policy. An invitation to the exhibition does not, of course, imply that we would necessarily allow the sale of the equipment on display.

Turkey (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence which arms manufacturers are accompanying the Minister of State for Defence Procurement in his delegation to Turkey commencing on 21 May.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1986]: Some 20 firms from a cross section of British industry have accepted invitations, but for commercial reasons it is a matter for the companies concerned to state their involvement.

PRIME MINISTER

Pay Review Bodies

Mr. Leigh asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the latest reports of the pay review bodies.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the reports of the pay review bodies.

The Prime Minister: The 1986 reports of the review bodies on the pay of nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicines, doctors and dentists, and the armed forces, and of the Top Salaries Review Body, have been published today. Copies are now available in the Vote Office. The Government are grateful to members of the review bodies for these reports and the time and care which they have put into their preparation.

The reports recommend pay increases from 1 April 1986 which it is estimated would increase the 1986-87 pay bill for nurses, midwives and health visitors by 7·8 per cent., that for the professions allied to medicine by 8·2 per cent., that for doctors and dentists by 7·6 per cent., that for the armed forces by 7·5 per cent., and that for senior grades of the higher Civil Service, senior officers in the armed forces and the judiciary by 6·5 per cent. These figures are all very substantially above the rate of inflation, and above the general level of current wage settlements.

The Government have nevertheless decided that the increases recommended by the review bodies, with the exception of those recommended by the Top Salaries Review Body, should be implemented in full, but having regard to the sums involved, with effect from 1 July 1986. The resulting increases in the pay bills concerned in 1986-87 will average a little under 6 per cent., and this year's costs will be generally met from within existing public expenditure plans.

This year the hospital and community health services (HCHS) programme will benefit from lower inflation, which has already fallen well below the 4·5 per cent. expected when the planning total was agreed; and it will also have resources available from planned cost improvements. Nevertheless, the Government recognise that implementation as proposed might adversely affect services to patients, and have therefore decided, exceptionally, to provide an extra £60 million for health authority cash limits from within the total of planned public expenditure this year.

The Top Salaries Review Body (TSRB) last year carried out a major review of the remuneration of those covered by its remit, as a result of which it recommended increases, some of them substantial, in the salaries of those concerned. The recommended salaries have been fully in effect since 1 March 1986. This year the Government have decided that the TSRB's recommendations should be scaled down to an average 4 per cent. to take effect from 1 July 1986, thus keeping the effective increase in the pay of this group in 1986-87 in line with inflation, that is, 3 per cent. In addition the Government have decided in principle to accept the recommendations first put forward by the TSRB last year, for discretionary pay at Civil Service grades 2 and 3, as part of the arrangements for strengthening the link between pay and performance at these levels. A fuller account of these proposals is being sent to staff interests, with whom there will be consultation.

Details are as follows:

	Recommendation Average	Range	Average Effective Percentage Increase in 1986-87	Estimated Cost (£m) Recommended*	1986-87
Nurses	7·8	5·4 to 8·0	5·9	326	244
PAMs	8·2	6·5 to 8·0	6·1	30	23
DDRB	7·6	6·8 to 9·6	5·7	179	134
AFPRB	7·5	5·5 to 9·5	5·6	234	175
TSRB	6·5	5·3 to 7·3	3·0	5	2½

* Review Body figures, amended as necessary.

Full year effects for groups other than TSRB are as recommended; for TSRB groups the full year average is 4 per cent. and the range 3·2 per cent. to 4·4 per cent.

The pay rates and scales resulting from the decisions will be promulgated as soon as possible for National Health Service and armed forces groups. Rates for TSRB groups are set out below. Pensions will be based on the salaries actually in payment in accordance with the principle set out in my written answer of 13 April 1984, at column 383. The Government are considering separately certain points of detail in the recommendations.

Argentine-USA Fleet Manoeuvres

Q125. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what notification Her Majesty's Government were given of United States plans for joint manoeuvres with the Argentine fleet; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We are in regular wide-ranging contact with the United States Administration. A series of exercises between the United States navy and a number of South American countries has taken place annually for more than 20 years. According to Argentine press reports, Argentina has again decided not to participate this year.

US Forces (Consultation)

Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister whether the United States Government are expected to give prior notification to the United Kingdom Government if their armed forces situated in the United Kingdom are to be put on either amber or red alert.

The Prime Minister: The Government would expect to be informed about any change in the state of operational readiness of United States forces based in this country.

Civil Service (Pay Offer)

Mr. Deakins asked the Prime Minister why a 6 per cent. pay offer was made to the Civil Service; what was the rate of inflation at the time of the offer; if any difference represents changes in productivity; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The offer, which is a final one, followed negotiations with the unions concerned in the light of a survey of non-manual pay settlements in the private sector in 1985 conducted by the Office of Manpower Economics. It was made on 28 April, at which time the latest published retail prices index showed an annual increase of 4·2 per cent.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she now has anything to add to her statements on Government involvement in the ownership of the Westland Company.

The Prime Minister: No.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 May.

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 May.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 May.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 May.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 May.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her talks with Senor Perez de Cuellar on the future of the Falklands.

The Prime Minister: The Falklands was one of several topics discussed. The Secretary General gave an account of his recent visit to Argentina. I noted that we had made all the running in the search for improved bilateral relations, and made clear that our position remained that sovereignty over the Falklands was not negotiable.

South Africa

Mr. Wareing asked the Prime Minister what plans she has to meet Commonwealth leaders to review progress being made towards the promotion of peaceful political change in South Africa.

The Prime Minister: The Commonwealth leaders who set up the Eminent Persons Group are to meet after the group has reported on its work.

Terrorism (International Co-operation)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what discussions took place at the recent Tokyo summit about the implications of the sinking of the Rainbow Warrior by French agents in Auckland harbour for international political co-operation to counter terrorism; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: None.

Dr. Kurt Waldheim

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Prime Minister, further to her answer of 19 May to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, when she expects the search of military records by the Ministry of Defence in connection with allegations relating to Dr. Kurt Waldheim's wartime activities to be completed; and if she will make a further statement.

The Prime Minister: This search is continuing. It is not yet possible to say when it will be completed.

Israel

Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister whether she will outline her objectives for her visit to Israel; and whether she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I hope that my visit will help to strengthen our close relations with Israel. I look forward to my talks with Mr. Peres and his colleagues about the search for peace in the middle east and other international and bilateral issues.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Magistrates

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Attorney-General what is his policy on the circumstances under which magistrates are able to refuse to disclose their names to the press and the public.

The Attorney-General: This matter is currently sub judice. If the hon. Member will put down another question at a convenient time after judgment has been given in the case of David Leigh and The Observer Limited v. Peter Wain and Stephanie Thew, I will be happy to answer it.

Court Hearings

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Attorney-General what guidance he gives to High Court and Crown court clerks on the circumstances in which they may agree to take out of the list a hearing to strike out a plaintiff's legal action.

The Attorney-General: The Practice directions for trial out of London given by the then Lord Chief Justice on 10 December 1971, in respect of High Court proceedings, require all applications for adjournments, postponements and vacation of fixed dates to be made to the district registrar or the judge except where the application is by consent of all parties when the officer of the court having charge of the list may give effect to it, or refer the matter to the district registrar or the judge if he thinks fit.

Data Protection

Mr. Ashdown asked the Attorney-General whether his Department correctly completed and submitted its applications for data protection registration on time; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Yes.

Merthyr County Court

Mr. Rowlands asked the Attorney-General how many sittings there were of (a) the registrar and (b) the deputy registrar at the Merthyr county court in 1985-86.

The Attorney-General: In 1985-86 there were 63 registrar and 21 deputy registrar sitting days.

TRANSPORT

Merchant Shipping Act 1984

Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many inspections have been carried out under part I of the Merchant Shipping Act 1984; and how many notices have been served as a result.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Inspections of ships are undertaken on an ad hoc basis to ensure compliance with a variety of merchant shipping regulations and not to give effect to part I of the Merchant Shipping Act 1984 which makes provision only for the service of improvement and prohibition notices. Since the Act came into force, marine surveyors of my Department have made about 5,500 ship inspections and have issued eight prohibition and three improvement notices.

Vehicle Registration Prefix

Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of the implications for rural car dealers of the proposed change in the vehicle age registration system from August to October;

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact on car sales of the proposed move from August to October of the vehicle age identification system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There is no basis for making such assessments since the view of a major part of the motor industry has been that October would overall be the most beneficial alternative to the present August change. The amount of notice given should allow the motor industry ample time to adjust to the new month of change. However, if the industry as a whole now wishes to put forward an alternative arrangement, we are prepared to consider it.

Seafarers (ILO Convention)

Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he has taken to ensure his Department's compliance with International Labour Organisation Convention 134, 1970, Prevention of Accidents, Seafarers, with particular reference to articles 2.1, 2.2, 2.3, 2.4, 4.1, 4.2, 4.3, 6.1, 6.2, 6.3, 6.4, 8.1, 8.2, 8.3, 9.1 and 9.2, respectively, of the convention.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The United Kingdom has not ratified this convention but measures promoted by my Department, which include regulations and codes of practice, have ensured that the majority of its requirements have been met in respect of merchant seamen.

Falmouth Container Terminal

Mr. Mudd asked the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he received from Falmouth Container Terminal Ltd. the desk study carried out by Hydraulics Research Ltd. of the effects of a container terminal on the regime of Falmouth harbour; how the desk study will be evaluated; and by what date he anticipates reaching a conclusion on the implications of the study.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The desk study was received in the Department on 9 April. Consultations on it with navigational interests and other bodies concerned are well advanced and we are taking independent professional advice on its conclusions. It is hoped to announce a decision shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Small Companies (Accounting and Auditing)

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is yet in a position to announce the outcome of the Government's review of accounting and audit requirements for small companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Government have now completed their review of policy in this area in the light of the many and varied comments received on the consultative document "Accounting and Audit Requirements for Small Firms" published by my Department last June. We are grateful to the many consultees—over 200 in all—who took the trouble to comment.

On accounting requirements, the Government intend to relax the rules governing the amount of information small companies are required to disclose in their accounts. Details of the changes proposed will be announced shortly. The changes will reduce the amount of information companies are currently required to give shareholers while at the same time enabling companies to meet as simply as possible the needs of the Inland Revenue. The changes will also make it easier and cheaper for those choosing to file modified accounts at the Companies Registration Office to do so. By removing certain pages from the shareholder's accounts companies will be able to use the same set of accounts for filing purposes. The interests of individual shareholders will be safeguarded by giving them the right to ask the company for information which, under present arrangements, would be contained in the full accounts.

Current consultations will also be pursued with interested parties on the scope for introducing changes in tax rules which would make it easier for proprietors of businesses wishing to do so to cease trading as limited companies and to trade instead as sole traders or partnerships. Consideration will also be given to changes in company law which might help to streamline the process of disincorporation.

On the audit, the Government have decided to retain the statutory requirement for small companies to have their accounts audited. The consultation revealed no strong balance of opinion in favour of abolition. We are determined to clamp down on fraud and believe that removal of this first defence against fraud would be inappropriate.

The changes in accounting rules will be applied as widely as possible within the limits set by Community obligations. The Companies Act definition of a small company will be extended to cover companies with an annual turnover of less than £2 million and a balance sheet total of less than £975,000. This will significantly reduce accounting burdens for some 90 per cent. of companies. The turnover and balance sheet thresholds for medium-sized companies will also be increased — from £5·75 million and £2·8 million to £8·0 million and £3·9 million respectively.

The Government believe that this package strikes a fair balance between conflicting considerations and will make a real contribution to deregulation. The changes in accounting rules will be implemented as soon as possible.

Shipbuilding Orders

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and industry what information he has for each of the last 10 years of the percentage of merchant shipping built for owners in the United Kingdom and the total tonnage of shipping built and the tonnage sourced, respectively, from (a) the United Kingdom, (b) other European Economic Community countries and (c) South Korea.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The following is the information:

Mr. A. Watey (Correspondence)

Mr. Malins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to reply to the letter dated 21 April, from Mr. A. Watey, of Albany Road, London S.E.5 regarding imports of television sets from the People's Republic of China.

Mr. John Butcher: Department of Trade and Industry officials met Mr. Wacey on 6 May in response to his letter of 21 April. Mr. Wacey also wrote to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) and I replied on 20 May.

General Motors (New York Meeting)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 15 May, Official Report, column 502, on what date the meeting in New York on 4 May between the Minister of State, the hon. Member for City of Chester (Mr. Morrison) and Mr. Stempel of General Motors was arranged; if the position of Leyland Vehicles and Land and Freight Rover was discussed; and if he discussed Bedford and GM Commercial Vehicle operations in the United Kingdom were discussed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Arrangements for a meeting with Mr. Stempel of General Motors were set in train in March. Final arrangements were not agreed until the last week in April. During a wide-ranging discussion, covering the position of the Bedford commercial vehicle operations in the United Kingdom, I took the opportunity of restating the Government's position on the future of individual BL businesses in the terms of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's statements of 25 March and 24 April.

Data Protection

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether his Department correctly completed and submitted its applications for data protection registration on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Butcher: Yes; my Department submitted seven applications for registration before 11 May 1986 under the Data Protection Act 1984.

Import Substitution (Awards)

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will give consideration to establishing an award scheme, similar to existing awards for exports, for companies which record outstanding achievements in the field of import substitution.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1986, c. 502]: Although no review of the Queen's Award scheme is planned at present I have asked the Queen's Award Office to take careful note of your proposal.

I applaud those companies which recognise and take advantage of the excellent commercial opportunities in our domestic market, and I would welcome action by companies and organisations in Industry Year 1986 to highlight the commercial opportunities for British suppliers to make competitive products for market sectors which are currently dominated by imports.

British Sugar Corporation

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement concerning any communication he has received from the Director General of Fair Trading concerning the future ownership or control of the British Sugar Corporation.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1986, c. 501]: I am now able to make a statement.

It was announced on 20 May that my right hon. Friend had decided, in accordance with the recommendation of the Director General of Fair Trading, to refer the proposed acquisitions of S and W Berisford plc by Hillsdown Holdings plc and Tate and Lyle plc to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for investigation.

My right hon. Friend considered that the proposed acquisition by Tate and Lyle raised issues of competition in the sugar market, and that both proposed acquisitions raised wider issues of public interest arising from a change of ownership of British Sugar, given the special nature of the sugar market, and British Sugar's place in it.

ENERGY

Nuclear Incidents

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will ask the chairmen of (a) the Central Electricity Generating Board, (b) the South of Scotland Electricity Board, (c) British Nuclear Fuels plc and (d) the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to publish all nuclear incidents that have occurred at any of their facilities since the Government changed the all-inclusive nuclear incident reporting system of the nuclear installations inspectorate.

Mr. Goodlad: I have asked the relevant chairmen to write to the hon. Member on this matter.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether considerations of (a) material security or (b) commercial confidentiality have ever resulted in failure to disclose immediately radiological incidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by the UKAEA, BNFL, CEGB and SSEB that at no time have they failed, in respect of any United Kingdom civil nuclear installation, either on grounds of security or commercial confidentiality, to make prompt disclosure to the relevant authorities of any incident judged likely to have any implications for public health and safety.

Oil Prices

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether, in the light of the Norwegian Government's decision to hold talks with the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries, he will now agree to talks with the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries and other oil producing countries with a view to securing a stable oil price.

Mr. Walker: No.

Sellafield

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will now list all incidents which have occurred at Sellafield since 19 March 1982 which have (a) involved any leakage of radioactive material either within or outwith the plant and (b) are otherwise of radiological significance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I have asked the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels plc to write to the hon. Member on this matter.

Gas Purchases

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the volume of gas which was purchased by British Gas but not taken in 1984, 1985 and in 1986 to date.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: British Gas manages its gas purchases so that where gas is paid for but not taken a credit is given against future purchases. The volumes of such gas are commercially confidential.

Severn Barrage

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to be able to make a response to the Severn Tidal Power Group's report on the Severn barrage project.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 12 May at column 333.

Coal Mining Subsidence (Waddilove Report)

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he is yet in a position to announce his response to the report of the Waddilove committee on coal mining subsidence compensation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Careful consideration continues to be given to the numerous and complex issues raised by the Waddilove report. A Government response will be published as soon as possible.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about the safety record of French nuclear power stations situated close to the English Channel; what discussions have taken place between Her Majesty's Government and the French Government about safety standards and procedures at nuclear power stations in the light of the Chernobyl disaster; and what plans exist for the exchange of information in the event of an accident to a nuclear power station near the Channel.

Mr. Goodlad: The nuclear installations inspectorate and its French counterparts have a formal arrangement for continuously exchanging information on all matters affecting safety. This would include details of incidents and actions resulting as a consequence. The NII has not found it necessary to alert me to any concern over the safety of French nuclear facilities. No formal exchange has taken place between the two regulatory authorities as yet, which are specific to Chernobyl, but both participated in a meeting on 9 May organised by the nuclear energy agency committee on the safety of nuclear installations. In addition to the arrangement referred to above there is a formal Government to Government agreement of July 1983 (Cmnd 9041) which spells out actions in the event of an accident occurring in either country which could have radiological consequences for the other.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about recent problems involving welding defects in the nuclear steam supply systems of pressurised water reactors in France and other countries.

Mr. Goodlad I have asked Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate to reply to the hon. Member.

Data Protection

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether his Department correctly completed and submitted its applications for data protection registration on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department submitted all six of its applications covering 18 "standard purposes" to the registrar by the due date.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Leicester Prison

10. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will pay an official visit to Leicester prison.

Mr. Hurd: I have no plans to do so at present.

Criminal Statistics

12. Mr. McGuire asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of crimes per 100,000 population in (a) the 10 most deprived and (b) the 10 least deprived boroughs in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: Statistics of notifiable offences per head of population are available nationally only for entire police force areas.

23. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the increase since 1978 in the total number of crimes in (a) the 10 most deprived boroughs and (b) the 10 least deprived boroughs, in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: Statistics of notifiable offences are available nationally only for entire police force areas.

Mr. Bulmer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of those convicted of serious crimes during the last 12 months for which records are available had a criminal record; and how this compares with the previous five years.

Mr. Mellor: The latest available information about the previous criminal record of those convicted of "standard list" offences is published in "Previous Convictions of Persons Convicted in 1982", Home Office statistical bulletin 2/86. It is estimated that 61 per cent. of those convicted in 1982 of non-motoring "standard list" offences had a previous conviction. The equivalent proportion for those convicted in 1977 was 56 per cent.

Racially Motivated Crimes

13. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on progress in investigating crimes suspected of being racially motivated.

Mr. Giles Shaw: All police forces in England and Wales are well aware of the seriousness of racially motivated incidents and have made arrangements for these to be monitored locally. Guidelines issued by the Association of Chief Police Officers last year call for a vigorous and sympathetic response to such incidents and we are confident that appropriate investigations are carried out thoroughly and expeditiously.

25. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has any plans to conduct research into the incidence of crimes with an apparent racial motivation.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The 1986-87 programme of work for the Home Office research and planning unit includes a study of the nature and incidence of racially motivated incidents in selected areas and a study of possible improvements in the police response to such incidents and of victims' perceptions and needs. The possibility of a third study looking at crime prevention measures for Asian shopkeepers is also being considered.

Plastic Bullets

14. Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from chief constables on the policy adopted by their forces for the use of plastic bullets.

Mr. Hurd: No. Plastic baton rounds should be available to forces which need them, for use in circumstances of last resort. I announced earlier this week that new arrangements had been introduced to provide the necessary equipment. Where a police authority withholds agreement the chief constable will be able to obtain the equipment from my Department if his assessment of need is endorsed by Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary. We have also issued revised guidelines on the use of the equipment. Plastic baton rounds have never been used in Great Britain, and I very much hope that they will never have to be, but it is essential that the police should have the means of dealing with extreme disorder.

Chernobyl Disaster

15. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conclusions about the role of civil protection Her Majesty's Government draw from the disaster at Chernobyl.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The incident has underlined the importance of planning flexibly for a wide range of emergencies as proposed in the Government's all-hazards approach to civil protection.

32. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department first received information from the Devon emergency volunteers about a suspected incident in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of radiological significance prior to official confirmation of the Chernobyl disaster.

41. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he received from outside sources alleging an incident in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics suspected to be of radiological significance prior to official notification from within Government about the Chernobyl disaster.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In the absence of notification from the Soviet Government, initial information about the incident came from monitoring by other countries which were affected before us. The county emergency planning officer of Devon telephoned the Department's emergency planning division on the afternoon of 28 April after hearing a local radio news story about a suspected nuclear accident in the USSR.

Crimes of Violence

16. Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the information available to his Department indicates the number of households in Great Britain who were victims of a crime in 1985.

Mr. Mellor: No.

21. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state, for each year since 1978, the proporton of crimes of violence against the person in England and Wales which were committed by a member of the family of the victim.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the relationship between victim and offender is not regularly collected centrally except for offences of homicide which is published each year in "Criminal Statistics for England and Wales".

Crime Prevention (Lighting)

17. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidance to all local authorities advising that the brighter new modern lighting of town centres, housing estates and blocks of flats constitutes the best crime prevention available to them.

Mr. Giles Shaw: There is insufficient evidence to suggest that such guidance would be justified, although improved lighting on housing estates can make a contribution to deterring crime.

Kidnap Insurance

18. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation relating to kidnap insurance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The possibility of measures against kidnap ransom insurance is being considered. Until that work is complete it is not possible to say whether legislation will be necessary.

36. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with his counterpart in the Republic of Ireland about kidnap insurance.

Mr. Hurd: This was among the subjects discussed at a meeting with my European Community colleagues, including the Minister of Justice of the Republic of Ireland, in the Hague on 24 April. It was agreed that further study was needed.

Police-Community Relations

19. Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress there has been in relations between the police and the community they serve since the publication of the Scarman report.

Mr. Hurd: The Government and the police have responded positively to the recommendations made by Lord Scarman in 1981. Policing methods, training, recruitment and arrangements for consultation with the community have been substantially revised and are making a strong contribution to the development of police-community relations. The many imaginative initiatives taken by the police in recent years have been well received by local communities and the Government are giving the police every encouragement to continue with this important work.

Greater Manchester

20. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Greater Manchester as to the latest figures for recorded crime in Greater Manchester in the year to date.

Mr. Mellor: Recorded crime figures for the first quarter of 1986 are due to be published next month. At present, complete figures for individual police force areas are not available.

Prisoners and Detained Persons

22. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest available figure for the average daily population in prisons, hostels and detention centres; and how this total compares with the statistic for 1979.

Mr. Mellor: On 9 May 1986 there were 45,708 prisoners held in prisons, remand centres and youth custody centres and 1,140 in detention centres in England and Wales. On 30 April 1979, the nearest equivalent date for which figures are available, there were 38,402 prisoners held in prisons, remand centres, young offender prisons and borstals and 3,728 in detention centres. Figures for prisoners in hostels are not recorded separately.

The latest available figures showing the distinction between prisoners convicted, unconvicted and held for civil offences can only be supplied for 31 March 1986 and I shall compare these to figures recorded for 31 March 1979 as follows. Convicted prisoners held were 38,449 in 1986 as against 37,998 in 1979. Those unconvicted held in 1986 numbered 8,115 compared to 3,907 in 1979. Those held in connection with civil proceedings numbered 234 in 1986 and 600 in 1979.

Civil Protection (Nuclear Incidents)

24. Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of experience arising as a result of the Chernobyl nuclear incident, he has any plans to increase the level of civil protection in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Government will be reviewing contingency arrangements in the light of experience following the Chernobyl incident.

39. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications for the role of civil protection in the United Kingdom of the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today to my hon. Friend the member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson).

Crimes Against Children

26. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state, for each year since 1978, the number of crimes against children which were known to the police in England and Wales, distinguishing between each category of offence.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the age and sex of victims of crime is not regularly collected except for offences of homicide. The only other information available relates to certain offences defined as being committed against children. This information is published annually in "Criminal Statistics for England and Wales."

Police Training

27. Mr. Wolfson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on plans for further police training; and if he will make a statement.

29. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes have recently been made, or are about to be made, in the training of police officers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Police training is subject to a continuous process of review and improvement. Plans for change currently being developed or under consideration at the national level cover all ranks and span probationer, career development, management and command training as well as more specialist functions.

37. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to seek to modify police training to meet the demands arising in the inner cities.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today to questions from my hon. Friends the Members for Sevenoaks (Mr. Wolfson) and Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter). Training in community and race relations aspects, which focus most strongly in inner cities, is receiving special attention; the inner city is the main theme of this year's senior command course at the police staff college.

Prison Officers' Dispute

28. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the latest position in the prison officers' dispute.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. and learned Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 14 May at columns 464-466.

Prison Officers Association

30. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met representatives of the Prison Officers Association; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend last met representatives of the Prison Officers' Association on 28 April and reported to the House on that meeting in his statement the following day at columns 797-805.

Thames Valley Police

31. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with police manning levels in the Thames Valley force.

Mr. Giles Shaw: A total of 370 additional police posts have been approved for the Thames Valley police since May 1979. There were 49 vacancies on the present police establishment of 3,367 on 30 April 1986 when the force was beginning to implement the latest increase of 50 posts, which was approved on 15 April. My right hon. Friend will consider in the autumn the possibility of a further increase for Thames Valley.

Crime Prevention (Residential Dwellings)

33. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer of 20 March, Official Report, column 269, the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention has produced a low-cost security package to protect residential dwellings in particularly vulnerable areas.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Part of the terms of reference for the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention working group on residential burglary is to "prepare a low cost security package for inner city households". The working group is currently considering this matter and will present a report at an open meeting of the standing conference on 18 November 1986.

In the interim, my right hon. Friend and I shall continue to monitor closely the progress of all five standing conference working groups through the ministerial group on crime prevention and at the second crime prevention seminar to be held on 23 June 1986 at 10 Downing street.

Cruelty to Children

34. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to provide for higher mandatory sentences for those found guilty of offences of cruelty to children.

Mr. Mellor: We are satisfied that the penalties available to the courts for dealing with offences of cruelty to children (including assaults and sexual abuse) are adequate; the most serious offences carry a maximum sentence of life imprisonment. Mandatory sentences would restrict the power of the courts to take into account all the circumstances of a particular case when passing sentence.

Remand Statistics

35. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently held in prisons on remand awaiting trial; what were the comparable figures for 1 May 1983, 1984 and 1985, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is given in the table. Information on the number awaiting commencement of their trial is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Untried population of prisons and remand centres in England and Wales

At 30 April	Number of Persons
1983	5,650
1984	6,970
1985	8,240
1986	*8,580

* Provisional.

Rape Victims

38. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to issue fresh guidance to police forces on the manner in which they treat victims of rape; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We are considering with the Association of Chief Police Officers what further guidance might be issued on the police's treatment of rape victims, in the light of the report by the Women's National Commission on violence against women.

Police Officers (Injuries)

40. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers received injuries in the course of their duties in the latest available 12-month period; how many days' service were lost as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not collected centrally.

Civil Defence

42. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish new Government civil defence information.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information, comprising a film and printed literature, is expected to be available in the next few months.

Oxford Street (CND Demonstration)

43. Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis about the handling of the demonstration in Oxford street organised by the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament on 20 April.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner informs me that on 19 April demonstrators taking part in a march organised by CND sat down in Oxford street. When the march resumed, about 500 people refused to move. In order to relieve the serious traffic congestion caused, police removed demonstrators from the road. For the next hour demonstrators persisted in attempts to block the road and missiles were thrown at bus drivers and police officers. I understand that 72 people were arrested for a variety of public order offences.

Radio Deregulation

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Government's policy on deregulation of radio; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Within the existing legislative framework for radio, the Government welcome the steps taken by the IBA to avoid unnecessary burdens on programme contractors, consistent with the maintenance of the public interest in broadcasting. The future regulatory and institutional framework for all radio services will be addressed, in the light of the forthcoming experiment in community radio, in the Green Paper referred to in my reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris) on 8 May at column 206.

Section 11 Grants

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of recent approved changes in the rules governing section 11 moneys.

Mr. Waddington: There have been no recent changes in the arrangements under which applications for grant under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 are considered. However, the Home Office is currently consulting local authority associations and some other organisations on the terms of a draft circular which would introduce certain changes in these arrangements. The principal effect of the changes now proposed would be to improve the targeting of the grant so that it will in future be more effective in meeting the special needs of Commonwealth immigrants and their immediate descendants; but the proposed new arrangements will also require local authorities to pay explicit attention to value for money considerations, and to ensure that there is effective consultation with those who are intended to benefit from the grant before any application is made. The consultation period will last until the end of June and it intended that the new arrangements will be brought into force as soon as possible after that. In the meantime, new applications for grant are being considered under the existing criteria only in exceptional circumstances.

Data Protection

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the forms and information circulated in Wales concerning the Protection of Information Act will be published in both Welsh and English; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the Data Protection Act 1984. The Data Protection registrar, who is responsible for administering the registration requirements of the Act, is now arranging to have the registration forms translated into Welsh and is considering what further information should be made available in the Welsh language.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department correctly completed and submitted its applications for data protection registration on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Yes.

Merseyside (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Merseyside.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to his question on 20 May at column 127.

Prison Population

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will (a) state the total increase in the average daily number of prisoners between 1980 and 1985, expressing this also as an average percentage rise in each year, (b) publish the comparable figures for the period 1970 to 1979 and (c) give his Department's latest estimate for the growth in size of the prison population between 1985 and 1994.

Mr. Mellor: The average population of prison department establishments in England and Wales increased between 1980 and 1985, by about 4,000, an average annual increase of 1·8 per cent. Between 1970 and 1979 the average population increased by about 3,200, an average annual increase of 0·9 per cent. The increase in the average population between 1985 and 1994 is projected to be between 6,600 using a demographic model and 12,700 using a non-demographic model. Further details are given in "Projections of Long Term Trends in the Prison Population to 1994" (Home Office statistical bulletin 5/86).

Burglaries (Wales)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Welsh homes have reported burglaries in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: The number of offences of burglary in a dwelling recorded by the police in Wales in 1985 was 16,707. Figures for the years 1980 to 1984 have been published in the annual "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables, Volume 3" (table S.3.1) and for earlier years in the annual Command Papers on criminal statistics.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the clear-up rate for crimes of burglaries from Welsh houses in each of the past 15 years.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is contained in the following table:

Recorded Offences of Burglary in a Dwelling (cleared up) in Wales
Numbers and percentages

	Numbers cleared up	Per cent cleared up
1971	3,120	33
1972	3,259	32
1973	3,043	35
1974	3,081	37
1975	3,888	34
1976	3,641	33
1977	4,729	38
1978	4,255	39
1979	4,220	39
1980	4,969	36
1981	6,993	46
1982	6,048	41
1983	6,807	39
1984	7,040	41
1985	6,842	41

Benefits (Fraud)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in Wales in each of the past seven years have been convicted of crimes related to the claiming of supplementary or unemployment benefit.

Mr. Mellor: Information collected centrally does not distinguish offences of fraud or forgery involving supplementary or unemployment benefit. Records available to me which may be incomplete, on social security offences cover the summary offences of false statements or misrepresentations. To provide figures for all of the years requested would involve disproportionate cost so details for 1979, 1981, 1983 and 1984 only have been provided in the following table. Corresponding information for 1985 is not yet available.

Defendents found guilty of offences of making a false statement or misrepresentation contrary to the Supplementary Benefit Act 1976 or Family Income Supplement Act 1970 in Wales

	Numbers
1979	1,039
1981	593
1983	274
1984	230

Drug Abuse (Grange Hill Video)

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department which officials from his Department were present at the launch of the Grange Hill anti-drug abuse video, "Just Say No", held in March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Two officials from the Home Office drugs branch attended the launch on 25 March 1986 of the Drugwatch/SCODA National Directory of Services for drug users, their families and friends, at which the Grange Hill cast's "Just Say No" record and video were also launched. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security the hon. Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney) spoke at the launch. I had intended to be there but my duties on the Standing Committee considering the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Bill precluded me. The Home Office, DHSS and DES each gave financial help towards the distribution of the National Directory.

Prison Officers' Houses (Sales)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the value of the 49 prison officers' houses at Culcheth; what reserve price has been placed on them; when he put out to tender for the sale of these houses; and when the contract will be awarded.

Mr. Mellor: The prison officers houses at Culcheth have not been valued. No reserve price has been placed on the 39 now for sale, since reserve prices are normally applicable only when properties are auctioned. Formal tenders were not invited. The estate agents were instructed on 11 November to market the 26 houses then available. Negotiations for the sale of the 39 houses are proceeding on a private treaty basis. The contract will be awarded as soon as possible.

Fugitive Offenders Act 1967

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to introduce legislation to seek to amend the Fugitive Offenders Act 1967; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: In the light of the decision of Commonwealth Law Ministers in 1983 to revise the Commonwealth scheme for the rendition of fugitive offenders, we are considering whether to amend the Fugitive Offenders Act. The scheme is to be considered further by Law Ministers in Harare in July, and my right hon. Friend shall reach a decision in the light of that meeting.

Refugees and Asylum

Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's implementation of recommendation 32 of the report of the Home Affairs Committee on refugees and asylum.

Mr. Hurd: The Government accepted this recommendation subject to reviewing the situation in the country concerned shortly before the seven year point was reached by those first granted leave under a particular exceptional policy. I have now considered the position in respect of Iranians granted exceptional leave to enter or remain since the Iranian revolution in December 1979. In the light of conditions in Iran I have decided that where an Iranian has had exceptional leave to be in this country for seven years indefinite leave to remain should be granted, provided that he or she is not personally unacceptable. Applications from Iranians will now be considered with a presumption in favour of giving settlement on this basis. This policy will be kept under review in the light of the situation in Iran.

DEFENCE

RAF Fylingdales

Sir Michael Shaw asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the modernisation of the ballistic missile early warning system at RAF Fylingdales.

Mr. Stanley: The ballistic missile early warning system at RAF Fylingdales needs to be modernised in order to maintain its effectiveness in giving warning of modern multiple warhead missiles. Effective early warning systems contribute significantly to deterrence. This modernisation, therefore, enhances the overall safety of the Alliance. The Government have, therefore, decided to proceed with a modernisation programme in co-operation with the United States Government. We are satisfied that the modernisation of this system fully conforms with United States obligations under the anti-ballistic missile treaty. This does not prohibit the modernisation of ballistic missile early warning systems already in existence, as Fylingdales was, when the treaty entered into force.

The modernised system will be of a more advanced design and will have a more compact, less visible profile. The modernisation and subsequent operation of the early warning system will be carried out under the provisions of the Anglo/US memorandum of agreement published in 1960, together with new arrangements to cover detailed matters implementing those provisions. The systems will remain under RAF command and control. The necessary consultations will shortly commence with the appropriate local planning authority.

As well as maintaining our early warning capability, the Fylingdales modernisation will create job opportunities. British companies will be used in the construction of the facility and infrastructure required by the improved radar, and they will also be undertaking the deactivation work on the existing radars. In addition, arrangements have been made which ensure that a range of British companies will have a significant opportunity to benefit to an extent closely equivalent to the investment undertaken by the Americans at Fylingdales.

Holmfield School, Christchurch (Rifle Range)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the reasons why he has given a 90 per cent. grant to the Holmfield school, Christchurch, for a rifle range.

Mr. Freeman: I shall answer this question shortly.

NH90 Helicopter

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to review his Department's orders for the NH90 helicopter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The five-nation NH90 collaborative project is at present only in its feasibility/pre-definition phase. The question of orders does not therefore arise.

Data Protection

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department correctly completed and submitted its applications for data protection registration on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Yes.

Keeni Meeni Services (KMS)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department employs personnel from a security firm called Keeni Meeni Services (KMS); whether his Department retains this company or any of its employees to undertake any services or to give advice; whether his Department has employed personnel from this company or retained this company at any time since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer this question shortly.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

HTLV III Virus (Africa)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department has any plans to provide help to African countries through financial assistance or via provision of equipment to prevent the spread of HTLV III virus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: We are ready to consider any requests from African Governments to give help in combating AIDS. At present there is useful co-operation between African and British scientists, some of whom receive support from the Overseas Development Administration, on the clinical, immunological and epidemiological aspects of the disease.

EMPLOYMENT

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Wareing asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received about the adequacy of the retail prices index at reflecting the true rate of inflation for poorer households; if he is satisfied with the weightings given to various goods and services; whether he plans any changes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have received no direct representations, though I understand that the matter of price indices for different types of household is raised from time to time and I am aware of recent arguments in favour of producing a number of price indices. My right hon. and noble Friend is guided in these matters by the retail prices index advisory committee, an independent body with wide representation. The committee is expected to report shortly and any plans for changes will be announced subsequently.

Prisoners (MSC Services)

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General what services are offered by the Manpower Services Commission to prisoners before, on and after their release from prison; and what links there are concerning such services between the Manpower Services Commission and the probation service.

Mr. Lang: The Manpower Services Commission (MSC) offers a wide range of assistance to prisoners principally through its jobcentres. This includes providing information about jobs available locally and in other districts; advice on employment matters and MSC schemes; advice on and assistance with training and retraining; and normal job placing services. As a means of helping long-term prisoners to resettle on release, the probation service arranges, in conjunction with prison authorities and the MSC, for selected prisoners to be placed in work outside the prison during the last months of their sentences.

Data Protection

Mr. Ashdown asked the Paymaster General whether his Department correctly completed and submitted its applications for data protection registration on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Department of Employment, the Health and Safety Executive (HSE), the Manpower Services Commission (MSC) and the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service (ACAS), registered separately under the Data Protection Act. In all, a total of 43 applications for registration, comprising 163 separate purposes for holding data, were submitted within the legally specified time limit on behalf of the whole Department of Employment group. Confirmation of acceptance has not yet been received from the Data Protection Registrar.

Keeni Meeni Services (KMS)

Mr. Madden asked the Paymaster General if his Department received any application, since 1979, for a work permit to permit a person to undertake employment in the United Kingdom on behalf of a security company called Keeni Meeni Services (KMS).

Mr. Lang: My Department has no record of any such application.

Gas Explosion (Glasgow)

Dr. Twinn asked the Paymaster General when the report of the Health and Safety Executive into the gas explosion in Glasgow, on 29 November 1985, will be published.

Mr. Trippier: The report is being published today. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Non-advanced Further Education

Mr. Radice asked the Paymaster General what proportion of rate support grant funding transferred from local education authorities to the Manpower Services Commission for non-advanced further education in 1986-87 will not be reallocated directly to local education authorities.

Mr. Trippier: Of the £110 million being transferred to the Manpower Services Commission from rate support grant in 1986-87, £5 million will be held back to support change within the further education system.

Mr. Radice asked the paymaster General which local education authorities will have non-advanced further education allocations in 1986-87 reduced by the Manpower Services Commission regional directors; and by what amounts.

Mr. Trippier: None.

Mr. Freud asked the Paymaster General whether he will list in the Official Report for each local education authority in England (a) the sum received for technical and vocational education initiative projects, (b) the sum received for technical and vocational education initiative projects expressed as a percentage of the education budget, (c) the number of pupils engaged on technical and vocational education initiative projects, (d) the number of such pupils expressed as a percentage of the total in secondary education, (e) the number of secondary schools involved in technical and vocational education initiatives, (f) the percentage of secondary schools involved in technical and vocational education initiative, and (g) the percentage of pupils in participating schools engaged in technical and vocational education initiative projects in each case (i) during the pilot scheme and (ii) under the proposed expansion of the scheme.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1986]: The table sets out the answers to the hon. Member's questions for each of the 60 local education authorities in England currently participating in the technical and vocational education initiative. With the exception of the first round projects which started in 1983 (asterisked in the table), participating projects have each been allocated up to a ceiling of £2 million spread over a period of six financial years to fund additional provision for four successive cohorts of about 250 pupils from 14 to 18 in a group of relevant institutions, both secondary schools and colleges. Pilot projects of this constant size inevitably bulk larger in relation to some local education authorities than others, given authorities' varying size. The figures also reflect the different stages that authorities have reached with their projects. Thus comparisons between authorities must be made with caution.

The information requested about the ratio of pupils involved in TVEI to the overall numbers of each of the 337 schools and 118 colleges participating could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Local Education Authority (England)	Sum received by TVEI Projects in 1985-86	(2) expressed as a per cent. of estimated net education expenditure 1985-86	TVEI pupil numbers at September 1985	(4) expressed as a per cent. of LEA secondary school population (January 1985)	Number of schools participating in TVEI excluding FE Colleges	(6) expressed as a per cent. of total secondary schools per LEA as at January 1985

National Advisory Body (Planning Exercise)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has recently met the committee of polytechnic directors to discuss the National Advisory Body's planning exercise for 1987-88.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend attended the annual conference of the committee of directors of polytechnics on 15 April 1986. The planning exercise being undertaken for 1987-88 by the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education was among the subjects discussed.

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the salary at 1 April 1985, 1 November 1985, 1 April 1986 and 1 November 1986 for teachers (a) entering the profession as new graduates, (b) at the top of scale 1, (c) at the mid-point on scale 2, (d) at the bottom of scale 3, (e) at the top of scale 2, (f) at the top of scale 3 and (g) at the top of scale 4 and for heads, (h) of group 2 primary schools and (i) of group 12 secondary schools if the agreements of 24 January and 9 May 1986 were implemented; and, for each (a) to (i), what was the salary actually received on 30 January 1986.

Mr. Chris Patten: The table shows teachers' salaries at the points requested (i) at 1 April 1985, following the implementation of the agreement initially reached at ACAS on 24 January, (ii) at 1 April 1986 as they will be after the agreement reached in the Burnham committee on 9 May has been implemented and (iii) actually received as at 30 January 1986, ie the rates which came into force from 1 April 1984. There is no difference in teachers' salaries between 1 April 1985 and 1 November 1985; and the agreement reached on 9 May does not provide for any difference in salaries between 1 April 1986 and 1 November 1986.

3. Mid-point of scale 2 taken as point 6.
4. Head teachers assumed to be at salary maximum throughout.

Vocational and Academic Qualifications

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now institute a review of the relationship between vocational and academic qualifications in the over-16 age group, in the light of the conclusions of the De Ville report on that subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The report of the review group on vocational qualifications was submitted to Ministers on 23 April and published on 8 May. The Government are not yet ready to announce their conclusions on the report or on any aspect or implication of it. I can, however, assure the hon. Member that my right hon. Friend is aware of the importance of ensuring a clear relationship between all qualifications available to the post-16 age group for the purposes of progression to higher education and to employment.

Teacher Training

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what relative importance, was attached, in determining allocations for initial teacher training courses from 1987, to (a) Her Majesty's inspectors' reports, (b) Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education reports, (c) rates of employment of graduates,(d) links with other institutions, (e) geographical location and (f) Council for National Academic Awards reports and validation.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend considered advice from Her Majesty's inspectors before reaching his provisional decisions, along with the views of the validating bodies concerned, including the CNAA, as well as the views of the institutions themselves and of their governing bodies. He also took account of a wide range of other considerations including the rates of employment of graduates from those institutions, their relationship with other higher education and the geographical spread of provision. He did not receive advice from CATE on this matter. His provisional decisions are an overall judgment of how the available numbers can best be deployed to ensure the most effective provision of initial teacher training in the public sector as a whole.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to his Department in respect of the number of mature entrants to teacher training in each of the last five years; whether he is satisfied with the number; what proposals he has to increase the number; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The numbers of students aged 25 and over entering initial teacher training in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984 were 5,697, 5,620, 4,995, 4,489 and 4,192 respectively. My right hon. Friend recognises the value of prospective teachers having had previous employment, or experience of work with children or adolescents. In his recent provisional allocation of target intakes to the public sector he has taken particular account of proposals for courses designed to attract those with relevant experience of this sort.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what criteria he used, in relation to the requirements of inner cities and the ability of inner city teacher training institutions to satisfy the demands placed upon them, in fixing the provisional allocation of teacher training intakes; if he has any plans to increase the allocation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend took into account the geographical distribution of teacher training provision and the capacity of institutions to safeguard and expand the provision of courses utilising skills in ethnic minority languages. The provisional allocations will be reviewed in the light of any representations received by 27 June.

School-Industry Exchanges

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of exchanges currently operating between schools and industry; and what trend this represents in relation to previous years.

Mr. Chris Patten: Such information is not available centrally. The Government have often stressed the importance of the different forms of school-industry liaison and they hope that such liaison will expand, particularly as a result of the initiatives being taken in Industry Year.

Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to his Department in respect of the willingness of higher education institutions to admit students with vocational qualifications; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The Department does not possess detailed information about the admission policies and practices of individual higher education institutions. However, recent statistical investigation, supported by a project undertaken by the further education unit, suggests that the proportion of entrants to degree level courses holding qualifications such as those of the Business and Technician Education Council varies greatly between institutions and between subject areas, being significant in subjects such as engineering and very low in most others. Information is not however available which would indicate the number of unsuccessful aspirants to degree places who hold such qualifications.

The Government wish to encourage the route to degree status via BTEC and similar qualifications, and to this end have encouraged dialogue between BTEC, the Council for National Academic Awards and the Standing Conference on University Entrance to promote a freer flow of information about the value of such qualifications, to encourage degree awarding and providing institutions to consider their holders for entry, and to identify and rectify possible barriers. It is however ultimately for those institutions to decide which candidates are best qualified for, and able to benefit from, degree level study.

Public Sector Higher Education

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list the number of lecturers and the number of full-time equivalent students in public sector higher education in 1981 and 1986, stating the ratio in each year; and what analysis has been carried out of the productivity of this sector in these two years.

Mr. Walden: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. However the Department's monitoring survey of student-staff ratios in further education gives the following information:

Advance level work in further education establishments covered by the survey

	Academic year
	1980-81	1984-85
Full-time equivalent student number* (000)	174·9	265·9
Full-time equivalent staff number* (000)	20·2	24·7
Student-staff ratio†	8·7	10·8
Number of colleges covered by the survey	143	292
Total number of colleges in England	500	469

* Student and staff numbers do not represent total figures for England. The figures relate to number in the colleges covered by the survey.

† Student-staff ratios for 1980-81 and 1984-85 are not strictly comparable because of changes in the size of sample of colleges surveyed.

The Green Paper, "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s", published in May 1985, referred to the need to develop and use measures of performance in higher education, including the public sector, and gave an outline of the then present state of work on how reliable performance measures might be established. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State invited the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education, also in May 1985, to undertake a review of good management practice in the public sector, including of the application of performance measures. The NAB is currently engaged on that review, which it is intended should yield advice in time to assist decisions on the NAB's 1987-88 planning exercise.

Educational Initiatives (Voluntary Organisations)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals his Department is currently considering for involving voluntary organisations in educational initiatives in maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government much value the contribution made by the voluntary bodies to education in the maintained sector, which aids the diversity of provision; and will continue to consult them on all matters of common interest in education.

Research Contract

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to encourage the placing of research contract by industry at institutions of higher education.

Mr. Walden: As was stated in "The Development of Higher Education in to the 1990's" (Cmnd 9524), the Government consider that higher education needs to develop closer and better working with industry and commerce. In particular, business should be able to take advantage of what higher education has to offer through research, technology transfer, business start-up facilities and consultancy. We are doing what we can to encourage this.

The Further Education Act 1985 removed barriers to commercial exploitation of their work by local authority institutions of further and higher education. The grant allocations for 1986-87 announced by the University Grants Committee, and its intentions for subsequent years, reward universities' success in attracting research funds from outside sources. The Science and Engineering Research Council has also initiated several schemes to promote links between higher education and industry, including for teaching companies, and for co-operative grants and awards.

AIDS

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 246, when his Department expects to issue its definitive guidance on acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Dunn: Shortly.

Astronomy

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set up an inquiry into the funding, organisation and administration of British astronomy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: No. The responsibilities of the bodies responsible for British astronomy are clear and the discipline is in a healthy condition. The recent formation of the British National Space Centre will serve further to invigorate this and other areas.

Royal Greenwich Observatory

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to reject the recommendations of the Science and Engineering Research Council on the Royal Greenwich Observatory.

Mr. Walden: I understand that the Science and Engineering Research Council is not in a position to take a decision on its preferred site for the Royal Greenwich Observatory before its June meeting.

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will arrange to publish the Science and Engineering Research Council's report on the Royal Greenwich Observatory prepared by Sir John Kingman.

Mr. Walden: The report prepared by a working group under the chairmanship of Sir John Kingman was one of a series of internal documents prepared to assist the Science and Engineering Council in its deliberations on the possible future relocation of the Royal Greenwich Observatory. It would be inappropriate to publish such a document.

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details, by individual programme, of (a) research on positional astronomy, (b) work on laser ranging of artificial satellites and (c) Her Majesty's Nautical Almanac Office work carried out at the Royal Greenwich Observatory on his behalf; and what assessment he has made of the effects of the proposed dispersal of the observatory on these programmes.

Mr. Walden: The details requested for the specified programmes are as follows, together with the Science and Engineering Research Council's estimate of the effects of the proposed move of the Royal Greenwich Observatory on the programmes:—

(i) Research on positional astronomy at RGO: The observatory participates in four programmes concerned with the measurement of the positions and movement of stars and planets. These are:—

(a) The ESA astrometric satellite HIPPARCOS to be launched in 1988. It would be necessary to make special arrangements to protect the HIPPARCOS programme by relocating the team earlier than the main Observatory move;

(b) Carlsberg Automatic Meridan Circle, now in operation on La Palma, this would be unaffected by a move;

(c) the second Cape photographic catalogue now nearing completion, this would also be unaffected by a move;

(d) the Equatorical group of telescopes, which are currently in use on funded research programmes and are made available for university teaching and other support observations in positional astronomy. They cannot be relocated with the RGO and could be lost to scientific research.

(ii) Work on laser ranging on artificial satellites: The RGO operates at Herstmonceux on behalf of the Science and Engineering Research Council, the Natural Environment Research Council, the Ministry of Defence and Department of Trade and Industry, a satellite laser ranging system which is one of the few most effective ones in the world. It regularly measures the continually varying range to two SLR — dedicated satellites with a precision of about 4cm. The council is currently considering the implication of a move on the laser ranging work.

(iii) Her Majesty's Nautical Almanac Office: in collaboration with United States Naval Observatory produces various publications giving the position of planets, natural satellites and stars, for use by navigators, astronomers and surveyors. This programme would not be affected by relocation.

School Leavers, Leicestershire

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Leicester East, Official Report, 15 May, columns 511-2, what information he has on the percentage of school leavers in Leicestershire, obtaining one or more A-levels, five or more higher grade O-levels or CSE grade 1 passes, one or more higher grade O-level or CSE grade 1 passes, and no graded O-level or CSE results, in each year from 1965 to 1985.

Mr. Dunn: Data for Leicestershire for the years 1964-65 to 1967-68 are not available. The information for 1967-68 to 1984-85 is shown in the following table:

*School Leavers, Leicestershire

Academic Year	One or more A level pass	Percentage of leavers with 5 or more higher† grade passes at O level or CSE	1 or more higher grade passes at O level or CSE*	No graded result at O level or CSE

1983-84	16·6	22·8	50·5	9·7
1984-85	16·8	23·0	50·8	9·5

Notes:

* For the years prior to 1973-74, the figures are derived from the combined totals of the former Leicester county borough and Leicestershire local education authorities.

† From 1974-75 O level grades A-C, CSE grade 1. Prior to 1974-75 O level examinations were graded pass or fail.

‡ The raising of the school leaving age in 1973 affected the total number of school leavers which was unusually low. Percentages are therefore unrepresentative and have been omitted.

Education Act 1981

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the Government have any plans to publish joint Department of Education and Science/Department of Health and Social Security guidance in relation to the completion of statements under the Education Act 1981, section 5; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Guidance is given in a joint circular (Department of Education and Science No. 1/83, Department of Health and Social Security HC(83)3/LAC(83)2) which is available in the Library. My right hon. Friends will alter or add to that guidance as necessary.

East Dorset

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is satisfied with the provision of educational facilities in the maintained sector in east Dorset; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten Broadly, yes. Although there are clearly some problems, our general impression is one of effective schools and teachers, supported by a coherent overall curricular policy, to which schools are responding well. Some encouraging examples of curricular innovation and inter-school collaboration are to be found there, some of these funded directly by central Government. As to the problems, my right hon. Friend recognises that policies of expenditure constraint over a number of years, in which education must play its part, have required difficult decisions by and within all local education authorities, including those which, like Dorset, have shown their willingness to make efficiency savings in line with the views of the Government.

Data Protection

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department correctly completed and submitted its applications for data protection registration on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten Yes. The Department has submitted, within the required time, applications in respect of 20 separate operations involving the collection of data about individuals.

Schools (Anti-drug Campaign)

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about the types of television programme material being used so far by schools as part of the anti-drug abuse campaign promoted by the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Dunn The Department of Education and Science does not have details about the use by schools of the BBC drugs education materials. However I understand that much interest has been shown by schools in the 60-minute "Drugwatch" educational video.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to make available the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on the effects of local authority expenditure policies on the education service in England in 1985.

Mr. Chris Patten: The HMI report on the observed effects of local authority expenditure policies on the education service in England in the autumn of 1985 was published yesterday. Copies have been placed in the Vote Office and my right hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-East (Sir K. Joseph) wrote to all hon. Members for English constituencies. This is the sixth report to be published since this Government decided that HMI's findings should be made generally available and, like its predecessors, it should be essential reading for all concerned with the provision of education.

Llandough Hospital (Pneumoconiosis Research Unit)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science where research work previously done at the pneumoconiosis research unit at Llandough hospital is now being done since the closure of that unit.

Mr. Walden [pursuant to his reply, 16 May 1986, c. 569]: I understand from the Medical Research Council that research work initiated at its pneumoconiosis unit at Llandough hospital is now continuing at the following sites:

MRC occupational lung diseases team, Llandough hospital
MRC epidemiology unit, Cardiff
MRC toxicology unit, Carshalton
The Welsh school of pharmacy, University of Wales Institute of Science and Technology.
Sully hospital, Penarth.

SCOTLAND

Local Government Finance

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he has any plans to bring forward proposals to change the basis of current expenditure controls on local authorities in Scotland;

(2) whether he intends to instigate a review of the present basis of current expenditure controls on local authorities in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: In January the Government published the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government: Proposals for Change" (Cmnd. 9714). It reviews the present system of local government finance in Great Britain and in chapter 8 makes proposals for reform of the system in Scotland. An important element of the proposals is the strengthening of local accountability for determining local expenditure priorities. It is envisaged that there will be no continuing need for general grant penalties.

Drinking Water (Lead)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will report on progress with the Government's application to the European Commission for a five-year delay in meeting the terms of Council directive 80/778/EEC relating to the content of lead in drinking water in Scotland;

(2) on what date the Government applied to the European Commission for a five-year delay in implementing the tems of the Council directive 80/778/EEC relating to lead contamination of drinking water throughout Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: The Government applied for the delay in respect of the lead content in drinking water in Scotland on 7 August 1985. The Commission has not so far conveyed a decision on the application, but has asked for further details.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on which date the Scottish Office first asked local authorities for information on lead levels in drinking water in individual supply areas.

Mr. Ancram: In 1975, the Scottish Development Department and the other United Kingdom environment departments organised a survey by local authorities of lead levels in a sample of households. A United Kingdom expert advisory group prepared a report in 1980 which set out a standard method for identifying areas which required detailed investigation. In September 1983 the Scottish Development Department arranged for all Scottish water authorities to undertake a programme of lead identification studies. Results have been obtained from all but one of the authorities, and are under consideration.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what resources of financing and manpower were devoted between July 1980 and July 1985 towards ensuring that the terms of Council directive 80/778/EEC concerning the quality of water intended for human consumption would be met throughout Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: This information is not held centrally. The directive is implemented by the water authorities which decide their own priorities within their individual financial allocations.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline under which article and on what basis the Government have applied to the European Commission for a derogation in respect of the lead content of drinking water in Scotland under Council directive 80/778/EEC.

Mr. Ancram: The application for a delay in complying with the directive in respect of lead was made under article 20 of the directive. The initial application covered the whole of Scotland. Since then the Commission has asked for more precise descriptions of the geographical areas affected and the Government will make a fresh application relating only to those areas where remedial action on lead is required, as indicated by the results of lead identification surveys carried out by Scottish water authorities.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many man days per year his officials in the Scottish Development Department, or other Departments, devote to hazardous waste inspectorate responsibilities.

Mr. Ancram: In the year 1985-86 approximately 470 man-days were spent on these duties by officers of the Scottish Development Department.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will report on the current position regarding the drawing up by waste disposal authorities of draft waste disposal plans; if he will outline which district councils have yet to finalise their arrangements; and what steps he intends to take to ensure that this is accomplished without delay.

Mr. Ancram: Section 2 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974, which come into effect on 1 September 1978, requires waste disposal authorities (district and islands area councils) to prepare waste disposal plans for their areas, and to send copies to the Secretary of State. No timetable is specified in the legislation, but, with the support of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the waste disposal authorities were encouraged to complete their plans by 31 December 1985. To date 35 plans have been received and 13 have been submitted in draft form.

Plans are awaited from the following eight authorities:

Banff and Buchan
Dundee
Dunfermline
East Lothian
Midlothian
Renfrew
West Lothian
Western Isles

These authorities are being asked to submit their remaining plans as soon as possible.

River Quality Surveys

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline the work being undertaken by his officials in connection with river quality surveys announced by the Department of the Environment in 1985, and the financial resources and manpower which are being devoted to this project.

Mr. Ancram In parallel with similar work in England and Wales, my officials are collecting information from the seven river purification boards in Scotland on the quality of rivers and estuaries in their areas. Later this year we will publish the fourth report since 1968 in the Scottish series of river quality surveys. A sum of £40,000, including manpower of one man-year, has been allocated to the project.

Nature Conservation

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will report progress on consultations with the Countryside Commission for Scotland and the Nature Conservancy Council over the selection and setting up of environmentally sensitive areas under the Agriculture Bill.

Mr. John MacKay: Consultations are almost complete and a report will be made shortly to my right hon. and learned Friend.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will consider producing an annual publication for Scotland of the document "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" produced for England and Wales by the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Ancram: Such a publication has not so far been felt necessary mainly because information is available in existing publications.

In particular, the "Scottish Abstract of Statistics", published annually, contains Scottish environmental data, while data on river water quality are published by the Scottish Development Department at approximately five-year intervals. In addition, in 1984, Her Majesty's Industrial Pollution Inspectorate published two statistical bulletins containing details of all radioactive waste disposals from the Scottish nuclear establishments and the monitoring undertaken in respect of them; subsequent information on disposals was published in a further bulletin in February 1986, and it is intended to publish further monitoring results shortly. These bulletins include all the relevant information relating to Scotland which is provided on a United Kingdom basis in the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics."

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department will be participating in the scheme to set aside funds for the conservation of environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland announced in January a short list of areas to be considered for designation in Scotland. My right hon. and learned Friend intends to designate at least one of these areas after the Agriculture Bill receives the Royal Assent.

North Sea (Conference)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of his officials or appointees are members of the international technical working group established in preparation for the international conference on the environmental protection of the North sea to be hosted by the United Kingdom in November 1987.

Mr. Ancram: One senior Scottish Office official is a member of the United Kingdom delegation to the scientific and technical working group set up to prepare for the international North sea conference 1987. Appointments will be made to sub-groups as necessary.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline what role his Department will play in preparation for promotion of and participation in the international conference on the environmental protection of the North sea, to be hosted by the United Kingdom in November 1987.

Mr. Ancram: The Scottish Office is already participating fully in the preparations for the international North sea conference 1987. The Department was represented at the international meeting of senior officials (IMSO) in London last November and will participate in the scientific and technical working group, the next meeting of which is to be held in Aberdeen in June. Consideration is also being given to holding the final IMSO in Edinburgh in September 1987 in preparation for the main conference in November.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance is currently provided by Departments of the Scottish Office to local authorities on their role in nature conservation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The national planning guidelines issued by the Scottish Development Department in 1981 require planning authorities to consider, in consultation with the Nature Conservancy Council, whether their land use planning and development policies are compatible with nature conservation. Further guidance is provided in an associated land use summary sheet on nature conservation and in planning guidelines dealing with specific subjects including coastal planning, aggregate working and skiing developments. Circulars have been issued to local authorities on the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, the Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Act 1985 and the Wildlife and Countryside (Service of Notices) Act 1985. The question of whether further guidance is needed at the present time is currently under review.

Soil Analysis

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the projected cost of (a) staff transfers from Aberdeen to Dundee and (b) new buildings and equipment in Dundee, for work on arable soil fertility;

(2) what is the estimated cost of transferring soil analysis, the facility advisory work, and the spectrochemical analysis from the Macaulay to the Scottish colleges of agriculture; and what is the cost of transporting samples to Edinburgh from all areas of Scotland north of Montrose.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is not yet available. A steering group is currently considering a number of practical questions arising from the strategy document on agricultural R and D which was published by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland last December. The steering group will report to my right hon. and learned Friend as soon as possible.

Royal Scottish National Hospital, Larbert

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his answer of 6 May, Official Report, column 14, if he will arrange for the full report of the Mental Welfare Commission for Scotland on its visit to the Royal Scottish National hospital at Larbert to be published.

Mr. John MacKay: No. The Mental Welfare Commission for Scotland is an independent statutory body and my right hon. and learned Friend has no locus to arrange publication of its internal reports. The only report which the Commission is required to publish is its annual report and that for 1985 will, I understand, deal with conditions at the Royal Scottish National Hospital. It will also acknowledge recent improvements at the hospital.

Youth Activities (Grants)

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on expenditure by regional authorities (a) in the last year for which figures are available and (b) in 1982-83 on training of part-time youth leaders in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: This information is not centrally available.

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he received the urban aid application C/204/86 from Strathclyde regional council to assist the Wanderers parents group in Milton, Glasgow, in furthering youth activities with parental back-up; and when he expects to decide on the grant application.

Mr. Ancram: The Scottish Development Department received this application in December 1985 as part of a package submitted by Strathclyde regional council for urban programme support in 1986-87. Further information was sought from the council in March to clarify the project's eligibility. This was received on 21 May. A decision will now be taken on the application as quickly as possible.

Data Protection

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department correctly completed and submitted its applications for data protection registration on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Yes. Sixty-four applications were submitted. To date the registrar has not raised any questions on them.

Dwellings (Fire Escape)

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish guidance on means of escape from fire in houses in multiple occupation in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: A draft version of a guide setting out an advisory standard for means of escape from fire in certain houses in multiple occupation in Scotland has been prepared by the Scottish Home and Health Department. The guide also covers related fire safety measures and will assist the process of consultation between housing and fire authorities which is required under housing legislation. Copies of the draft guide, on which written comments are invited by Friday 4 July 1986, are being sent to the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and to other interested bodies; copies have also been placed in the Library of the House. Subject to the outcome of the consultation exercise, I hope to be able to publish the final version of the guide during 1986.

WALES

Radiation Levels

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the highest levels of radioactivity recorded in milk samples in south-west Wales; on what days such levels were recorded in the time period since the nuclear reactor disaster at Chernobyl; and how these levels compared with those recorded prior to this incident.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The most radiologically significant radionuclides found in samples taken since the Chernobyl nuclear accident have been iodine 131 and caesium 137. In south-west Wales iodine 131 was at its highest at 18 becquerels/litre in a sample taken from milk in Haverfordwest on 5 May 1986. Caesium 137 was at its highest at 23 becquerels/litre in a sample taken from the same source on 11 May 1986. These levels are well below the emergency reference levels for milk of 2,000 becquerels/litre and 3,600 becquerels/litre respectively. Regular monitoring near Carmarthen prior to the incident revealed background levels for caesium 137 of 0·1 becquerels/litre but no detectable levels of iodine 131.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what were the highest levels of radioactivity recorded in samples of rainwater collected in south-west Wales; when such levels were recorded following the Chernobyl disaster; and how such levels compared with those recorded prior to the incident.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The Atomic Energy Research Establishment, Harwell has assessed the level of radioactivity in rainwater at its monitoring point in Milford Haven to be approximately 5·6 becquerels per litre of iodine 131 on 3 May. Iodine 131 is not mormally found in rainfall. Caesium 137 in samples taken from rainfall at Milford Haven following the Chenobyl incident was below the level of detection as it has been for at least the last three years.

Radiation (Monitoring)

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales where are the nearest radiation monitoring stations to south-west Wales which monitor the levels of radioactivity in milk, rainwater and general background.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Levels of radioactivity in milk are routinely sampled near Carmarthen. However, following the Chernobyl incident, monitoring for radioactive contamination in milk was undertaken throughout Wales on a daily basis. In south-west Wales samples were taken from creameries at Llangadog, Felinfach and Whitland and from individual farms at Aberystwyth, Carmarthen and Brawdy. Rainwater is sampled at Milford Haven. Measurement of the natural gamma ray background has been undertaken by NRPB in virtualy every accessible 10 km square in south-west Wales as throughout Great Britain.

Health Expenditure, Cardiff

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been spent in the last five years, on hospital equipment appertaining to patients' needs; what type of equipment has been purchased over the past five years in Cardiff and Cardiff, West in particular; how it compares with the years 1975 to 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total expenditure on the National Health Service in Cardiff and Cardiff, West in particular, in each year since 1979 and up to the most recently available data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: This information is not available in the form requested. However the recurrent allocations to South Glamorgan health authority, at cash prices, have been as follows:

	£ million
1978-79	57·841
1979-80	69·542
1980-81	88·903
1981-82	98·302
1982-83	107·064
1983-84	113·222
1984-85	119·490
1985-86	126·282
1986-87	*134·994

Hospital Closures, Cardiff

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy not to approve the closure of any hospitals in Cardiff, West; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The planning and management of Health Service facilities in Cardiff is the responsibility of the South Glamorgan health authority. If it decides to implement proposals for the closure or change of use of a hospital, it must first embark on public consultation. If, as a result of that, there is unresolved local opposition to a proposal to close or change the use of a hospital the authority must submit its proposals to the Secretary of State for his consideration.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing for November 1985 and for November of each of the previous six years, the number of unemployed persons registered at the Pwllheli local employment office and the number of job vacancies registered during each of those months at that office.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The requirement that unemployed people should register at a jobcentre was removed in October 1982. Information that distinguishes the number of unemployed registrants after that date is not available. The following is the available information.

Pwllheli Jobcentre

	Unemployed Registrants	Unfilled Vacancies

Dwyfor District Council

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report the details of every meeting which Ministers in his Department have had with officers of Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor since May 1979, indicating the dates of such meetings, the location and the matters under discussion.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Estuarial Barrage (Cardiff)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the feasibility studies into a Cardiff estuarial barrage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The results of the preliminary studies into the feasibility of building a barrage across the Cardiff harbour mouth and of the investment potential in the south Cardiff area will be available shortly. I shall make known my initial reaction to those studies as soon as possible thereafter.

Chess Union

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what financial assistance is available from the Welsh Office for the Welsh Chess Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Department makes a grant to the Welsh Chess Union towards the costs of international travel for competitions. Grant for 1986-87 will be up to £4,738.

Education Expenditure

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of education expenditure in Wales is spent on non-mandatory youth services; and what were the figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In 1984-85, the latest year for which outturn information is available, expenditure incurred by the Department and by local education authorities on the youth service represented just under 1 per cent. of total expenditure on education in Wales (excluding expenditure on universities and on mandatory student awards). This percentage has been unchanged in each year since 1979-80.

GCSE (Syllabuses)

Mr. John Morris asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many syllabuses for the new general examination have been translated into Welsh.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The examination department of the Welsh joint education committee has this task in hand.

NHS (Gwynedd)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Offical Report, the details of hospital and health care facilities, the number of doctors and nurses, the number of hospital beds and specialist facilities provided by the National Health Service in Gwynedd (a) in 1979 and (b) at the present time.

Mr. Mark Robinson: National Health Service hospitals in Gwynedd, and their numbers of allocated beds, are as folls:—

Additionally, outpatient facilities were provided, in 1979 and 1985, at ophthalmic clinics (in Anglesey, Caernarfon and Meirionnydd), a gynaecology clinic (Porthmadog), ante-natal clinics (at several locations), at Pwllheli health centre, Bala and Maes Derw. In 1985, but not in 1979, out patient clinics were also held at Madyn road (Amlwch), St. David's priory (Holyhead) and at Criccieth and Llanfair P G health centre. The numbers of medical, dental and nursing staff employed by the Gwynedd health authority are given in the table.

Secondary Education, Gwynedd

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the number of teachers, pupils, expenditure per pupil and the average size of class in secondary schools in Gwynedd (a) in 1979 and (b) at the present time.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The latest available information is as follows:

Data Protection

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether his Department correctly completed and submitted its applications for data protection registration on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: My Department's applications, required under the provisions of the Data Protection Act, were submitted to the office of the Data Protection registrar within the time allowed.

Haemophiliacs (Counselling Centres)

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much money his Department makes available to centres run by Welsh health authorities at which haemophiliacs are treated and supported in counselling centres.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The Department has given £20,000 in the current financial year to South Glamorgan health authority towards the cost of counselling at the haemophilia reference centre at the University Hospital of Wales in Cardiff. South Glamorgan health authority has asked the Department to designate the reference centre as a regional service. If this application is approved it will in future be funded centrally.

In-vitro Fertilisation

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals for the establishment of National Health Service facilities in Wales for the provision of in-vitro fertilisation.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Funds have been made available by the Department to South Glamorgan health authority for the provision of facilities at the University Hospital of Wales which will initiate a programme for in-vitro fertilisation within the National Health Service in Wales.

Residential Homes

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are at present resident in local authority homes now as compared with 1979; and what is the present average occupancy of such residences.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The latest available information relates to 31 March 1985 and is given in the following table along with comparable information for 1979.

Local authority residential homes

	31 March 1979		31 March 1985
Home for the	Number of residents	Per cent. occupancy	Number of residents	Per cent. occupancy
Elderly, physically handicapped and blind	7,381	97	7,473	95
Mentally ill	293	89	338	75
Mentally handicapped	447	83	703	88

Mental Patients (Community Care)

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients in care for five years or more have been discharged into the community during the last year for which figures are available from National Health Service hospitals caring for mental illness and mental handicap patients.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Forty persons, who had previously been resident in an institution for five years or more, were discharged from psychiatric hospitals and units to reside in the community during 1984, the last year for which information is available.

Health Authorities (Land Disposal)

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the income to the Health Service in Wales from the sale of land and properties owned by the health authorities during the last year for which information is available.

Mr. Mark Robinson: For 1985-86 income was £1,575,985.

Personal Social Services

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the amount spent in Wales per head on personal social services in the last year for which figures are available; and how such figures compare with England in general and with each of the English regions.

Mr. Mark Robinson: In 1983-84, the latest year for which outturn information is available, expenditure in Wales and England on personal social services was £42·73 and £39·49 per head respectively. I have arranged for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services, to supply the hon. Member with the information requested on personal social services expenditure in each of the English regions.

YTS (Cardiff)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales, how many people have completed YTS schemes in (a) Cardiff and (b) Cardiff West, since the scheme's inception; how many persons completing the scheme have found full-time or part-time employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1986, c. 538-39]: Owing to an administrative error an incorrect figure for YTS entrants was given. The correct information is now as follows: The information as requested is not available. Available information relates to the counties of south and Mid Glamorgan where, since the inception of YTS in April 1983, there have been 23,712 entrants. The most recent Manpower Services Commission 100 per cent. follow-up survey showed that 46 per cent. of those leaving YTS in this area between April and November 1985, found full-time or part-time employment.

Nuclear Power Stations, Gwynedd

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now ensure that emergency procedure instructions indicating what local residents should do in the case of major nuclear accident at either Trawsfynydd or Wylfa nuclear power stations in Gwynedd, be issued to every household within 30 miles of either nuclear power station.

Mr. Mark Robinson [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 39]: Present plans are as set out in the Health and Safety Executive's publication "Emergency plans for civil and nuclear installations". Responsibility for preparing these plans rests with the stations concerned and copies are held by the local authorities and the emergency services. The plans are regularly reviewed and tested by the CEGB under the terms of the licence issued by the nuclear installations inspectorate.

Radiation Monitoring

Mr. Dafydd Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report those locations, institutions or facilities in Wales which have a capability of measuring the incidence of strontium 90 and of plutonium 239; and from which of these his Department has obtained information on the incidence of these isotopes following the Chernobyl nuclear accident.

Mr. Mark Robinson [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 39]: Testing for strontium 90 and plutonium 239 at environmental levels is an extremely specialised procedure and I am not aware of any establishment in Wales which currently have the capability of undertaking such measurement. Samples from Wales collected by the CEGB are tested at the Board's central research laboratory.

ENVIRONMENT

Windscale Fire (1957)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what types and levels of radioisotope, along with their chemical and biological half-lives, were emitted as a result of the 1957 Windscale fire; and how many people are expected to die or have died of cancer as a result.

Mr. Waldegrave: Full details are given in a report by the National Radiological Protection Board under the title

"An assessment of the radiological impact of the Windscale reactor fire, 1957" November 1982 and "Addendum to report R.135" September 1983. Copies of these will be placed in the Library of the House.

Urban Renewal

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 359-60, he will set out the categories of detailed information which will be included in the reports to be published of agreed schemes submitted to his Department's urban renewal unit for additional housing investment programme resources; and if he will give further details of schemes submitted but not approved.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answers of 20 February [Vol. 92, columns 340-41], 12 March [Vol. 93, column 464], 13 March [Vol. 93, columns 560-61], 26 March [Vol. 94, columns 500-2], 24 April [Vol. 96, columns 239-40], 2 May [Vol. 96, columns 507-9], and my right hon. Friend's answer of 16 May [Vol. 97, columns 592-93] which gave detailed information about the schemes which we have already approved. Similar information will be given about further schemes as they are approved.

Meanwhile, as stated in my answer of 12 May [Vol. 97, columns 359-60], the details of such schemes remain subject to change. None has yet been rejected outright.

Parish, Town and Community Councils

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 100 parish and town councils with the largest rate receipts in 1986-87, showing also their budgeted current expenditure for 1986-87.

Mrs. Rumbold: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Waste Disposal

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he has commissioned on sulphate attack on concrete and concrete cancer; what is the life expectancy of concrete linings in near-surface nuclear waste dumps; and how long metal drums containing solid low-level nuclear waste take to decay.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department supports a long-term research programme at the Building Research Establishment on sulphate attack on concrete. Results of the first five years' exposure of concrete specimens are summarised in:

> Harrison and Peychenne. Sulphate resistance of buried concrete: second interim report on long term investigations at Northwick Park. BRE, HMSO, 1981.

Work is now being done on concrete specimens which have been exposed for 15 years, and further work will be carried out in due course on specimens after 25 years' exposure.

BRE's current recommendations for producing concrete resistant to sulphate attack are given in BRE Digest 250 "Concrete in sulphate bearing soils and groundwaters" (revised 1984) and are incorporated in the recent British Standard on structural concrete BS8110, 1985, part I, table 6.1.

The life expectancy of concrete linings in nuclear waste repositories would depend on many factors including the composition of both concrete and groundwater, and the method of placement. The subject is discussed in Harwell report No. 11465 "An assessment of long-term durability of concrete in radioactive waste repositories".

My Department and NIREX are jointly funding work on the specification of a waste drum with a life expectancy of 300-500 years. Results so far available suggest that this life expectancy should be achieved with thin-walled stainless steel or thick-walled carbon steel drums.

Housing Defects Act

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the types of houses for which repair schemes are currently available under the Housing Defects Act.

Sir George Young: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend, the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction, on Tuesday May 20 to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) at column 136.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of houses which were demolished or otherwise became uninhabitable in the course of the last year; and as to the number of houses, previously uninhabitable, which became habitable in the course of the year.

Sir George Young: The available information is from English authorities' returns for the financial year 1984-85. After allowing for missing figures, it is estimated under slum clearance powers 2,600 dwellings were closed and 8,100 dwellings were demolished, of which 900 had been previously closed. A further 15,700 dwellings were demolished or lost through, for example, destruction by fire or flood. An estimated 8,800 dwellings which would otherwise have been unfit, were brought up to standard following formal or informal action by local authorities. Information is not available about dwellings made habitable as a result of other forms of action by owners.

Housing

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the total new housing starts in England and Wales in each of the years since 1970.

Sir George Young: The figures for England from 1976 to 1985 appear in table 2 of my Department's monthly housing statistics press notice issued on 2 May and figures for the earlier years appear in table 72(a) of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1970-1980"; copies are in the Library. For information on housebuilding in Wales, I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received from the Audit Commission concerning the rate of increase of the cost of bringing up to standard the housing stock in the United Kingdom.

Sir George Young: The Audit Commission has given an estimate, in its response to my Department's consultations on systems of local authority capital expenditure control, that the backlog of maintenance work needed to the local authority housing stock in England and Wales might be growing at £750 million a year. I understand that this estimate is based on a theoretical model relating the age of the stock to the lives of building components, rather than on direct observations. Further information will be available in the commission's forthcoming report on local authority housing maintenance.

The commission has made no estimates concerning the private sector stock.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will estimate the total cost of bringing up to standard all housing in (a) the private sector and (b) the public sector.

Sir George Young: Local authorities estimated, in my Department's recent stock condition inquiry, that they needed to spend some £18·8 billion on repairs and improvements to their own housing stock. The 1986 English house condition survey will provide an independent estimate of the condition of the stock as a whole.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the total number of houses that have been in need of (a) some repair, (b) substantial repair or have been (c) unfit for habitation in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and what is each of these figures as a percentage of the total housing stock in each of those years.

Sir George Young: Estimates from the 1976 and 1981 English house condition surveys are as follows:

	1976		1981
	Thousands	Per cent. of stock	Thousands	Per cent. of stock
Dwellings in serious disrepair* and/or unfit	1,557	9·1	1,690	9·4
of which:
in serious disrepair*	859	5·0	1,049	5·8
unfit	1,162	6·8	1,116	6·2

* requiring repairs costing £7,000 or more at 1981 prices.

In 1981 an estimated 3·9 million dwellings (21·7 per cent.) needed repairs of £2,500 or more; a corresponding figure for 1976 is not available.

New Towns

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will produce a table in the Official Report listing all the new towns in England and Wales and the district or borough and county councils within whose boundaries each new town lies or partly lies.

Mr. Tracey: For the new towns in England which still have development corporations the information requested is as follows:

New Town	District or Borough Council	County Council
Aycliffe	Sedgefield	Durham
Milton Keynes	Milton Keynes	Buckinghamshire
Peterborough	Peterborough	Cambridgeshire
Peterlee	Easington	Durham
Runcorn	Halton	Cheshire
Telford	Wrekin	Shropshire
Warrington	Warrington	Cheshire
Washington	Sunderland	—

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is responsible for new towns in Wales.

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will produce a table in the Official Report of all the new towns in England and Wales stating, for each, the start date and the latest winding-up date.

Mr. Tracey: For the new towns in England which still have development corporations the designation dates were as follows:

New Towns	Designation dates
Aycliffe and Peterlee	19 April 1947 } combined 10 March 1948 } 1 July 1985
Washington	24 July 1964
Milton Keynes	23 January 1967
Peterborough	21 July 1967
Telford	Designated as Dawley new town—16 January 1963 and subsequently extended
Warrington and Runcorn	26 April 1968 } combined 10 April 1964 } 1 April 1981

My right hon. Friend, the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Jenkin), announced on 21 March 1985 that the lives of the development corporations in Aycliffe and Peterlee and in Washington were to be extended until 31 March 1988. In 1981, my right hon. Friend, the Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine) announced that the development corporations for the other English new towns — Milton Keynes, Peterborough, Telford and Warrington and Runcorn would be wound up in the late 1980s. Further announcements on the wind-up dates for these corporations will be made shortly.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is responsible for new towns in Wales.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimated proportion of the low-level nuclear waste produced up to the year 2030 will come from (a) hospitals and laboratories, (b) nuclear power plants and (c) reprocessing.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer this question shortly.

Letchworth Garden City

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the effect of section 262 of the Local Government Act 1972 on the operation after 1986 of the Letchworth Garden City corporation.

Mr. Tracey: Section 262 of the Local Government Act 1972 provides that local Acts applying to non-metropolitan areas cease to have effect at the end of this year unless re-enacted or exempted. An order under section 262 will shortly be laid before Parliament exempting from repeal a number of local statutory provisions including all provisions of the Letchworth Garden City Corporation Act 1962, other than those which are spent by the passage of time. This order will allow the corporation to continue unchanged its statutory task of managing and developing the undertaking of the former Garden City company.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he can now estimate the staff savings from the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The savings at present come about largely from the reduction in posts in the structure. The estimated number of claims for compensation for redundancy received by residuary bodies from ex-GLC or MCC employees is as follows:

	Number
London	3,000
Greater Manchester	640
Merseyside	358
South Yorkshire	521
Tyne and Wear	160
West Midlands	531
West Yorkshire	950
Total MCCs	3,160
Grand Total	6,160

These figures are broadly in line with the Government's estimate in November 1984 that about 7,000 posts could eventually be saved from abolition. It does not mean that 6,160 people have been made redundant against their will. The great majority have been ready to go, generally by taking early retirement, and in some areas posts have been available for all employees of the outgoing authorities who wanted them.

The Government's earlier estimate was based on savings arising from rationalisation of the structure of local government, leaving aside any savings from changes of policy by the successor authorities. Initial redundancies will not be the same as the number of posts saved because, for example, staff left the GLC and MCCs in anticipation of abolition and many of the jobs in residuary bodies will disappear in due course.

Residuary bodies are well advanced in making redundancy compensation payments to those eligible. It has been our aim all along that the number of posts should be reduced without making large numbers of people redundant against their will. I believe we have achieved both aims.

Derelict Land Grants

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department disbursed in derelict land grants in the years 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85; and what proportion of that was given each year to companies who intended to build large retail stores.

Sir George Young: Derelict land grant paid by my Department for the years 1981-82 to 1984-85 is set out below, showing separately the amounts paid to local authorities and those paid direct to others including the private sector. No grant was paid to reclaim land for large retail store development.

	Local Authorities	Others	£ million Total
1981-82	29·05	0·02	29·07
1982-83	34·50	0·76	35·26
1983-84	65·90	1·74	67·64
1984-85	64·55	3·29	67·84

Radiation

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why dosage emergency reference levels differ, namely, for iodine-131 in milk, by as much as a factor of four in the countries of western Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1986]: The emergency reference levels applied in the United Kingdom are recommended by the National Radiological Protection Board and are consistent with the international recommendations. Different levels may have been adopted in other countries but we have no information about the methods of calculation employed.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the consultants used and consultancy fees paid by the London Docklands Development Corporation in the financial year 1985-86.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 9 May 1986, c. 301]: LDDC policy is to keep its core of permanent staff as small as possible and to supplement their work with external private sector skills wherever necessary. The following consultants were used by LDDC during 1985-86.

These consultants have undertaken assignments ranging from a few hundred to several hundred thousand pounds. It would breach commercial confidentiality to give the fees paid to each consultant, but the corporation estimates that within its total programme some £5·6 million has been paid to consultants for specific projects. About £2·3 million has been paid to consultants for legal, financial, computing and other services.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Births and Deaths (Statistics)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in the years 1983 and 1984 what was (a) the number of live births, and the live birth rate, (b) the number of perinatal deaths and the perinatal mortality rate, (c) the number of infant deaths and the infant mortality rate and (d) the perinatal and infant mortality rates by district council area in Northern Ireland for the years 1983 and 1984, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Northern Ireland

	1983	1984
(a) Live births
Number	27,255	27,693
Rate per 1,000 population	17·3	17·5

The figures reflect a continuing overall downward trend in rates for perinatal and infant deaths in Northern Ireland.

Construction (Ballyhalbert)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at what stage is the proposed Northern Ireland Housing Executive scheme for new homes at Ballyhalbert, County Down; when it is planned to commence work on sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that, following a review of priorities, the proposed scheme for five new houses in Ballyhalbert, which had been planned to start in December 1985, has been rescheduled to 1987-88.

Rathlin Island

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what considerations govern the possible connection of Rathlin island to the electricity main grid; and whether there are presently any plans for action.

Dr. Boyson: The Northern Ireland electricity service last carried out a study of the provision of a mains supply of electricity on Rathlin island in 1983 and concluded that neither of the two main options considered could be economically justified at that time. This is a matter which is kept under regular review and is currently being reassessed.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on Government action in relation to the development of Rathlin island, giving details of investments over the past six years and all planned investment or schemes under consideration.

Mr. Needham: Set out are details of past and proposed action and expenditure on Rathlin island undertaken by Northern Ireland Departments.

Department of Environment

1. Roads

The DOE(NI) Road Service has spent £155,000 on the improvement and maintenance of the roads on Rathlin island over the past six years. No significant reconstruction works are under consideration at present.

2. Housing

In 1983 the Northern Ireland Housing Executive completed an improvement scheme on the two cottages remaining in its ownership on the island at a cost of £49,000. In addition, during the past six years renovation grants totalling almost £42,000 have been paid in respect of eight dwellings and applications for grants totalling £17,900 in respect of three dwellings are under consideration.

3. Water Supplies and Sewerage

The Water Service of the DOE(NI) has spent £335,000 since 1983 on the provision of a public water supply. A scheme to construct a public sewer at Church Bay is programmed for 1989-90 at a cost of £20,000.

4. Conservation

In association with the Commissioner of Irish Lights the DOE(NI) provided Nature Reserve Warden accommodation at a cost of £11,500. It is proposed to spend approximately £6,000 in 1986-87 on fencing and associated works on Kebble National Nature Reserve.

Department of Economic Development

5. Harbours

(i) The Department of Economic Development provided £187,367 in grant assistance towards the cost of major improvements to the harbour at Church Bay, Rathlin.

(ii) The island has benefited from grant assistance of £843,342 under the Amenity Harbour Grant Scheme provided by the Department for the development of Ballycastle Harbour.

Department of Education

6. Schools

The Department has given grant aid for capital works at the island's Primary School totalling approximately £14,157 during the last two financial years. There are no planned investments or schemes under consideration.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give consideration to the granting of boarding allowances to children from Rathlin island who have to attend school on the mainland.

Dr. Mawhinney: Boarding allowances are available to children from Rathlin island who are non-fee-paying pupils at grammar schools and the North-Eastern education and library board may provide board and lodging otherwise than at school for those who attend other schools on the mainland.

Border Security

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary has discussed with the Commissioner of the Garda Siochana the effect on border security of the reduction of overtime in the latter force.

Mr. Scott: Discussions between the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Commissioner of the Garda Siochana are confidential. The subjects discussed are a matter for those concerned.

Data Protection

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether his Department correctly completed and submitted its applications for data protection registration on time; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: Yes. The registration forms for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments were submitted before the appointed date, 11 May 1986.

Intimidation

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, following acts of intimidation against the security forces since 1 March, (a) how many people have been arrested, (b) how many people have been charged and (c) what the charges were; and if there have been any resulting convictions.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 6 May 1986, c. 37]: During the period 1 March to 5 May, 172 people were arrested on suspicion of involvement in acts of intimidation against members of the security forces. Of these, 70 were charged. The charges included arson, throwing petrol bombs, possession of an offensive weapon, assault on police, attempted intimidation and criminal damage. The majority of those charged have yet to have their cases brought before the courts. Two people have so far been convicted.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Ventilation

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Lord Privy Seal what savings have been made during the last 12 months from the recycling of polluted air through the air ducts servicing the windowless offices on the Upper Committee Corridor South; and if he will arrange for 100 per cent. fresh air to be circulated.

Mr. Biffen: All returned air is filtered before recycling. There is no reason on health grounds for changing the proportion of recycled air. One hundred per cent. fresh air is circulated once the heating is turned off and throughout the summer. I am advised that an estimated 20 per cent. energy saving is achieved in this area of the building during the winter months.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Morocco

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to make any changes in Her Majesty's Government's policy towards relations with Morocco in the light of the report for 1985 on the Kingdom of Morocco by Amnesty International, a copy of which has been forwarded to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No. The Moroccan authorities can be in no doubt of our continuing concern over abuses of human rights wherever they occur.

British Council (Painting Exhibition)

Viscount Cranborne asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the British Council has any plans to mount an exhibition of 20th century British painting in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The British Council is actively preparing a modern art exhibition for the Soviet Union to cover the period 1900 to 1950. It is envisaged that the exhibition will be displayed at the Pushkin museum in Moscow and the Hermitage museum in Leningrad in early 1988.

South Africa

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government have taken in consequence of the agreement reached by European Economic Community Foreign Ministers last September in Luxembourg on sanctions against South Africa; and what information he has on action taken by other European Economic Community member states.

Mr. Eggar: Along with our EC partners, we have adopted all the restrictive measures agreed by the Twelve in Luxembourg last September. Many of these measures had been United Kingdom policy long before the Luxembourg agreement.

Middle East (PLO)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Iraq Government by Her Majesty's ambassador in Iraq regarding claims by the Palestine Liberation Organisation radio in Baghdad on 4 May of alleged violent incidents by supporters of the Palestine Liberation Organisation in Jerusalem and Gaza, including an alleged attack upon a petrol station, and about the implications of such claims for the peace process in the middle east.

Mr. Eggar: Our support for a just, negotiated settlement of the Arab/Israel dispute is well known. We make these views clear in discussions with representatives of other Governments, including the Government of Iraq.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will seek information from Her Majesty's ambassador in Amman about the implications for the peace process in the middle east of the policy of King Hussein towards political co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organisation, following the King's meeting with President Mubarak in Aqaba, Jordan.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's ambassador at Amman follows closely all developments in Jordanian policy towards the peace process in the middle east and reports regularly.

European Assembly

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ask the President of the European Assembly if it is the intention of that Assembly to recover from certain political parties the sums which the European court determined had been unlawfully distributed to parties by the Assembly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No. This is a matter for the Bureau of the European Parliament, which is still considering the implications of the judgment of the European Court of Justice.

Data Protection

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department correctly completed and submitted its applications for data protection registration on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Yes. This Department submitted its completed applications for registration in April.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about Britons flying helicopter gunships against Tamils in Sri Lanka; what representations he has received about a company called Keeni Meeni Services (KMS) in this context; how many British citizens are employed by the Sri Lankan Government to give training to its armed forces; what instructions have been given to the British high commission in Sri Lanka in relation to British citizens who are involved in military action against the Tamils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have received no formal representations about Britons flying helicopter gunships in Sri Lanka nor about Keeni Meeni Services (KMS). We understand that KMS has for a number of years provided training to the Sri Lankan security forces. The details of the agreement under which such training is provided is a commercial matter between the company and the Sri Lankan Government. We have, however, made it clear to both that we do not wish British subjects to become involved in the fighting. The Sri Lankan Government have assured us that KMS personnel would not be employed in an operational role. We are not aware of any other British citizens giving training to the Sri Lankan armed forces. No special instructions have been given to the British High Commission in Sri Lanka.

Iran and Iraq

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from other Governments opposing the export by Britain of military equipment and spare parts to Iran and Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. and learned Friend gave to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) on 29 October 1985. Our strict policy remains unchanged. We have discussed our policy with a number of Governments, including both parties to the conflict.

Angola (UNITA Forces)

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the United States Government concerning United States support for UNITA forces in Angola and in particular the United States decision to supply UNITA forces with Stinger missiles.

Mr. Eggar: The question of United States support for UNITA is for the United States Government to decide, but the latter are aware of our view that Western interests in southern Africa would be best served by the peaceful negotiation of a settlement leading to the withdrawal of all foreign troops from the region and full independence for Namibia. We have been assured by the United States Government that they will continue their efforts to achieve such a settlement.

Irina Ratushinskaya

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations have been made to the Soviet Government concerning the imprisoned Irina Ratushinskaya; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My hon. Friend the Minister of State, the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton), made clear to the Soviet ambassador, when he called on him on 7 May, our strong concern over the deplorable treatment of Mrs. Ratushinskaya and her deteriorating state of health.

United Kingdom Bases (Libyan Attack)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any action against Britain, involving diplomatic protest or boycott measures, has been communicated to Her Majesty's Government by any Government of the League of Arab States, following Her Majesty's Government's decision to permit the use of United States warplanes to attack Libya.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton), on 7 May, at column 183, to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton).

Israel

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in relation to the Prime Minister's visit to Israel, he has received reports from Her Majesty's ambassador in Tel Aviv about the speech by Prime Minister Peres on 15 May stating that Israel had no intention of attacking Syria.

Mr. Eggar: We welcome Mr. Peres' statement. We continue to urge both sides to exercise restraint and avoid provocation.

Galilee (PLO Attacks)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in forthcoming meetings with Palestine Liberation Organisation representatives in Lebanon, British diplomats there will raise the statements on 10 May in Lebanon by Khalil Al Wazir that the Palestine Liberation Organisation intends to resume rocket attacks against civilians in the Galilee.

Mr. Eggar: Our support for a just, negotiated settlement of the Arab/Israel dispute is well known. We make this clear in contacts with PLO representatives.

Baha'i Community (Iran)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has lodged any recent protest with the Khomeini regime in Iran about the treatment of the Baha'i community, following recent reports of the stoning to death of a 15-year-old; and whether he will also raise such incidents with the United Nations.

Mr. Eggar: We are aware of recent press reports of renewed persecution of the Baha'is in Iran. We have asked our representatives in Tehran to make further inquiries.

The Government have consistently supported the efforts of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights to improve the treatment of Baha'is. We co-sponsored the resolution on human rights in Iran at the last session of the United Nations General Assembly. We shall continue to express our concern about the human rights situation in Iran at every suitable opportunity.

Nicaragua

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from British citizens concerning the supply of arms and funds to the Contras by the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have received under 200 letters this year from right hon. and hon. Members, individuals and organisations about this matter. We have made clear in our replies that we support the Contadora initiative; do not believe that the problems of central America can be resolved by armed force; and that the United States Government are aware of our views.

United States (Arms Control)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to discuss arms control matters with a representative of the United States Government.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend will be holding bilateral discussions with the United States Secretary of State on 27 May. It is expected that the talks will cover a range of issues, including arms control matters.

Tourism (Terrorism)

Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what account was taken in reaching the decision to grant permission for United Kingdom bases to be used for the United States attack on Libya of the possible implications of retaliatory action by Libya for the perception by intending tourists of their safety in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The reasons for our decision have been fully explained on a number of occasions and I have nothing further to add. The measures taken by the Government since 1984 have greatly reduced Libya's ability to promote terrorist activity in this country and intending tourists have no reason to cancel their plans on that account.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Shareholders

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the number of shareholders in Great Britain.

Mr. Ian Stewart: A survey commissioned on behalf of the Treasury by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys from National Opinion Poll Market Research Limited was carried out in February and March this year. This indicated that around 14 per cent. of the adult population of Great Britain owns shares. I am placing a copy of the report produced by NOP in the House of Commons Library.

Eastern Bloc Imports

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those sites in Scotland at which vessels carrying cargoes from Europe and the Eastern Bloc have arrived since 26 April.

Mr. Brooke: Cargo vessels have arrived from Europe and the Eastern Bloc at:

Leith
Grangemouth
Rosyth
Kirkcaldy
Methil
Dundee/Perth
Ardrossan Harbour
Clyde Port Container Terminal
Loch Striven
Ayr Harbour
Port Ellen Pier
Aberdeen
Corpach

Stornoway
Invergordon
Inverness
Fraserburgh
Kirkwall
Montrose
Macduff
Wick
Peterhead
Scalloway
Lerwick

Correspondence (Replies)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of letters sent to him are answered within (a) two weeks, (b) three weeks, (c) four weeks, (d) five weeks, (e) six weeks and (f) more than six weeks.

Mr. MacGregor: The information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, for the first quarter of 1986 the average time taken for Treasury Ministers to answer letters from hon. Members was 18 working days.

Covenants (Abuse)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Inland Revenue investigation into alleged abuse of the covenants procedure in a Scottish Roman Catholic diocese.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

EC (Budget)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will propose at the next meeting of the Council of Finance Ministers that the budget of the European Assembly should be reduced by the sum which the European Court determined recently had been unlawfully granted by that Assembly to certain political parties; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the sum, expressed in pounds sterling, which the European Court determined had been granted unlawfully by the European Assembly to certain political parties; and how much of the total was distributed to British political parties.

Mr. Peter Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his reply dated 7 May, Official Report, column 137, concerning the appropriations for the EEC budget, if he will provide the figures for 1972 to 1985 in terms of pounds sterling.

Mr. Brooke: The information is set out in the table. Details of the 1972 budget are not readily available. The United Kingdom was not of course a member of the Community at that time.

(1) The sterling figures have been derived using average annual exchange rates (source: "European Economy", Vol. 26, November 1985). Until 1977 the budget was established in units of account. Between 1978 and 1980 it was established in European units of account. Since 1981 it has been established in European currency units.

Data Protection

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether his Department correctly completed and submitted its applications for data protection registration on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Treasury did complete its applications correctly and on time.

Drugs

Dr. Marek asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to the answer of the 19 May, he is prepared to estimate what proportion of the £107 million of worth of drugs that was seized was imported at points other than recognised points of entry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I regret that this information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The additional resources which have been allocated to mobile units, to the development of local intelligence and to more drugs investigation staff are intended not only to reinforce controls at recognised points of entry but also to increase Customs effectiveness outside these places. The recently announced Customs drugs hotline is also aimed at encouraging the public to assist Customs in these more remote areas.

Overseas Investment

Mr. Batiste asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of United Kingdom investment overseas; into what categories it is divided for statistical purposes; and what is the estimated annual rate of return on such investment.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The preliminary estimates of the gross level of United Kingdom investment overseas at the end of 1985 is just over £180 billion. This figure is composed of direct investment of about £75 billion and portfolio investment of around £105 billion. Details of these and other United Kingdom assets and liabilities overseas are published annually in "United Kingdom Balance of Payments — The Pink Book" (see Tables 11.1, 11.2 and 13.2 in the 1985 edition).

Official estimates of the rates of return on overseas investment are not available because there is insufficient information on which to base them. Part of the return is in the form of interest, profits and dividends, as shown in the balance of payments current account (published quarterly in Economic Trends). However, the full return on assets also includes capital gains (or losses) for which separate information is not available. A discussion of the rate of return on United Kingdom assets and the problems associated with calculating it may found in Her Majesty's Treasury's economic progress report (No. 175 February 1985) "United Kingdom overseas assets and liabilities".

Taxation

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will update to 1986-87 the information on tax break-even points, tax-free income thresholds and tax on the same basis as his reply of 26 July 1985 to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown), Official Report, columns 855-56;

(2) if he will update to 1986-87 the tax thresholds for a single person, married couple without children, married couple with two children and four children on the same basis as appendix C of the 1985 Inland Revenue statistics.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Child Benefit and Tax Allowances

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the rates of child benefit, single person's tax allowance and married man's allowance at current and at 1979 prices, in April each year since 1979 up to April 1986 on the same basis as his reply of 3 December 1985 to the hon. Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams) Official Report, columns 173-74.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Dr. Marek asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the tax position in relation to the import and export of cars through freeports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 90]: None since 1984.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish for each of the last 10 years, in real terms (i) the annual salary of a state registered nurse, (ii) the year-to-year percentage increases, (iii) the year-to-year rate of inflation, and (iv) the average annual increase in earnings.

Mr. Hayhoe: The following table shows:

1. the minimum and maximum basic salary for the staff nurse grade for the years 1975-76 to 1985-86;
2. the Retail Price Index at the mid-point of the settlement period;
3. the movement in staff nurse salaries measured against this Index, and
4. information about estimated average earnings for the period from August 1982 to January 1986.

From April 1979 to February 1986 the salary maximum of a staff nurse rose by 112 per cent. compared to an increase of 80 per cent. in the retail price index over the same period. This was over and above the effect (not included in the table) of the reduction in nurses' working hours from 40 to 37½ per week in 1980-81 which was itself equivalent to a further increase of 6·5 per cent. on basic pay.

Students (Benefits)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received concerning the changes in the eligibility of students to claim benefits.

Mr. Newton: Since publication of the White Paper we have received approximately 1,230 written representations and inquiries on the proposals which were put to the Social Security Advisory Committee and the local authority associations on 7 January.

Claimant Couples

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of claimant couples with children in receipt of (a) unemployment benefit only, (b) supplementary benefit only and (c) unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit for the latest available year in Doncaster, Wath-on-Dearne and Mexborough Department of Health and Social Security offices.

Mr. Major: I regret that this information is not available centrally. Statistics are not kept routinely so that the information requested could be obtained only by a special exercise which would be disproportionately expensive.

Claimants (Support Agencies)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what expenditure his Department incurs in supporting agencies providing advice and assistance for claimants at his Department's local offices.

Mr. Major: The Department has no powers under social security legislation to make grants to agencies specifically for the provision of advice and assistance to claimants. Agencies which provide a range of services including the provision of such advice and assistance may receive support from the Department under other legislation, but it is not possible to put a figure on the sum involved.

Family Planning

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which organisations receive resources from his Department or through its agencies for instruction in, promotion of, and research into, natural methods of family planning; and how many organisations received an offer for such funding, for each of the past three years.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Department has given grants of £31,000 in 1983-84, £34,000 in 1984-85 and £36,500 in 1985-86 to the Catholic Marriage Advisory Council for work in the area of natural family planning. The Family Planning Association, which receives a Department grant, and the Family Planning Information Service which receives financial support from the Government-funded Health Education Council, also provide information and advice about natural family planning as part of their overall service.

Rubella

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the support his Department is giving to the campaign by the National Rubella Council to promote vaccination for adult women.

Mr. Hayhoe: In addition to the Department's annual grant to the Council to support its headquarter's expenses, the council's efforts to reach adult women who may be at risk from congenital rubella syndrome are also fully supported. The Government-funded Health Education Council has funded the leaflets and posters issued by the National Rubella Council which are aimed specifically at adult women and has given the Council a grant of £5,000 towards the recently-launched video film "Why Worry?" which I hope will be seen widely by women's groups.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many rubella vaccinations were given in the last year for which figures are available to (a) school children and (b) adult women; and if he will categorise the adult women according to whether they were vaccinated in (i) hospital, (ii) family planning clinics, (iii) general practitioners surgeries, (iv) occupational health centres and (v) other places.

Mr. Hayhoe: In 1984, the latest year for which figures are available, the number of schoolgirls in England in the 10 to 14 age group who were vaccinated was 308,000. Information about the numbers of adult women is not at present available centrally.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many reported cases there were of rubella in the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not available centrally

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many babies, identified as having been damaged as a result of their mother contracting rubella, were born in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hayhoe: The numbers of confirmed or suspected cases of congenital rubella infection reported to the national congenital rubella surveillance programme were:

Year	Number
1981	13
1982	23
1983	37
1984	23
1985	n.a.

n.a. Not available.

These figures may require adjustment if further cases are identified.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the average take-up of rubella vaccination by schoolgirls in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hayhoe: The available information for England is as follows:

Percentage of Schoolgirls Vaccinated by the end of the Year in which they reached age 14

	Per cent
1980	84
1981	84
1982	83
1983	84
1984	86

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice his Department has issued regarding screening for immunity to rubella for adult women, pregnant and otherwise; and how his Department monitors whether the advice is followed.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Department's Chief Medical Officer wrote to all general practitioners and district medical officers in 1983 asking them to take all possible steps to ensure that women of childbearing age are immune to rubella. This advice is repeated in the Memorandum "Immunisation against Infectious Disease" issued to doctors. The public health laboratory service has been commissioned by the Department to report on serological testing for rubella antibodies in its laboratories. These tests numbered 650,000 in 1984, compared to 522,000 in 1981.

Limited List Prescribing

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the actual total savings in the first year of operation of the limited list system.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 25 February at column 525.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to extend the limited list prescribing system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: No.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services for what purpose the savings accrued under the limited list prescribing system are to be used.

Mr. Hayhoe: Limited lists of drugs in certain therapeutic groups were introduced to restrain the continued high growth in the drugs bill. The estimated savings have been taken into account in the planned level of spending on the National Health Service.

X-ray Radiation

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate the safety, in terms of radiation measurement, between old and new X-ray machines; if he will make it his policy to give priority to the purchase of the most effective X-ray machines with the lowest radiation risk to patients, radiographers and other hospital staff; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will call for a report from each district and regional health authority on the efficiency, age and radiation effects on patients, radiologists and radiographers of existing X-ray machines; if he is satisfied with current standards of operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I do not consider it necessary to call for a report as suggested by the hon. Member. The National Health Service follows a detailed code of practice covering all uses of radiation in medicine designed to ensure adequate protection for both patients and staff. This includes advice on the safety features required in diagnostic X-ray equipment. The Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 now require all X-ray equipment to be constructed and maintained so that exposures can be restricted so far as is reasonably practicable commensurate with the clinical purpose. No machine regardless of age should be used which does not meet this requirement, and health authorities are expected to have regard to this requirement when purchasing new machines.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give his best estimate of additional radiation doses experienced by patients, radiographers and other hospital staff, by X-ray films which are spoiled and where the procedure has to be repeated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: To make such an estimate requires details of the number of spoiled films analysed according to the procedure being carried out; this information is not collected centrally. Surveys relating to individual hospitals have been carried out, and the professions concerned are conscious of the need to minimise the number of spoiled films. Guidance on procedures designed to minimise the need for repeat exposures is given in a code of practice covering all uses of radiation in medicine.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many statutory single payments were made to pensioners in Scotland under the supplementary benefit rules in each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners in Scotland are currently in receipt of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Major: The figure was 148,000 at February 1985, the latest date for which information is available.
Source: Quarterly Statistical Enquiry.

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in the Batley and Spen constituency received assistance through supplementary benefit with mortgage repayments in each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not available.

Radiation (Chernobyl)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific steps he is taking to ensure that the levels of thyroid activity in children are monitored, following the Chernobyl incident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: There is no medical need for general monitoring of levels of radioactivity in thyroids of children in England following the Chernobyl incident. I am advised that the National Radiological Protection Board has undertaken some limited monitoring of children in the Glasgow area and in Oxfordshire. The radioactivity detected in the children in the Glasgow area was well below the International Commission on Radiological Protection dose limit for members of the public and none was detected in the children in Oxfordshire.

Environmental radiation monitoring data following the Chernobyl incident indicate that the radiation dose to children throughout England would not be higher than that received by the children in Scotland, and in most cases would be much lower.

Bethlem Royal Hospital

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on ambulance services for out-patients attending Hilda Lewis house at Bethlem royal hospital;

(2) what transport arrangements will be made for out-patients attending Hilda Lewis house at the Bethlem royal hospital after the amnbulance service ends.

Mr. Hayhoe: I understand that the London amnbulance service, the Inner London education authority and the Bethlem Royal and Maudsley hospitals are currently discussing the matter. In the meantime transport is being provided by the London ambulance service on the same basis as previously.

Anthony Nolan Bone Marrow Appeal

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now reconsider the question of National Health Service funding for the Anthony Nolan bone marrow appeal located at St. Mary Abbot's hospital, London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: My Department has given financial support to the Anthony Nolan Bone Marrow Trust since 1978. Officials met representatives of the trust earlier this month and consideration is being given to the level of support to be offered to the trust in 1986-87.

Data Protection

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department correctly completed and submitted its applications for data protection registration on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: All uses of personal data within DHSS were registered with the Data Protection Registrar on 8 May.

Southend Hospital (Radiotherapy)

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from people in South East Essex about the possible closure of the radiotherapy unit at Southend Hospital; whether he will discuss the matter with the chairman of the North-East Thames regional health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: These representations have opposed the closure of the radiotherapy unit at Southend hospital.

Following public consultation over an overall strategy for the region's cancer services the North-East Thames regional health authority has adopted a policy of moving towards a pattern of care focused on district general hospitals, supported by larger, better equipped specialist cancer treatment centres. The regional health authority has commissioned further research and will be considering recommendations on the choice of sites for the treatment centres at its July meeting. Any proposal to change the existing disposition of services will be subject to full public consultation under normal National Health Service procedures, including, if the relevant community health council objects, the referral of any final decision to Ministers. It would not, therefore, be appropriate to comment further at this stage.

Member's Questions

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to reply to the question tabled by the hon. Member for Oldham, West for priority written answer on 8 April, relating to expenditure arising out of the Social Security Bill.

Mr. Newton: I replied to the hon. Member on 8 April.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to reply to the question tabled by the hon. Member for Oldham, West for priority written answer on 8 April, relating to staffing levels in local authority social services departments, with specific reference to child abuse cases.

Mr. Hayhoe: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State replied to the hon. Member on 8 April.

"Just Say No"

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which officials from his Department were present at the launch of the Grange Hill anti-drug abuse video "Just Say No" held in March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Three officials accompanied my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health—his private secretary, a social services inspector and an administrator.

The occasion also launched the BBC's Drugwatch directory of services produced in conjunction with the standing conference on drug abuse, towards the cost of which the Government contributed £4,000. I welcome this initiative by the BBC in the fight against drug misuse.

Housing Benefit

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the recent change in the treatment of annuity as income for purposes of establishing housing benefit entitlement.

Mr. Major: My hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Horsham (Sir P. Hordern) on 15 May at column 526 explained that we intend to amend the housing benefits regulations as soon as possible to provide for the mortgage interest element of a home income plan to be ignored in the housing benefit assessment. We have no plans at present to change the way that other types of annuity are treated in the assessment.

Child Benefits

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1955 the combined value of child tax allowance after clawback and family allowance on child benefit expressed in November 1985 prices, on the same basis as his reply of 26 July 1985 to the hon.Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) Official Report, columns 523-4.

Mr. Newton: The information is as follows:

Resettlement Units

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to announce a final decision on the future of re-establishment centres; and when he expects to reply to the Second Report from the Social Services Committee, Session 1985-86, on resettlement units and re-establishment centres.

Mr. Major: In February 1985 the Government announced plans to close the 19 re-establishment centres (RECs) run by the Department of Health and Social Security. In view of the greatly increased provision for the long-term unemployed made by the Manpower Services Commission, it was felt that the role of the RECs in retraining the long-term unemployed for regular work would be more appropriately undertaken by the MSC and that this would eliminate the wasteful duplication of function.

Following this proposal, the Social Services Select Committee recommended that my Department defer the closure of RECs until it could be demonstrated that the MSC would be able to fill the gap their closure would create. The Government are substantially extending the range of help available to the long-term unemployed and in particular the group that includes re-establishment centre users. The community programme, for example, is to be increased to 255,000 places by November 1986. By March 1987 the restart programme should make it possible to assist all the long-term unemployed as they reach 12 months unemployment. Each person referred to a Manpower Services Commission employment adviser will have an initial interview at which the availability of jobs and the appropriateness of training will be considered. Links between employment advisers and DHSS unemployment review officers will be strengthened to match people with the most suitable Manpower Services Commission programme.

For these reasons, we have decided that re-establishment centres will close as soon as is practicable and, at the latest, by 31 March 1987. Every effort will be made to find alternative employment for the staff involved. It has been agreed with the Department of Employment that discussions about the possible employment of re-establishment centre workshop supervisors on MSC programmes should proceed with the MSC at a local level.

The Social Services Committee has today been informed of this decision along with the Government's responses to the other recommendations in its second report.

NHS (General Managers)

Mr. Neale asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish arrangements for the pay and conditions of service of general managers in the National Health Service to replace interim arrangements now in force.

Mr. Fowler: I shall be issuing a circular next week to health authorities setting out new arrangements for general managers in England. Copies of the circular will be placed in the Library of the House.

The appointment of general managers was recommended in 1983 by the Griffiths inquiry into the management of the National Health Service. All regional and district general managers and the great majority of unit general managers have now been appointed. Their job is to improve services to patients by streamlining decision-taking and increasing efficiency.

General managers are personally accountable for managerial performance and for the achievement of national, regional and local policies and objectives. Their role is entirely new to the National Health Service. A high level of performance is expected from them. The existing terms and conditions of service for National Health Service staff are not appropriate to these posts and I am therefore introducing new arrangements.

The arrangements include important new features—notably the introduction of rolling short-term contracts in place of the security of tenure which normally applies in the Health Service. It will be a condition of eligibility for the new arrangements, including the rates of pay, that general managers should give up any contractural rights relating to their previous National Health Service appointments. The renewal of all general manager appointments will be on the new basis.

The new pay structure is intended to recognise the commitment to a performance-related contract which is now expected of general managers and the loss of security of tenure. It provides for the general management function at unit, district and regional level in nine different grades in place of the present structure of well over 50 grades. There are no incremental scales in the new structure. At a later date a scheme of performance-related pay will be introduced which will reward those general managers whose performance is of a sufficiently high level. Performance will be assessed in relation to pre-established objectives and targets.

The new grading structure and pay rates replace, as previously promised, interim arrangements which have been in force since 1984 and will be effective from 1 February 1986. The cost of introducing the new arrangements will be met within health authorities' existing management cost limits.

Grading criteria		Grade	Grade rate
Teaching or non-teaching	Revenue £ million		£
Region		RGM	33,200
District
Teaching	45 or more	DGM 1	31,600
Non-teaching	60 or more
Teaching	45 or less	DGM 2	30,200
Non-teaching	30 to 60
Non-teaching	30 or less	DGM 3	28,800
Unit
Teaching	20 or more	UGM 1	26,400
Teaching	10 to 20	UGM 2	24,100
Non-teaching	15 or more
Teaching	5 to 10	UGM 3	21,700
Non-teaching	10 to 15
Teaching	5 or less	UGM 4	18,900
Non-teaching	3 to 10
Non-teaching	3 or less	UGM 5	15,600

Note:

The grade rate for district and unit posts has been based on the size of their revenue and the presence or absence of teaching responsibilities. In addition other local factors can have a significant effect on the weight of each post. To reflect these differences in job weight, the grade rate may be varied at the discretion of the Authority concerned, subject to regional and central approval.

Correspondence

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the approximate time it takes his Department to reply to a letter from an hon. Member; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1986]: we aim to reply to the majority of letters within four weeks. In 1985, Ministers here replied to nearly 35,000 letters—an increase of about 50 per cent. on the previous year. Nevertheless, we continue to seek ways of improving the speed of our replies.

Photosensitivity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will ask the Committee on Safety of Medicines to assess the incidence and seriousness of photosensitivity as an adverse reaction to medical drugs.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1986]: The committee continuously monitors all reports of suspected adverse drug reactions that are made to it, including reports of photosensitivity, and considers their incidence, seriousness and implications in deciding whether any recommendations should be made to the licensing authority.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what research is being funded by his Department into ways of alleviating or curing photosensitivity resulting from an adverse reaction to medical drugs.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1986]: The Department is not supporting any research in this field.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many adverse reaction reports there were in 1985 to the Committee on Safety of Medicines of a photosensitivity reaction to medical drugs; and which drugs were the most commonly involved.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1986]: In 1985 the Committee on Safety of Medicines received 290 reports of photosensitivity, 19 of allergic photosensitivity and two of toxic photosensitivity as suspected adverse reactions to drugs. In some cases these reports made in 1985 relate to events occurring in earlier years. No deaths were reported. The most commonly involved drugs currently licensed were azapropazone, piroxicam and amiloride. The committee also continued to receive reports about benoxaprofen, relating to periods before August 1982 when the licence was suspended, and the product was later withdrawn from the market.

It is very important bear in mind, first, that a report does not necessarily indicate a causal relationship between a product and a reported reaction; and, second, that in considering reports account must be taken of various factors, including the extent and duration of use of the product.

Cancer

Dame Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has reached a decision on the Government's response to the proposed European action programme on cancer research and treatment due on 29 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1986]: The proposal from the European Commission, which I will be discussing with my Community colleagues in Brussels on 29 May, is for a programme of action on cancer prevention rather than research and treatment. Its objectives of enhanced co-operation among member states with a view to a reduction in cancer mortality do, in my view, merit strong support with my colleagues to resolve outstanding issues and reach early agreement.

Women's Hospital, Liverpool

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the waiting list for private patients at the Women's hospital, Liverpool.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1986]: The number of private patients awaiting treatment at 31 March 1986 was five.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many National Health Service patients have received treatment at the Women's hospital, Liverpool, in each of the past three years.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1986]: The information is as follows:

	Number of cases treated
Year	In-patients	Out-patients	*Day cases
1983	3,308	19,353	7,340
1984	2,961	18,073	8,358
1985	3,181	16,350	8,436

* Includes ward attenders, i.e. patients receiving treatment on a ward but not occupying a bed.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the waiting list at the Women's hospital, Liverpool, at the latest date for National Health Service patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1986]: The number of National Health Service patients awaiting treatment at 31 March 1986 was 566. This figure is the lowest for 12 months.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many private patients have received treatment at the Women's hospital, Liverpool, in each of the past three years.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1986]: The information is as follows:

	Number of cases treated
Year	In-patients	*Day cases
1983	130	60
1984	116	43
1985	111	21

* Includes ward attenders, i.e. patients receiving treatment on a ward but not occupying a bed.

Hospital Waiting Lists (Merseyside)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the waiting list at the Mersey regional health authority at the latest date; and what were the figures for May 1983;

(2) what was the waiting list at the Liverpool district health authority (teaching); and what were the figures for May 1983.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1986]: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member information in precisely the form he seeks. Waiting list figures are collected centrally at the end of March, September and December each year. The available information is given in the table. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the health authorities concerned for the figures for May 1983.

Numbers of persons on NHS in-patient waiting list

	31 March 1983	30 September 1985
Mersey Regional Health Authority	36,187	30,141
Liverpool District Health Authority	8,308	7,921

South Killingholme

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people live within a 20-mile radius of South Killingholme.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1986]: In 1981, the latest date for which figures are available, there were about 750,000 living within a 20-mile radius of South Killingholme.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Staff Training

Mr. Sheerman asked the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed as representing the House of Commons Commission what is the average time spent by employees in each Department of the House in on-the-job and off-the-job training.

Mr. Beith: With the exception of certain off-the-job training courses provided to staff on a House-wide basis, details of which are given at the end of this answer, training is arranged by each House Department according to its individual requirements. Statements of each Department's arrangements appear below. For the reasons indicated in those statements, it is not possible to give figures of average time spent by employees in training activities.

Department of the Clerk of the House

Training is principally on-the-job. Throughout a probationary period (two years for Clerks, one year for others), and for longer if necessary, employees work under the close supervision of more senior staff. During the period a training programme informs them about the work of different Offices within the Department, and of other Departments. From time to time staff also participate in courses at the Civil Service College, language training at the Diplomatic Language Training Centre, Civil Service secretarial proficiency courses and commercial computer courses. Total time spent on formalised or off-the-job training was estimated at 824 hours in 1985.

Department of the Serjeant at Arms

Staff of the Department have attended courses on the following subjects:

Employment Law
Occupational Health
First Aid at Work
Interview Techniques
Building Security
Secretarial Proficiency Courses
Internal Mail Handling

In addition to the above, Attendant staff receive training in the operation of copying machines.

The following courses are in prospect:

Chairing meetings
Searching techniques

Due to the specialised nature of the work in the House of Commons, much of the training must be carried out at work. The Department is actively seeking to broaden the range of courses attended within the constraints of the manning levels required.

Department of the Library

Training tends to be concentrated on staff at the earlier stages of their careers, so it would not be very meaningful to compute an average using the total staff as a denominator. Estimates for the readily quantifiable forms of training for the calendar year 1985 are as follows:

	Courses/ Trainees	*Trainee Days
Introductory courses arranged by the Administration Department	8	16
Word processor training (secretaries)	5	16
Secretarial Proficiency training	2	4
Civil Service College Courses	9	13
Other externally provided training	16	20
Programme of visits to Library Sections (recent recruits)	11	19
Training and re-training on the Library's POLIS data-base	66	52
Training on other data-bases (eg BLAISE, LEXIS)	7	8
First-aid training	4	4
Study leave and examination leave (further education and training scheme)	3	13
Pre-licentiate (Library qualification) training	2	31
Other internally provided training	3	5
TOTAL	136	201

* Numbers of trainees multiplied by the length of the course.

"On-the-job" training continues for as long as is necessary for the individual member of staff, i.e. until he or she is capable of carrying out his/her duties without close supervision. Its length varies with the grade of post and with the previous experience of the post-holder and it is not therefore possible to provide even approximate figures.

In the Vote Office, all training to date is given on-the-job. It is carried out in a four-year cycle as follows:

First Year—Parliamentary Section documentation.
Second Year — Non-Parliamentary and Northern Ireland documentation.
Third Year—European documentation.
Final Year—Sale Office, photo-reproduction micro-fiche.

In addition there are proposals to nominate a number of more senior staff for training in computer skills and management, but this is dependent on when the Office's proposed microcomputer system becomes operational.

Administration Department

It is impossible to state the average time spent by staff in the Administration Department in on-the-job training. Such training is given according to an individual's needs and depends upon his previous experience and the demands of the work to which he is from time to time assigned.

Off-the-job training is also provided to meet the needs of the individuals according to the work to which they are currently assigned, and since this varies according to the frequency of any changes in duties which become necessary, it is not possible to provide a realistic average figure of this form of training for all staff.

Staff of the Administration Department have attended both functional and grade related (e.g. management skills) off-the-job training courses run by the Civil Service College and other outside organisations. During the last two years 212 staff days have been devoted to participation in such training courses.

Department of the Official Report

The training programme for Trainee Reporters is normally two years under the Stenograph system, of which at least the first year is taken up with full-time training. The training time for a transcriber is normally a year, but that is wholly 'on-the-job' training.

Currently 13 reporters out of an establishment of 19 are receiving training, nine full time and four in post, and nine transcribers out of an establishment of 27 are in training.

Refreshment Department

It is the policy of the Refreshment Department to recruit professional staff who are adequately qualified academically and fully experienced. From time to time, however, this may be supplemented through specialised external training course, e.g. City and Guilds course in catering. At the moment three staff are attending day-release courses of this nature. One member of staff, who is a union representative, is attending a day-release course in aspects of union procedure. The Catering Accountant last year attended a Civil Service College course in Government accounting.

Off-the-job training provided to staff on a house-wide basis co-ordinated by the establishment office

Number and Grades of Staff	Type of course	Where held	Length in days
All newcomers to staff of the House irrespective of grade	Introduction Course	House of Commons	2

	Shorthand or Audio Training Course	DOE Typing Training Centre	2
Various Grades (as and when required—10 to date)	Selection Interviewing Techniques Course	Civil Service College	3
	Promotion Board Interviewing Techniques Course	Civil Service College	3

Further Education

On a House-wide basis, co-ordinated by the Establishments Office, staff are encouraged to undertake courses of further education and training. For approved courses, staff are given assistance towards the cost of fees, board and travelling, and in addition may be given time off for study and to take examinations. The length of time over which assistance is given varies greatly, e.g. from one year for an O-level course in one subject to several years for an Open University degree course.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Krugerrands

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government will take to preclude the import of Krugerrands and other South African gold coins.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Following the commitment given by the Commonwealth Heads of Government in Nassau last October, we have been considering what action might be possible to preclude the import of Kruggerands. Account has been taken of the fact that South Africa is now minting the new Protea coin.

We have now decided that the import of all gold coins originating in South Africa, and consigned to the United Kingdom from that country, shall be prohibited with effect from midnight tonight. A copy of Notice to Importers 2086, detailing these arrangements, is being placed in the library of the House.

Syria

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about his policy on the issue of visas to citizens of Syria.

Mr. Eggar: Following the unjustified expulsion by the Syrian Government of three members of the British Embassy in Damascus, including the Vice-Consul, the issue of visas at Damascus has had to be suspended until the Embassy is adequately staffed. Procedures for the issue of visas to Syrians have also been reviewed. They will normally be required to attend for interview and their applications will be referred to London. All Syrians seeking to enter the United Kingdom in transit, even if they propose to remain here less than 24 hours, will in future be required to obtain transit visas.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Further Education College Students

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of further education college students are engaged on courses funded out of the education budget; and what information he has as to the percentage who are taking courses, the funding of which comes under the responsibility of other Government Departments.

Mr. Walden: Full information on the funding of courses in further education establishments is not available. Five per cent. of students on full-time and sandwich courses and thirteen per cent. of students on part-time day courses were on MSC schemes in maintained, assisted and grant-aided further education establishments in November 1984.

University of Dacca (Awards)

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the reasons for his Department's decision no longer to accept degree awards from the University of Dacca as suitable qualifications for the granting of a Department of Education and Science (teaching) number.

Mr. Chris Patten: My Department has not made such a decision. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind and will write to me with the details I will be glad to consider them.

Initial Teacher Training

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report (a) all those initial teacher training institutes which fully satisfy all the criteria that he sent to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North and (b) all the initial teacher training institutes which have failed to satisfy all the criteria and have been given the opportunity to meet the criteria fully, indicating those criteria which have not been met.

Mr. Chris Patten: The criteria referred to by the hon. Member are a summary of the main principles that informed the planning of initial teacher training intakes. My right hon. Friend's provisional decisions are based on an overall judgement of how intakes can best be deployed to ensure the most effective provision of initial teacher training in the public sector as a whole, taking account of those principles and the proposals received from the training institutions and others concerned.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has for primary initial teacher training in Humberside in the degree of bachelor of education and postgraduate certificate of education.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's Answer of 14 May at column 457.

University Academics (Pay)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state for each 12-month period beginning 2 October 1979, the percentage rise in university academics' pay and the comparable rise in the retail prices index.

Mr. Walden: The information requested is as follows:

*Period	University non-clinical academics Pay rise per cent.	Retail Prices Index (per cent. increase)
2 October 1979 to 1 October 1980	†25·2	15·4
2 October 1980 to 1 October 1981	‡3·2	11·7

NATIONAL FINANCE

National Savings Certificates

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why National Savings certificates are no longer after this week to be able to be purchased through banks in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Lawson: Banks in Northern Ireland are still able to arrange for their customers to buy National Savings certificates. All that has changed is that the Department for National Savings is introducing a new system of issuing National Savings certificates directly from their Durham office by post to savers throughout the United Kingdom. This means that agent banks will no longer hold stocks of certificates. Under the new system Northern Ireland banks will no longer have to arrange for their branches or associate branches in Great Britain to send National Savings certificates to their customers in Northern Ireland. Northern Ireland banks can obtain application forms either from their associates in Great Britain, or from the Department for National Savings office in Durham, from where the certificates will be sent directly to customers.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Arnold asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the responsibilities of each of the deputy secretaries in his Department and the number and ranks of staff reporting to each.

Mr. Brooke: The information at 1 May 1986 is as follows:

Establishments and Organisation Group, the Central Unit, the Information Division and the Rating of Government Property Department (1,055 staff), report direct to the Permanent Secretary: the Defence Policy and Materiel Group and General Expenditure Policy Group (78 staff) to the Second Permanent Secretary (Public Expenditure); the Forecast and Analysis Group and the Medium Term and Policy Analysis Group (34 staff) to the Chief Economic Adviser; the External Finance Group (22 staff) to the Second Permanent Secretary (Overseas Finance); and the Accountancy Advice Group (44 staff) reports to the Accountancy Adviser to the Treasury and the Head of the Government Accountancy Service.

Ships (Capital Allowances)

Mr. Ottaway asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has of the cost of restoring capital allowances to owners of British-registered vessels and vessels built in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brooke: I assume my Hon. Friend has in mind the restoration of 100 per cent. first year allowances in place of the present system of writing down allowances. The additional direct revenue cost of such a change for capital expenditure from 1986 onwards on British-registered vessels, including those built in the United Kingdom, could be some £100 million in the first full year declining to about £50 million a year by the end of the decade.

CIVIL SERVICE

Data Protection

Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister for the Civil Service whether the Prime Minister's Office in No. 10 Downing Street, the Cabinet Office and the Management and Personnel Office correctly completed and submitted the applications for data protection registration on time.

Mr. Luce: All applications for data protection registration for 10 Downing Street, the Cabinet Office and the Cabinet Office (MPO) were completed and submitted within the correct time limits. Acknowledgements of receipt for the registrations have been received from the Registrar.

THE ARTS

Museums (Loans)

Mr. Latham asked the Minister for the Arts when loans to provincial museums will be resumed by the Tate Gallery and the National Gallery.

Mr. Luce: I am happy to say that agreement has now been reached with the two galleries on a form of words which clarifies the arrangements for considering compensation in the event of loss or damage to items loaned from the collections. On this basis the galleries have indicated that they are ready to resume loans to provincial museums without the prior requirement of commercial insurance.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Boundary Commission (Information Technology)

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will increase the resources made available to the Boundary Commissions so as to enable them to accommodate modern developments in information technology.

Mr. Mellor: The Parliamentary Boundary Commissions have not so far requested any increase in their resources for this purpose. Any request which might be made in the future would be considered on its merits, taking account of the Government's general desire to ensure that the Parliamentary Boundary Commissions have sufficient resources to comply with their statutory duties.

Fire Services

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what performance indices he uses to monitor the comparative performanceof different fire brigades.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My concern is that brigades provide effective, efficient and economical fire protection. We look accordingly to professional advice on, amongst other things, the characteristics of particular brigade areas and on the ratio of firefighters to pumping and other appliances; the ratio of management and supervisory staff to firefighters who ride on appliances; on the staffing of fire prevention departments; and on training provision.

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes in the numbers of firemen, supervisory grades and management grades have occurred in the West Yorkshire fire services since 1974; and during this period what changes have occurred in the number of fires attended and the average response time.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The available information is shown in the table. Information on the number of fires attended by each fire brigade has been published annually since 1976 by the Home Office in "Fire Statistics United Kingdom" (in the supplements to the main volumes before 1982). The number of such fires shown in the table excludes chimney fires. Information on average response times could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

na means not available.

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how statistics of incidents attended by fire brigades are collated; and what measures are taken to ensure that double counting of incidents does not occur when more than one fire station is called out.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Statistics of incidents attended by local authority fire brigades are compiled by the Home Office from reports submitted by the brigades. Information for England and Wales is published annually in "Fire Statistics United Kingdom", and in the report of Her Majesty's inspector of fire services. The guidance provided to brigades by the Home Office as to who completes a fire report should prevent double counting where more than one station attends the same fire. The report is usually completed by the person in charge of fire fighting at the scene of the fire or by a person deputed to do so.

Foreign Visitors

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer of 15 May 1985, Official Report, column 516, when he intends to provide the information sought on foreign visitors.

Mr. Waddington: As soon as the necessary analysis of the available records relating to Libyans has been completed.

North Wales Police Force

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) police officers and (b) special constables there were in the north Wales police force for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information is as follows:

North Wales Police

On 31 December	Police Strength	Special Constables
1976	1,238	586
1977	1,239	550
1978	1,251	219
1979	1,271	421
1980	1,290	256
1981	1,288	193
1982	1,303	164
1983	1,275	201
1984	1,281	200
1985	1,251	215

Between December 1982 and December 1985 the strength of the north Wales police dropped by 52 but civilian staff numbers increased by 73. Thirty-seven additional police posts have been approved for the force since May 1979; the police establishment is currently 1,316, and police strength on 30 April 1986 was 1,261.

Immigration

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the past 12 months officers from the immigration service have refused entry to people in receipt of entry clearance letters.

Mr. Waddington: The available information relates to persons refused and removed from the United Kingdom who held an entry clearance or work permit on arrival. In the 12 months to March 1986, there were 74 cases of such removals.

Local Government Boundaries

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward legislation to permit partial reviews of local government boundaries.

Mr. Mellor: The Local Government Act 1972 already permits the Local Government Boundary Commission for England to review any part of the boundaries of a county, district or London borough. However, there is no power to make partial changes in electoral arrangements, except in consequence of such a review. My right hon. Friend has no plans for legislation on this matter.

Naturalisation

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applications have been made by refugees from south-east Asia for naturalisation in each year since Her Majesty's Government's policy of admission for Vietnamee refugees was instituted;

(2) how many applications have been received for naturalisation and how many accepted in each of the last seven years for which figures are available, listed by way of ethnic origin or country of origin or other similar categorisation.

Mr. Waddington: Details of the previous nationality of those naturalised in each of the last seven years for which figures are available have been published in the following papers:

Year	Cmnd. Papers
1978	7637
1979	7998
1980	8325
1981	8627
1982	9009
1983	9331
1984	—*

* Home Office Statistical Bulletin 21/85 published 29 August 1985.
The other information requested in not available.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the criteria and process of naturalisation applications by refugees from south-east Asia; if it is invariable practice that all applicants are interviewed; what standard of use of English is required; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Applications from those who are refugees are considered like other applications for naturalisation as quickly and as economically as possible and in accordance with the criteria set out in section 6 and schedule 1 to the British Nationality Act 1981. Proper account is taken of the particular circumstances of refugees in exercising discretion under the Act. Not all applicants for naturalisation are interviewed. Applicants for naturalisation other than those applying as the spouses of British citizens are required under paragraph 1(1)(c) of schedule 1 to have sufficient knowledge of the English, Welsh or Scottish Gaelic language. The standard is that an applicant should have sufficient knowledge of the language to mix easily in the society in which he lives and to fulfil his duties as a citizen.

Drugs

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's contribution to the Council of Europe's moves to increase international co-operation in combating drugs, making special reference to the Pompidou group.

Mr. Mellor: The United Kingdom plays a very active part in stimulating European co-operation on drugs issues through its chairmanship of the Council of Europe co-operation group to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking in drugs (the Pompidou group). We have obtained agreement to a meeting of the group at ministerial level to be held next January, in order to give further impetus to its work. That meeting will also provide a valuable opportunity to follow-up any recommendations which emerge from the discussion of the penal aspects of drug abuse and control by Council of Europe Justice Ministers at their conference in Oslo on 17-19 June.

Radio Services

Mr. Temple-Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will discuss with the British Broadcasting Corporation the suspension of its activities concerning further development of local radio pending the publication of the Green Paper on local radio referred to in his answer of 8 May, Official Report, columns 206-7.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Temple-Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will discuss with the Independent Broadcasting Authority the suspension of its activities concerning the development of an independent national radio pending the publication of the Green Paper concerning the future of radio services as whole and referred to in his answer of 8 May, Official Report, columns 206-7.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Independent Broadcasting Authority is developing plans for the introduction of an independent national radio service (which would require legislation to supplement the preparatory provisions in. 48 of the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984) and has discussed preliminary proposals with my right hon. Friend and others. We do not propose to discourage public debate on the nature and organisations of such a service: indeed, we have made it clear that its development will figure in the Green Paper referred to in the answer of 8 May.

Crossbows

Mr. John Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in his consultations about preventing crossbows from falling into the wrong hands.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer the right hon. and learned Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble, (Mr. Atkins) on 24 April at column 186. A number of meetings with interested parties have taken place. We shall report our conclusions to the House as soon as possible.

Police Operations (Wapping)

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements have been made for allocating the cost of the police operations at Wapping between the different forces involved.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that only the Metropolitan and City of London police forces have been involved in policing marches and demonstrations at or in connection with the News International plant at Wapping. Under a long-standing agreement between the Commissioners of Police of the two forces, the policing costs of events which are jointly policed lie where they fall.

Conservative Party Conference (Policing Costs)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is now prepared to make additional financial resources available to Lancashire county council towards policing costs involved for the 1985 Conservative party conference.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. My right hon. Friend gave very careful consideration to the points put to him by the Lancashire police authority but he concluded that there was insufficient justification for departing from the normal arrangements for meeting police expenditure.

Traffic Law Enforcement

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made with his study of the extent to which there is a need for further increases in police resources for road traffic law enforcement; what applications he has received from police authorities for increases in establishment on the basis of demonstrated need in this area; and whether his recent accouncement concerning an increase in police manpower takes account of this factor.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Two police authorities, Hertfordshire and Surrey, have applied for increases in their police establishments for motorway policing duties. My right hon. Friend shall consider these, and other applications for increases in police establishments, on the basis of proven need and in the light of advice from H.M. inspectors of constabulary. The day-to-day deployment of police officers is the responsibility of the chief officer of police concerned, and it is for him to decide how best to allocate manpower and other resources locally.

Refugees (Hong Kong)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on his admission policy for refugees from Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any additional appointments are to be made to the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: I am pleased to announce that Mr. Gerry Gillman, formerly General Secretary of the Society of the Civil and Public Servants, has accepted my invitation to serve as an additional member of the authority. He will be taking up his appointment at the beginning of June. The need for an additional member arises from the authority's high level of activity, and the vigour with which it is approaching its task.

Magistrates' Courts

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of contested cases were acquitted in the magistrates' courts in England and Wales in 1983, 1984 and 1985, respectively;

(2) what percentage of all cases were convicted in magistrates' courts in England and Wales in 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 17]: Reliable information on plea is not available. Information on defendants acquitted in magistrates' courts is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (volume I in table 1.1(A)). The proportion of defendants who were convicted (regardless of plea) was 93 per cent. in 1983 and 91 per cent. in 1984. Corresponding information for 1985 is not yet available.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Parades

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the estimated number of people participating in the republican parades during the Easter adjournment for which the required statutory notice was not given to the police; and against how many people prosecutions have been initiated as a result;

(2) what is the estimated number of people participating in the Loyalist parades during the Easter adjournment, which were held in contravention of a prohibition under Article 4(3) of the Public Order (NI) Order 1981; and against how many people prosecutions have been initiated as a result.

Mr. Scott: During the Easter adjournment (27 March to 8 April) approximately 2,100 people took part in four republican parades for which no statutory notice had been given to the police. Seventy-five people have already been identified with a view to prosecution and another 36 still have to be interviewed by the police.

Between 3,000 and 3,500 people participated in the loyalist parades which took place in Portadown on 31 March in contravention of a prohibition under article 4(3) of the Public Order (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. Twenty-nine people have been charged in connection with the parades and associated disorder, and another 60 still have to be interviewed by the police.

This was the only prohibition under the Public Order (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 during the Easter adjournment.

Drunkenness

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of drivers involved in accidents in Northern Ireland with a positive breath test or failure to provide a specimen in each of the past seven years; if he will further break each figure down by the numbers of these which relate to each of the periods—04.00 to 10.00 hours, 10.00 to 16.00 hours, 16.00 to 22.00 hours and 22.00 hours to 04.00 hours.

Mr. Scott: Information in the form requested is not available.

Mr. Hume: asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining the Royal Ulster Constabulary's policy in regard to cautioning drunkenness offenders; and whether he has given advice comparable to the advice to chief officers in Britain contained in Home Office Circular 14/1985.

Mr. Scott: At present no instructions on the cautioning of drunkenness offenders exist within the force but the Royal Ulster Constabulary has always exercised a discretion in prosecuting offenders for simple drunkenness or less serious cases of aggravated drunkenness.

As a general rule, the infrequent offender is detained until sober, released and proceeded against by way of summons or caution. No hard and fast rule exists in relation to the cautioning or prosecution of persistent offenders and the course of action taken in any particular case will depend on the circumstances.

The advice contained in Home Office circular 14/85 has not been communicated to the force as yet in relation to drunkenness but the cautioning of adults generally in accordance with the Home Office circular is presently under consideration.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining arrangements which the Royal Ulster Constabulary has with health authorities, social services or non-statutory alcohol agencies to help with drunkenness offenders who come to the notice of the police frequently.

Mr. Scott: No special arrangements exist between the Royal Ulster Constabulary and health authorities, social services or non-statutory alcohol agencies to assist drunkenness offenders who come to the notice of the police frequently. Consultations on an ad hoc basis do, however, take place in appropriate cases.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining the number of drunken driving offences in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years, further indicating the numbers of these which occurred in the Christmas and new year period.

Mr. Scott: The following table gives the number of prosecutions for drunken driving offences during the years 1981-1985.

Number of Prosecutions

	Number
1981	1,924
1982	1,916
1983	1,917
1984	1,794
1985	2,014

Information on the number of prosecutions for drunken driving over the Christmas and new year period is not available. However, during the seven-week period for Christmas 1984 to new year 1985 there were 243 detections in respect of major drunk in charge offences and positive excess alcohol offences. The figure for the same period in 1985-86 was 202.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate the proportion of traffic fatalities in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years in which excess alcohol consumption might have been a factor.

Mr. Scott: The following table gives the number of accidents involving death and injury, the number in which alcohol was a principal factor and shows the percentage of all death/injury accidents.

	Total number of accidents involving death or injury	Accidents involving death or injury due to alcohol	Percentage of all death injury accidents
1981	5,245	358	6·8
1982	5,551	358	6·4
1983	5,425	363	6·7
1984	5,978	362	6·1
1985	5,725	292	5·1

Youth Training

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the employment record of people coming off the youth training programme, by sector and area.

Dr. Boyson: In the financial year 1985-86, 57 per cent. of young people who left YTP full-time training schemes and whose destinations were known entered employment immediately on completion of training.

A recent sample survey has shown that 82 per cent. of young people completing a year of employment with training in YTP workscheme remained in employment either with their training employer or another employer.

This statistical information is not available on a sectoral or area basis.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what figures are available to indicate the number of people on the youth training programme in further education colleges who are pursuing in whole or in part the same course as further education students.

Dr. Mawhinney: In whole, none; in part, approximately 2,000.

Intimidation

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many acts of intimidation have been reported since 1 January and in which cases these acts were against Protestants, and in which cases against Catholics, showing what organisation was responsible, where this is known, and how many people the incidents involved.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 8 May 1986, c. 225]: The information is not available in the form requested, but 450 acts that one thought to have been intimadatory or sectarian in intent have been recorded during the first four months of this year excluding ones directed against members of the security forces. Information is not readily available as to the organisations responsible for these acts. Nor are statistics collated in such a way as to indicate the religious affiliation or the numbers of persons involved.

TRANSPORT

Air Fares

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to bring about the ending of the Saturday night rule as it applies to cheap air fares to European destinations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Our aim is to secure freedom for airlines to introduce new types and levels of air fares, in accordance with their commercial judgment, rather than to prohibit particular conditions (like the Saturday night rule) which airlines may choose to apply to some tickets. This freedom is a feature of the liberal aviation arrangements which we now have with five European countries and is something for which we are pressing in current EC negotiations.

Driving Tests

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the current average regional waiting times for car and motorcycle driving tests; and what are the comparable figures for six months and one year ago, respectively.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Waiting times are currently lower in almost all traffic areas than they were six months and a year ago. The figures are as follows:

Average waiting periods (weeks)

Traffic area	L tests (motor cars and part II motorcycle tests)			Part I motorcycle tests
	26 April 1985	25 October 1985	24 April 1986	26 April 1985	25 October 1985	24 April 1986

M20 (Service Areas)

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the current plans for the provision of motorway service areas on the M20 motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall reply to my hon. Friend shortly.

Marine Pilots (Compensation)

Mr. Thornton asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the terms of the statutory compensation scheme to be made available to marine pilots for whom there will no longer be work following the proposed transfer of responsibility for pilotage to the harbour authorities.

Mr. Moore: My right hon. Friend, the then Secretary of State for Transport, confirmed on 24 March, in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, East (Mr. Sayeed) that the Government intend to bring forward as soon as possible legislative proposals for the reform of pilotage administration. Those proposals will include provision for a compensation scheme, to be funded by the industry, for those licensed pilots whose services are not required by the harbour authorities once they have taken over responsibility for pilotage.

Although attempts to obtain agreement among the parties concerned on the terms of compensation payments have previously been unsuccessful, it was considered right to make one further attempt, and at my right hon. Friend's request Mr. James Davidson, the chairman of the Pilotage Commission, held discussions with representatives of the pilots, the shipowners and the harbour authorities about the terms of a compensation and linked early retirement scheme. He has also held discussions with the Pilots National Pension Fund whose board of management has agreed to make available £15 million from the fund's surplus towards the cost of early retirement.

Mr. Davidson has now reported that he has been able to secure the agreement in principle of the United Kingdom Pilots Association (Marine) and of the British Ports Association to terms which he has drawn up; however, the General Council of British Shipping has not been prepared to agree them.

Under the terms proposed by Mr. Davidson, any pilots over the age of 50 whose services were not required would receive a lump sum payment equivalent to one year's recommended level of earnings set for 1984 for his district under the former Letch agreement, increased by RPI until the scheme takes effect. Payments in districts not formerly covered by the Letch agreement would be related to the equivalent earnings for 1984, subject to the same increases. For pilots over the age of 60, the sum would be reduced by one-fifth for each year by which the pilot exceeded the age of 60. I understand that the rules of capital gains tax will apply to the lump sum payments.

As regards pension arrangements, Mr. Davidson has reported that although the board of management of the PNPF had taken no decision as to the precise benefits to be applied to individuals, they had prepared a scheme under which surplus pilots aged 55 and over would be able to retire with an immediate pension determined on the basis that:

i the abatement factor on the pensions of those retiring early applied under the normal PNPF rules would be removed;

ii credits of $^{1}/_{60}$ per year to cover the years to age 60 and, for those due to retire at 65 or over double credits to age 65 would be added;

iii pre-membership service credits of ½ per cent per month would be added in respect of expected service from age 60 to 65 (with a maximum of 30 per cent);

iv the maximum additional credits under ii and iii above would be $^{15}/_{60}$ per man and the Inland Revenue limit on the size of pension would of course apply.

Any pilots aged between 50 and 55 who are surplus to requirements would receive similar benefits save that the abatement factor referred to in (i) above of ½ per cent. per month would apply. Mr. Davidson has advised me that in his view the sum allocated by the PNPF would be adequate to meet the early retirement on this basis of such pilots as are surplus when the new legislation takes effect, and also any further surpluses over the ensuing three years.

I know that some may regard the lump sum and pension terms set out above as generous, and it is indeed unusual for such payments to be made to people who are classified as self-employed. However, in view of the fundamental change which our proposed legislation will cause to the circumstances and expectations of many pilots, I accept that there is an obligation to ensure that they are fairly treated, and it is my intention that the statutory scheme to be introduced in association with the new legislation will provide for compensation on the basis which the representatives of the pilots and of the harbour authorities have now agreed.

I am grateful to Mr. Davidson for his efforts in bringing forward these proposals.

SCOTLAND

Geriatric Beds (Occupancy)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the rate of occupancy of geriatric beds in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The rates of occupancy are as follows:

	30 September 1984	30 September 1985 (provisional)
Strathclyde	94·6	94·3
Scotland	95·2	95·2

Nurses (Establishment Levels)

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those hospitals in Scotland which have applied the Aberdeen formula for deciding nursing levels and the extent, in percentage terms, to which they applied it in each case; and what were the results compared with the actual nursing establishments in each hospital.

Mr. John MacKay: In September 1984 89 per cent. of hospitals in Scotland had calculated nurse staffing requirements for some or all specialties by means of the Aberdeen formula. Fifty-eight per cent. of hospitals had then used the formula as the basis for funded nurse staffing establishments, but 46 per cent. of hospitals had adopted the results only in part. The following table shows those hospitals where the percentage of the formula used is known. The actual nursing establishments before the application of the formula are not known.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those hospitals in Scotland which have applied the Telford consultative approach for deciding nursing levels and the extent, in percentage terms, to which they applied it in each case; and what were the results compared with the actual nursing establishments in each hospital.

Mr. John MacKay: In 1984, 26 hospitals in Scotland had calculated nurse staffing requirements for some or all specialties by means of the Telford consultative approach. Of these, nearly half had used the approach as the basis for funded nurse staffing establishments but only three hospitals specified the percentage of the Telford formula results which they had used. These are as follows. The actual nursing establishments before the application of the Telford consultative approach are not known.

Women's Refuges

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what information he has as to how many women live in women's refuges in Scotland at present: and what was the figure for each year since 1979;

(2) what information he has as to how many women at present living in women's refuges in Scotland have been living there for 10 weeks or more in each of the local authority areas in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is not held centrally.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will make a statement on his Department's guidelines to local authorities in Scotland for re-housing women who have left home due to domestic violence, and who are living in temporary accommodation.

Mr. Ancram: The allocation of council houses is primarily the responsibility of the housing authority concerned, and the Scottish Development Department has not issued guidelines on this specific subject. The 1980 report by a sub-committee of the Scottish Housing Advisory Committee on the "Allocation and Transfer of Council Houses" made general recommendations for local authority allocation policies and included, at chapter 4, advice on housing separated spouses. In addition the Housing (Scotland) Bill makes amendments to the Tenants' Rights Etc (Scotland) Act 1980 which will prevent discrimination against applicants for council housing on the grounds of their marital status.

Radioactivity

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the locations of the three areas of highest rainfall in Scotland for which samples of rainfall have been analysed to detect levels of radiation since the Chernobyl disaster; and if he will publish a full record of the date and time of readings, and the level of each of the various forms of radioactivity which were recorded, together with the normal level and the lower emergency reference level for each such type of radioactivity.

Mr. Ancram: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the first check was made in Fife for radiation levels after the Chernobyl incident.

Mr. Ancram: As part of the monitoring put in hand in Scotland in connection with the Chernobyl accident, measurements were made in Fife of the gamma dose rate and of the concentration of radioactivity in air from 28 April and 1 May respectively.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many producers eligible for hill livestock compensatory allowances had not received full payment of their 1986 balances by 22 May.

Mr. John MacKay: Claims are still being received, but on the basis of last year's experience we expect about 19,000 applications in total. By 22 May, full payment had been made to 12,646 producers. A further 1,636 payments will be made in the week commencing 26 May, leaving payments to be made to some 4,700 producers, most of whom have, of course, already received 75 per cent. of their entitlement. The majority of outstanding payments will be made within the next three weeks.

WALES

Housing

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list showing for each of the housing authorities in Wales (a) the total income they have received in each of the past six years from the sale of council houses, (b) the money from such sources that each local authority has spent up to the latest date for which this information is available, (c) the residual balance of funds from the sale of council houses held by those councils on that date and (d) the amount of money from these sources each council will be allowed to spend or commit during the present financial year.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is as follows:

(a) The income received by each local authority from the sale of council houses for the financial years 1980-81 to 1984-85 is given in the following table. The comparable information for 1985-86 is not yet available.

(b) and (c) This information is not held centrally.

(d) This information is not available since precise cash figures are not held centrally however during the present financial year each council will be allowed to enhance its capital spending allocation by the addition of 15 per cent. of the value of any accumulated capital receipts which have not already been used in this way.

Senior House Officer Vacancies

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of senior house officer vacancies in ear, nose and throat in Wales, together with the mean, median and mode of the number of days that the vacancy has remained unfilled;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report, the number of senior house officer vacancies in ophthalmology in Wales, together with the mean, median and mode of the number of days that the vacancy has remained unfilled;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of senior house officer vacancies in anaesthetics in Wales, together with the mean, median and mode of the number of days that the vacancy has remained unfilled;

(4) if he will publish in the Official Report, the number of senior house officer vacancies in trauma in Wales, together with the mean, median and mode of the number of days that the vacancy has remained unfilled.

Mr. Mark Robinson: This information is not available centrally.

Hospitals (Statistics)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those hospitals in Wales that have, during the last two years, reduced night-time, emergency or casualty cover in (a) ophthalmology, (b) anaesthetics, (c) trauma and (d) ear, nose and throat, giving the reason as shortage of specialist staff.

Mr. Mark Robinson: This information is not held centrally.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the report on facilities for radiotherapy treatment for carcinoma of the cervix to be available.

Mr. Mark Robinson: A review of the provision of radiotherapy treatment in South Wales is presently being undertaken and I expect to have the results within the next three months.

Dwyfor District Council

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to how many complaints have been received by the local government Ombudsman in Wales concerning alleged maladministration by Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor; and how many of these were upheld.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have no information about the numbers of complaints against individual local authorities. The information that the hon. Member seeks would be available from the Commissioner for Local Administration in Wales who is independent of Central Government.

Inatrogenesis

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the numbers of patients admitted to hospital in Wales as a result of inatrogenesis.

Mr. Mark Robinson: This information is not available centrally.

Radiation Monitoring

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the locations of the two areas of highest rainfall in Wales from which samples of rainfall have been analysed to detect levels of radiation; and if he will publish a full record of the date and time of readings, and of the level of each of the various forms of radioactivity which were recorded, together with the normal level and the lower emergency reference level for each such type of radioactivity.

Mr. Mark Robinson [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 39]: The information for iodine 131 and caesium 137, radiologically the most significant radionuclides found in British rainwater following the Chernobyl accident, from samples taken during May at the Wylfa and Trawsfynydd nuclear power stations is as shown in the following table, expressed in becquerels per litre:

PRIME MINISTER

Quangos

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Prime Minister (1) if she will list the quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations established by Her Majesty's Government;

(2) how many quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations have been abolished since 1979.

The Prime Minister: From 1979 to April 1985, 756 non-departmental public bodies (quangos) have been abolished, rationalised or substantially reduced. In the same period 242 bodies have been created. The net reduction is therefore 514. Listed below are those bodies created since April 1983. Similar information for earlier years was not compiled centrally and could now only be reconstructed at disproportionate cost.

Family Policies

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Prime Minister if she will list those policies implemented by her Government in each year since 1979 which are designed to fulfil the commitment of the Government to support the traditional family as the fundamental unit of society.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) on 20 February, at columns 263-65.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister what representations she has received from ACTS (Against Channel Tunnel Schemes) relating to the proposed Channel tunnel; what reply she has sent; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Transport has received a letter from ACTS and will reply in due course.

Korea

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if the question of human rights, democracy and the peaceful re-unification of Korea was discussed on her recent visit to Korea; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes. I did discuss progress towards fuller democracy and peaceful reunification during my visit to the Republic of Korea from 2-4 May. I had talks with the President and Prime Minister and met other prominent Koreans. I also visited the demilitarised zone between south and north and laid wreaths at the Korean and United Nations cemeteries, and at the memorial to the Glorious Glosters.

ENERGY

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement as to the comparative safety performance of advanced gas-cooled reactors and Magnox nuclear reactors; and what equivalent information he has about the RBMK reactor systems of the type used at Chernobyl and about the comparative arrangements for the containment within these different reactor types of a failure of the nuclear component of the plant.

Mr. Goodlad: The Magnox and AGR stations operating in the United Kingdom have an excellent safety record. There has been no incident involving significant radiological hazard to the public in the 29 years since the commissioning of the first Magnox station. They are regularly inspected by the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate of the HSE.

No equivalent information is available on the safety record of the RBMK system used at Chernobyl, which is quite different in design from any reactor in use or proposed for use n the United Kingdom. I am advised that in Magnox Reactors, which have strong primary containments, the coolant is a gas, which never becomes more than mildly radioactive and secondary means for containing coolant in the event of a leak have been judged unnecessary. Any water-cooled reactor proposed for licensing in the United Kingdom would require not only a strong primary containment but also an adequate secondary containment to prevent the escape of radioactive coolant to the environment. The Chernobyl RBMK reactor appears to have had some containment, both of reactor and for escaped coolant, but of inadequate strength.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the extent to which the Magnox reactors and the advanced gas-cooled reactors at Hinkley Point, Trawsfynydd, Heysham and Hunterston meet those of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate's safety standards which have been introduced since those reactors were first constructed.

Mr. Goodlad: In the United Kingdom, the operation of commercial nuclear power stations is regulated by a comprehensive set of regulations. The responsibility of ensuring that nuclear power stations are safe rests with the licensees, within the terms of the site licences issued by the Health and Safety Executive. The Nuclear Installations Inspectorate of the HSE carries out a continuous programme of assessment and inspection to ensure that each station is operated in accordance with the conditions attached to the site licence. In addition to this continuous programme of assessment the NII has required the operators of the Magnox nuclear power stations to carry out long-term safety reviews of their stations at about 20 years' operating life. The objectives of these long-term reviews are to confirm that the stations are safe for continued operation; to identify any potential life-limiting factors; and to compare the installations with modern safety standards in order to determine if any improvements should be introduced. The long-term safety reviews of the Magnox power stations at Hinkley Point, Trawsfynydd and Hunterston are being carried out by their licensees at present and the results of the reviews will be examined by the NII. The conclusions will be published in due course.

The AGR power stations at Hinkley Point, Heysham and Hunterston are or modern design with advanced safety features and there is no immediate need to re-examine their standards.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many of Britain's Magnox and advanced gas-cooled reactors have facilities for complete secondary containment.

Mr. Goodlad: Britain's Magnox reactors, which are gas-cooled, and advanced gas-cooled reactors have strong primary containments. Secondary means for containing coolant in the event of a leak have been judged unnecessary because the gas never becomes more than mildly radioactive.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library a copy of the safety assessment of a nuclear reactor of the type akin to that at Chernobyl.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall place in the Library of the House a copy of the Report "The Russian Graphite Moderated Channel Tube Reactor" NPC(R)1275 prepared in 1976 by the Nuclear Power Company Limited, predecessor of the present National Nuclear Corporation Limited.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many people and how many children under five and under 18 years, respectively, live within five, 10, 25 and 50 miles, respectively, of power generating nuclear reactors.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall reply to the hon. Member with available information as soon as possible.

Berkeley Nuclear Power Station

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy when the 20-year safety review on Berkeley nuclear power station will be completed.

Mr. Goodlad: The CEGB's long term reviews of Berkeley nuclear power station are complete apart from a few remaining sections which are expected to be submitted shortly to the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive for consideration.

Power Output

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the maximum power output available in the United Kingdom assuming use of all existing power stations by means of (i) coal (ii) oil/gas (iii) nuclear and (iv) hydro, (b) the additional power projected as available in the feasibility studies tidal barrages at (1) Severn (2) Mersey (3) Solway and (4) Morecambe and (c) the average and maximum demands for power in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

(a) Plant capacity of the public electricity supply industry at the end of 1985

	Capacity Megawatts sent out
(i) Coal fired stations	36,672
(ii) Oil/gas*	14,354

Dungeness B Power Station

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 336, what has been the output of each reactor at Dungeness B in MW hours in each year since commissioning.

Mr. Goodlad: Total output from Dungeness B reactor 1, which was synchronised to the grid in April 1983, has been:

Megawatt hours

	Output
April to December 1983	350,000
January to December 1984	620,000
January to December 1985	2,430,000
January to April 1986	690,000

Since this reactor was commissioned on 1 April 1985 total output has been 2,500,000 Megawatt hours.

Reactor 2 is expected to be commissioned during 1986. Total output since synchronisation on 29 December 1985 until end April 1986 was 510,000 Megawatt hours.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism

Mr. Ray Powell asked the Paymaster General what information he has about the number of proposed visits to the United Kingdom in the current year by tourists from (a) the United States of America and (b) other countries which have been cancelled since 15 April; what information he has as to the principal reasons given for these cancellations; and what estimate is available to him of their cost to the United Kingdom tourist industry and to the United Kingdom economy.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no detailed or reliable information on the number of cancellations by prospective tourists since 15 April. Some sources in the industry have suggested that the number of tourists from the United States of America could be down this year by around 15 per cent. as a result of growing fears since the beginning of the year of terrorist activity and other causes such as exchange rates. Such a reduction could lead to a drop in tourist spending in the United Kingdom of around 3 per cent. I can assure the hon. Member that we are taking every opportunity to convey the message to prospective visitors that Britain is a safe destination. There is no evidence of any cancellations from any other countries at present.

Youth Training

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General what research work his Department and the Manpower Services Commission have undertaken, giving references to published work, on the operation and effect of the YTS, the community programme and the young workers scheme.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is:

COMMUNITY PROGRAMME

MSC Research

Surveys of CP participants and ex participants, were undertaken Autumn 1983, Spring 1984 and Autumn 1984. Partial follow-up surveys of CP participants were carried out in 1984 and 1985.

Social and Community Planning Research have published one report "Survey of CP Participants 1984". (SCPR ref: 01/797).

A survey of CP sponsors was undertaken in 1984. Copies of reports on the other surveys have been made available to the House of Commons Library but not published elsewhere.

The report of an efficiency review conducted by the Cabinet Office entitled "Value for Money in the Community Programme" was published on 14 April 1986 and is available free direct from the Department. An article entitled "After the Community Programme — Results of the First Follow-Up Study" was published in the Employment Gazette in January 1985.

The MSC has also produced a report entitled "Training Linked to the Community Programme" outlining good practice, copies of which are available from the MSC.

YOUNG WORKERS SCHEME

DE Research

Young Workers Scheme Survey of Employers 1983
Young Workers Scheme Survey of Employers 1985
Young Workers Scheme Survey of Participants 1985

All three surveys were conducted for the Department by Social and Community Planning Research. A continuous postal survey of employers claiming payments was managed within the Department.

A summary of this material has been published in the Employment Gazette of May 1986 in an article entitled "Evaluation of the Young Workers Scheme".

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he will show, for each year or operation of the youth opportunities scheme and the YTS, the level of the allowance payable under the schemes, both in current prices and in constant 1986 prices.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Expressed in terms of prices in March 1986 the following shows the level of allowance each year from April 1978 until March 1986:

	Allowance £	Allowance at 1986 prices £
April 1978	19·50	38·24
March 1979	20·55	37·24
March 1980	23·50	35·56
March 1981	23·50	31·58
March 1982	25·00	30·44
March 1983	25·00	29·09
March 1984	25·00	27·64
March 1985	26·25	27·36
March 1986	27·30	27·30

With the introduction of two year YTS, trainees in their second year of training will receive an enhanced allowance of £35·00. Allowance levels must reflect the fact that trainees are only learning, and YTS provices substantially upgraded training compared with the youth opportunities programme.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he will indicate the number and proportion of workers on (a) the YTS scheme and (b) the young workers scheme, who are engaged in wages council sectors.

Mr. Lang: I regret that the information requested is not available for young people engaged on YTS.

A survey conducted by Social and Community Planning Research (SCPR) in 1985 found that 33 per cent. of those employed under support of the young workers scheme were covered by a wages council or board that set statutory minimum rates of pay. However the survey asked about "statutory" bodies but replies included many references to non-statutory bodies.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he will publish available information about the earnings of those who remain in employment following the completion of a place under the YTS or support under the young workers scheme.

Mr. Lang: The Manpower Services Commission conducts a regular follow-up survey of leavers from YTS three months after they leave their programmes. The latest results are for young people who left YTS in November 1985. The survey gives the following information on the weekly net take home pay of leavers during the period April to November 1985, who were in full-time employment at the time of the survey.

YTS leavers in the period April to November 1985

Weekly take home pay	*Percentage of leavers
Up to £20	0·1
£20 to £40	24·2
£40 to £60	55·8
£60 to £80	16·3
£80 to £100	2·7
£100 and over	0·8

* In full-time employment at time of survey.

From research carried out by social and community planning research (SCPR) for my Department, those youngsters who were employed after young workers scheme support had ended, had received average increases of 30 per cent. over their pay at the time of entry. However this evidence is based on a very small sample of youngsters.

Wages (Arrears)

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table showing for each year from 1979 to 1985 (a) the amount of arrears assessed by the Wages Inspectorate as due to workers covered by wages councils but not recovered, (b) the amount where recovery was not considered practicable, (c) these amounts expressed as percentages of the arrears actually recovered, (d) the number of workers in respect of whom arrears were assessed but not recovered, (e) the number of workers for whom recovery of arrears was not considered practicable and (f) both numbers as percentages of the number of workers to whom arrears were actually paid.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is given in the following table:

		1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
(a) Arrears assessed but not recovered	£	143,246	195,597	263,980	425,110	556,243	559,037	719,694

† per cent.

Home Workers

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he will publish for each year from 1979 to 1985 the total number of home workers in respect of whom the Wages Inspectorate examined employers records; and in how many cases the accuracy of the employers' records were checked, the total number of home workers found to be underpaid and the total amount of arrears collected for home workers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is given in the following table.

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Homeworkers whose pay was checked	3,570	2,565	1,665	1,358	1,974	1,883	1,606
Homeworkers found to have been underpaid	101	160	91	113	59	122	21
Arrears paid £s	4,065	5,326	4,815	10,221	8,325	25,814	2,242

In every establishment inspected where work was given out a sample of homeworkers was selected for visit to confirm the accuracy of the employers' records.

Wages Orders

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he will publish for each year from 1979 to 1985 the total number of establishments where employers were found by the Wages Inspectorate not to have displayed copies of wages orders as a percentage of the establishments visited by the inspectorate.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is given in the following table.

Establishments not displaying wages council notices as a percentage of establishments visited.

Restart Courses

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General on what basis the 30 providers were chosen for the pilot restart courses.

Mr. Lang: In choosing providers of restart courses in the nine pilot areas, the Manpower Services Commission sought a wide variety of providers from both the public and the private sector.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General if the providers in the pilot schemes for restart courses include any individuals with particular experience in work with the ethnic minorities.

Mr. Lang: Information about individual tutors on restart courses is not held by the Manpower Services Commission but most training providers in areas where there are significant ethnic minority populations have such experience.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General if the restart scheme provides opportunities of training and benefit for the various constituent sections of the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Lang: The restart programme will provide opportunities for all categories of long-term unemployed people.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what short courses are being offered under the restart scheme; and how they relate to those which are offered within the Manpower Services Commission-funded wider opportunity scheme.

Mr. Lang: The short courses offered under the restart scheme are of one week's duration with a further drop-in facility of one day per week for up to 13 weeks. The courses will concentrate on re-motivation and re-assessment of skills, strength and potential as well as improving techniques of job search, application and interview. They are shorter than most courses run under the wider opportunities training programme although the two programmes have many shared aims. Every effort will be made to develop the relationship between the two programmes in the light of operational experience.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General if the Manpower Services Commission will give consideration to providing special provision for the needs of minority groups in the restart scheme.

Mr. Lang: The Manpower Services Commission's policy is to make its services available equally to all regardless of sex, ethnic origin or disability. In developing its programmes the Commission aims to target provisions in areas of greatest need and provide courses particularly for ethnic minorities where they have special needs or where they are under-represented in particular skills or occupations.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what consideration has been given, when providing for the needs of minority groups within the long-term unemployed in the restart schemes, in respect of (a) location, (b) course content, (c) training methods and (d) choice of training agency.

Mr. Lang: Jobcentres are being asked to take account of the needs of minority groups in the provision of restart courses. Location, course content, training methods and choice of training agency are all important.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what arrangements the Manpower Services Commission has made in Lancashire with local training providers to meet the increased demand for training arising from the introduction of the restart scheme.

Mr. Lang: It is too early to predict the exact number of people who may be advised to consider training as a result of participation in the restart scheme. However, I expect that referrals for training can be contained within the expanding range of adult training provision currently supported in Lancashire by the Manpower Services Commission. Officials of the Manpower Services Commission's training and employment services divisions will be monitoring closely the relationship between people counselled under the restart programme and intake both to the restart course and other training schemes to ensure that adequate training opportunities are provided for the people concerned.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General how special provision has been made in Lancashire for the increase in numbers of ethnic minority adults requiring training as a result of the restart scheme.

Mr. Lang: No special provision has been made. The Manpower Services Commission will closely monitor general and specific training needs stemming from the extension of restart to see how they are being met by existing provision and whether any additional arrangements should be made. The MSC will continue to encourage take up of suitable training by ethnic minority or other groups.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what analysis his Department made, prior to introducing the restart scheme, of previous experience and special needs relating to minority groups within the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Lang: The restart programme was piloted in nine areas of the country. Two of these areas, Ealing and Huddersfield have significant ethnic minority populations. The national restart programme is based on experiences learned from the pilots.

Short Training Courses

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General (1) how the £50 million which has been made available to the Manpower Services Commission to fund short training courses through local training providers in 1986-87 will be distributed;

(2) of the additional £50 million to be allocated to the Manpower Services Commission to fund short training through local training providers, what percentage is to be allocated to the north-west.

Mr. Lang: The money made available to the Manpower Services Commission will be distributed roughly in proportion to the numbers of long-term unemployed people in each part of the country and the demand that might arise for such courses in each locality.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what short training courses under the restart programme are being funded in Lancashire; and who are the local training providers.

Mr. Lang: Negotiations are currently taking place throughout Lancashire with potential providers. No contracts have yet been signed.

Area Manpower Boards

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General if he will now take steps to gather information as to how many members of area manpower boards are registered unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I see no useful purpose in collecting such information since employment status is not necessarily a factor in nominating people to area manpower boards (AMBs).

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hickmet asked the Paymaster General which constituency in Great Britain has reduced its unemployment level the most in absolute terms between April 1984 and April 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. Between April 1984 and April 1986 the number of unemployed claimants in the Glanford and Scunthorpe parliamentary constituency fell by 568. This comparison is marginally affected by the change in the method of compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986.

Ex-Mineworkers (Circular)

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General if he will now withdraw his Department's circular dated 15 April, entitled "Ex-mineworkers — Enquiries about Claiming Unemployment Benefit"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 19 May at column 48.

We have no plans to withdraw this circular.

Income Maintenance Payments and Allowances

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Paymaster General if he will update to 1984-85 and 1985-86 his answer to the hon. Member for Kensington, Official Report, 14 February 1985, columns 248-50, showing the costs in those years of all the income maintenance payments and allowances for which his Department is responsible, distinguishing between the different schemes, showing the rates of allowance paid, and also the full costs of each scheme, with sub-totals for administration.

Mr. Lang: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Duty Solicitor Scheme

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Attorney-General what are the reasons for the delay in the implementation of the local 24-hour duty solicitor schemes in the Metropolitan police area.

The Attorney-General: There are substantial variations in coverage of the 24-hour scheme within the Metropolitan Police Area. South of the Thames coverage is 75 per cent. overall; in the two regions north of the river it is 15 per cent. and 31 per cent. overall respectively. This is due to a shortage of solicitors in these areas prepared or available to participate. I understand that the Law Society, which is responsible for administering the scheme, is now confident that it is making substantial progress in overcoming these difficulties.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Furnishings (Inflammability)

Mr. Rathbone asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has completed his review of regulations concerning the inflammability of furniture and furniture coverings sold in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The review is almost completed and I shall be making a statement shortly.

Telecommunications (Consumer Representations)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the operation of the regional and local consumer representation and consultation set up under the terms of the Telecommunications Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Yes. The Advisory Committees on Telecommunications are providing useful advice on the consumer interest to the Director General of Telecommunications. The local advisory committees are active in pursuing local consumer problems with the public telecommunications operators and are currently taking part in surveys of call boxes and domestic telephones organised by the Office of Telecommunications.

Regional Aid

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much regional aid in total has been paid or committed to how many companies, firms or individuals in the Glanford and Scunthorpe parliamentary constituency since June 1983; and what effect this has had on unemployment.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Information is available on a constituency basis for the new regional development grant scheme (RDG II) and regional selective assistance (RSA) but for the old regional development grant scheme (RDG I) figures relate to the Scunthorpe employment office area. The number of companies in receipt of RDG I payments is not available. The information relating to the period since June 1983 is as follows:

Payments of RDG I in amounts over £25,000 (£ thousands)	11,478
RDG II Number of companies	83
Value of payments (£ thousands)	2,130
RSA Number of offers	18
Value of offers (£ thousands)	3,364

Only RDG II and RSA grants are related to jobs. The number of new jobs created or to be created as a result of the above projects amount to over 1,600.

Krugerrands

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to make arrangements to identify Krugerrands separately from other imported gold coins.

Mr. Butcher: At present, I have no plans to separate Krugerrands from other gold coins in the "Overseas Trade Statistics."

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Wool

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is able to announce the guaranteed price for wool for the 1986-87 marketing year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: Together with the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, I have reviewed the state of the wool market and prospects for the 1986 clip. When last year we increased the wool guarantee by 9p/kg to 129p/kg, the price of British wool stood at about 143p/kg, well above the new level of the guarantee. The longer-term prospects for wool also looked good. In the event, however, this situation lasted only a few months. As sterling strengthened against the major wool trading currencies, the auction prices for British wool fell and prices are now 22 per cent. lower than a year ago. As a result, the deficit in the Board's stabilisation fund (which had been reduced from £18·8 million to £8·6 million between December 1983 and July 1986) has risen again, and now stands at £12·9 million. Further Exchequer advances to the fund will also be necessary until the Board's remaining stocks of wool from the 1985 clip have been sold.

My colleagues and I are however aware of the need to provide stability in producer returns and an adequate incentive to maintain and improve the quality of British wool. We have therefore decided that the guarantee should be maintained at its present level of 129p/kg for the 1986 clip. For the future however producers should recognise that, until there has been a substantial reduction in the deficit in the stabilisation fund, they should not look for any increase in the level of the guarantee.

Food From Britain

Mr. Harris asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future structure of Food From Britain.

Mr. Jopling: The current Agricultural Bill, when enacted, will provide for the maximum membership of the FFB council to be expanded from 15 to 21. Within the new limit, and after consultation with the interests concerned, I envisage a restructuring of the council in September when many current appointments expire. The new council would include appropriate representation of the farmers' unions and of food manufacturers, a representative of each of the milk, meat and cereals sectors and of retailers and also others with particularly relevant qualifications. In addition it is widely agreed that the work of FFB in the home market, in the export market, and for co-operation should be supervised by three Boards appointed by the council, chaired by a member of it, and composed of individuals expert in the area in question.

Milk

Mr. Alexander asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much milk and milk products New Zealand exported to the United Kingdom which originated in countries other than New Zealand or the United Kingdom, in the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Gummer: None in the years 1983 to 1985. But after arrival in the United Kingdom some of the butter imported from New Zealand is blended with other butters for marketing under the Acorn label. I understand that United Kingdom butter is frequently used in this blend, but that butter from elsewhere in the European Community may be included from time to time.

EC Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will bring up to date, including the forecast outturn for 1986, the table published in the Official Report in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Great Grimsby dated 9 May 1985, Official Report, column 500, concerning the share of the EEC budget taken by the guarantee section of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund.

Mr. Gummer: The percentage share of total Community expenditure taken by the guarantee section of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund since 1984 is as follows:

	per cent.
1984	70
1985	*70
1986	†63

* Budget

† Budget adopted by the European Parliament

Final outturn figures for total expenditure in 1985 are not yet available. The Commission are expected to propose a supplementary and amending budget for 1986 which would reduce the above figure to 62 per cent.

Cereals

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list in the Official Report the measures which have been taken to curb protection since the written reply dated 11 April 1984, Official Report, column 334, concerning the effect of the EEC budget settlement on the production of cereals, the production and consumption figures for 1984 and 1985 together with the forecast for this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Since April 1984 a number of measures have been taken in the Community to curb the overproduction of cereals. Details of these measures are contained in notes on the outcome of the 1985 and 1986 CAP price settlements which have been deposited in the Library of the House.

Cereals production and consumption figures are given in the table below:

EC-10 total cereals—(million tonnes)

	August to July
	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86 (forecast)*
Production	123·7	151·3	160·7
Consumption	113·2	117·4	141·9

* EC-12.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Evennett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussons his Department has held with the promoters of the Channel fixed link concerning the control of rabies and what preventive measures have so far been agreed.

Mrs. Fenner: Several meetings have taken place at official level between the Ministry and representatives of Eurotunnel, the promoters of the channel fixed link. In these discussions we have set out the physical and operational requirements to minimise disease risk. These cover the detailed specifications relating, for example, to sealed trains, grids and disinfestation procedures. The promoters have agreed to incorporate these factors in the design of the link.

Data Protection

Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department correctly completed and submitted its applicatins for data protection registration on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: My Department correctly completed and submitted its application for data protection registration on time.

Whiting Fishery

Mr. Beith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is seeking to secure a derogation from the proposed European Economic Community mesh size increase so as to allow the North Sea whiting fishery to continue.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

Urban Housing Renewal (Hyndburn)

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has reached a decision on proposals submitted to the urban housing renewal unit by the borough of Hyndburn; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I hope to make an early decision on this scheme.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of total European regional development fund moneys for each year since 1979 for (a) England, (b) the north-west region, (c) Greater Manchester, (d) the city of Manchester and (e) the borough of Telford.

Mr. Tracey: The following information gives the annual amounts of European regional development fund grant aid in £ sterling awarded to local and public authorities carrying out infrastructure works under the main project-financing section of the Fund:

	(a) England £	(b) North West Region £	(c) Greater Manchester £	(d) City of Manchester £	(e) *Telford £
1979	52,713,360	14,606,290	243,060	45,300	—
1980	33,337,900	7,831,740	4,073,640	3,164,340	—
1981	65,536,005	11,771,100	2,500,800	—	—
1982	84,145,943	25,995,800	6,881,400	2,756,100	—
1983	100,969,300	36,629,860	3,412,200	—	—
1984	180,207,976	46,600,900	22,066,300	10,798,800	—
1985	138,337,071	34,526,897	15,949,964	2,888,964	8,433,500
1986	5,371,150	1,123,350	87,500	—	—

* Telford only became eligible for ERDF grants following the Government's review of regional aid announced in November 1984.

In addition, the total grant awarded under the non-quota section of the fund since its introduction in 1982 is as follows:

(a) England £	(b) North West Region £	(c) Greater Manchester £
15,754,471	9,306,606	1,287,232

Information on annual allocations is not readily available. The city of Manchester and Telford do not qualify for grant under the non-quota measures.

The figures exclude ERDF aid committed in 1985 to the Mersey Basin (£39,123,500) and the Shildon-Newton Aycliffe-Bishop Auckland (£6,580,000) programmes. They also exclude grant awarded under the fund's industry section, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Departmental Circulars (Photocopying)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he gives to local authorities and other bodies on photocopying departmental circulars.

Mrs. Rumbold: My Department does not issue formal advice to local authorities and other bodies on photocopying Departmental circulars. Advice is given as and when the need arises. Most cases are referred to Her Majesty's Stationery Office in whom Crown copyright is vested and who, as Government publishers, issue the majority of my Department's circulars.

Where a circular is available only from my Department, permission to reproduce it is usually give to local authorities and others where the photocopying is required for their use alone. In future, these circulars will be imprinted with a notice to this effect.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy in giving reasons for particular decisions taken by him in relation to rate support grant.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have written to the hon. Member today explaining why I do not think it right to give reasons in declining requests for disregards.

Chess (Funding)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the policy of the Sports Council regarding the funding of chess; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The Sports Council is given powers under its royal charter to foster the knowledge and practice of sport and physical recreation. Chess is not judged by the council to be a physical recreation and is thus not recognised for grant or services. I regard that judgment as one for the council itself to take. Some chess bodies are funded by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Conservative Party Conference (Policing Costs)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to excluding for grant penalty purposes the additional costs incurred, net of police grant, by Lancashire county council for additional policing costs for the 1985 Conservative party conference.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Secretary of State considered Lancashire county council's request that he disregard this item of expenditure for grant abatement purposes in 1985-86, and decided not to agree to its request. He will of course reconsider the representations before signing further supplementary reports for the year in question.

Enterprise Zones (Glanford and Scunthorpe)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many companies have received benefits or are eligible to receive benefits from the three enterprise zones in the Glanford and Scunthorpe parliamentary constituency and at what present cost and projected cost to the Exchequer.

Sir George Young: There were 11 businesses in the enterprise zones in Glanford and Scunthorpe at September 1984, the date of the most recently published survey of enterprise zones. The cost to the Exchequer of rates exemptions for these zones from designation to the end of the financial year 1985-86 was £1,034,519. The projected cost of this exemption for 1986-87 is £1·7 million.

Parking Fines

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide an analysis of the 157 parking fines incurred by the Department of Energy in 1985 and paid by the Department of the Environment; and how many of the fines were in respect of ministerial vehicles.

Sir George Young: During 1985, 155 parking offences occurred in the Millbank/Thorney street area of London. One parking offence occurred at London airport. One parking offence occurred in Knightsbridge. All 157 parking fines were in respect of ministerial vehicles.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide an analysis of the 167 parking fines incurred by the Scottish Office in 1985 and paid by the Department of the Environment; and how many of the fines were in respect of ministerial vehicles.

Sir George Young: During 1985 164 parking offences occurred in Whitehall. Two parking offences occurred in Little College st. W1. One parking offence occurred in Greek street W1. All 167 parking fines were in respect of ministerial vehicles.

Rates

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average amount paid by domestic ratepayers in 1985-86 in (a) Leeds, (b) Sheffield and (c) Bradford.

Mrs. Rumbold: The average unrebated domestic rate bills in 1985-86 were:

Leeds	263
Sheffield	370
Bradford	253

Local Authority Chief Officers (Pay)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the pay scales of local authority chief officers with education responsibilities; when these were last increased and by how much; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs Rumbold: The pay scales of local authority chief officers with education responsibilities are determined from within the salary range agreed by the joint negotiating committee for chief officers of local authorities. Details of these pay scales are available from the local authorities' conditions of service advisory board. The salaries of chief officers were last increased by 5 per cent. from 1 July 1985, with a further increase from 1 April 1986 — calculated on 30 June 1985 levels — of between 1 per cent. and 4·2 per cent. depending on the population range within which the salary is based.

Chernobyl Disaster

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many telephone calls his Department received on the hot line following the Chernobyl disaster.

Mr. Waldergrave: The inquiry unit in my Department received 3,771 calls about the Chernobyl accident between the 7 and 21 May. The busiest day was Thursday 8 May when the unit logged 991 calls.

Industrial Waste

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the importation of polychlorinated biphenyls in the United Kingdom for disposal as industrial waste.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the Government's view it is legitimate to trade internationally in waste materials provided that the disposal proceeds in accordance with United Kingdom controls.

Radiation

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the maximum permitted level of exposure to radiation (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in other countries for which the information is available.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the United Kingdom the nuclear industry works to a target of public exposure one tenth of the 5 milliseivert per annum limit recommended by the ICRP and in the case of disposal sites one fiftieth of the limit. In other countries limits are expressed in different ways but standards of protection are similar.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the total public expenditure on housing in the United Kingdom as a proportion of the gross domestic product in each year from 1976 to the latest year from which figures are available;

(2) what was the total private expenditure on housing in the United Kingdom as a proportion of the gross domestic product in each year from 1976 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his answer, 13 May 1986, c. 428]: Total public expenditure and total private expenditure on housing in the United Kingdom from 1976 to 1984 are shown in the table as percentages of gross domestic product at factor cost. Private expenditure is net of public grants, loans, subsidies (including housing benefit) and tax relief, and includes purchases of houses from public authorities. Public expenditure includes capital formation, grants, loans, and housing benefit; capital formation is shown gross before deducting house sales. The sum of the percentages in any one year does not exactly equal the percentage of total expenditure on housing, public and private, because: (i) expenditure on purchase of houses from public authorities is included in private expenditure but not netted against public expenditure; and (ii) private expenditure is net of tax relief, but tax relief is not treated as being part of public expenditure.

	Private expenditure on housing as percentage of gross domestic product	Public expenditure on housing as percentage of gross domestic product
1976	7·3	3·9
1977	6·9	3·6
1978	6·7	3·4
1979	7·5	3·5
1980	8·1	3·5
1981	8·9	2·6
1982	9·5	2·5
1983	9·0	2·8
1984	9·5	2·8

* Discontinuity between 1982 and 1983 is due to introduction of housing benefit and consequent exclusion of rent from supplementary benefit paid by tenants.

Okehampton Bypass

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take to ensure the South-West water authority has access to all the information from the supplementary soil tests currently being conducted along the proposed route of the Okehampton bypass.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to her answer, 15 May 1986, c. 552.]: I refer the hon. Member to the the reply by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport on 15 May, at column 509 in the Offical Report.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, following the letter of 26 March from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold) to Lady Sayer, what consultations he intends to have with the South-West water authority on the possible contamination by arsenic of the rivers East and West Okement arising from the construction of the Okehampton bypass on the southern route.

Mrs Rumbold [pursuant to her answer, 15 May 1986, c. 552-53]: The quality of the rivers East and West Okement is a matter for the South-West water authority. My officials will maintain liaison with the authority.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the South-West water authority about the possible contamination of the rivers West and East Okement by metals, including arsenic, during the construction of the Okehampton bypass along the southern route.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to her answer, 15 May 1986, c. 553]: Any such discussions are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the correspondence he has had with the South-West water authority on the subject of the metallic contamination of water courses in the vicinity of the southern route of the Okehampton bypass.

Mrs. Rumbold: [pursuant to her answer, 15 May 1986, c. 553.]: There has not been any such correspondence.

Napoleonic Barracks, Modbury

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he hopes to reply to the letter sent by the hon. Member for South Hams to his Department on 23 April, regarding the condition of the barracks wall at Modbury, south Devon;

(2) what steps the Government are taking to ensure the continued preservation of the Napoleonic barracks wall at Modbury, south Devon; and when he hopes to reply to the letter sent by the hon. Member for South Hams on 28 April outlining the current situation.

Mr. Tracey: My hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Planning and Regional Affairs will be replying to the letters shortly. As that reply will make clear, it is for the South Hams district council to take whatever action it considers appropriate (for example, under the Town and Country Planning Acts) to secure preservation of the barracks wall at Modbury.

Data Protection

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department correctly completed and submitted its application for data protection registration on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department's applications for data protection registration, including that for the Property Services Agency, were submitted by the due date following due consultation wih the registrar to ensure acceptability.

Radiation

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the figure laid down by the International Atomic Energy Agency as being the level of radioactivity in milk at which official action is recommended; and to what factors he attributes differences between any of these figures and the relevant figure for the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Fenner: I have been asked to reply.

We are advised by the National Radiological Protection Board that they are not aware of any emergency reference levels published by the International Atomic Energy Agency. The National Radiological Protection Board action levels used by this Department have been derived from recommendations published by the International Commission on Radiological Protection. We have not been officially notified of the levels employed in Denmark and the Netherlands.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what risks to health are posed by natural background radiation; and to what extent this varies in different parts of England.

Mr. Hayhoe I have been asked to reply.

The risk to health from natural background radiation for the country as whole has been estimated to be in the order of one in 100,000 of developing fatal cancer. As the dose to the public from background radiation outdoors in different parts of the country varies by a factor of approximately 10, in theory the risk will vary by the same amount. In practice however, epidemiological studies have not demonstrated that this occurs.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken to ensure that the present accepted levels of whole body exposure to radiation are safe; whether there are any plans to reduce them further; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have been asked to reply.

The levels are based on recommendations made by the International Commission on Radiological Protection and, as such, have international recognition. In the United Kingdom, the National Radiological Protection Board advises Government on the implementation of the ICRP recommendations, and has endorsed its recommendations in this area. In this regard; the effective dose limit for members of the public has recently been reduced from 5 millisievert to 1 millisievert per annum. There are no plans to reduce the present levels further at present, but both the ICRP and the NRPB review their advice whenever new scientific evidence becomes available.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Unemployed Persons (Benefits)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will present a table showing the total payments to, and the number of unemployed people receiving, housing benefit in Great Britain for each year since 1979.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

London Teaching Hospitals (Resources)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what response he has sent to senior surgeons and physicians who have written to him about the effects on the resources available to London teaching hospitals as a result of the transfer of financing from London health authorities to increase National Health Service provision to the midlands and the north; if he will give urgent consideration to their request for resources to prevent the proposed closures and withdrawal of treatment facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have received no such letter.

NHS (Pay)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why the National Health Service management side in the Whitley council for administrative and managerial staff did not make a flat rate offer in response to the trade union's flat rate pay claim.

Mr. Hayhoe: Negotiations are a matter for the Whitley council, and it is for the management side to determine the nature of offers it makes.

Deaths (Statistics)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of deaths among those aged (a) 60 to 69 years, (b) 70 to 79 years and (c) 80 years and over for each complete six-monthly period from 1 April 1976 to 31 March 1986, for England and Wales.

Mr. Hayhoe: The available information is shown in the table.

Number of deaths of persons aged 60 and over by age group and by six-monthly periods, 1 April 1976 to 30 September 1985—England and Wales

Maternal Deaths

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the maternal deaths reported to the confidential inquiry into maternal deaths in England and Wales in 1979 to 1981 were of women of non-caucasian origin; and if he will subdivide these into (a) direct maternal deaths, (b) indirect maternal deaths, (c) fortuitous maternal deaths and (d) late maternal deaths.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information is as follows:

	Number
Direct maternal deaths	38
Indirect maternal deaths	15
Fortuitous maternal deaths	5
Late maternal deaths	6

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the maternal deaths reported to the confidential inquiry into maternal deaths in England and Wales in 1979 to 1981 were of women born in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the Republic of Ireland, (c) the New Commonwealth and Pakistan, (d) India, Pakistan, Bangladesh and Sri Lanka, (e) the West Indies, (f) Africa, (g) Gibraltar, Malta and Cyprus, (h) New Commonwealth countries not included in (d) to (g), (i) foreign countries not included in (a) to (h) and (j) country unstated; and if he will subdivide these into (i) direct maternal deaths, (ii) indirect maternal deaths, (iii) fortuitous maternal deaths and (iv) late maternal deaths.

Mr. Hayhoe: Information about the birthplace of the mothers concerned was not collected as part of the inquiry.

National Radiological Protection Board

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment the National Radiological Protection Board has made of (a) its available staff and (b) its available telephone lines to cope with a nuclear emergency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The National Radiological Protection Board reviews annually the number of staff allocated to each of its areas of work, including emergency arrangements, in order to ensure that it has adequate staff in each area, taking account of priorities and available resources. Staff are taken from other work to meet short-term demands when necessary. The board's headquarters at Chilton is served by 16 telephone lines; additional lines are provided temporarily when required. The board is undertaking a review of its communication facilities.

Health Expenditure, Leeds

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, in respect of the Leeds East district health authority, what were the totals for 1978-79 and 1985-86, respectively, of (a) capital spending in cash and real terms, (b) revenue spending, in cash and real terms, (c) nurses and midwives, (d) doctors and dentists and (e) patients treated.

Mr. Hayhoe: Returns for 1985-86 are not yet available centrally. Figures for 1978-79 are not comparable with those for the years following the 1982 reorganisation because prior to then Leeds eastern health authority formed part of the old Leeds area health authority. My hon. Friend may therefore wish to contact the chairman of Leeds eastern health authority direct for any information he requires.

Heating Additions

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the annual expenditure on estate-rate heating additions for each of the last three years in (a) England and Wales, (b) the Yorkshire and Humberside region and (c) the Calderdale metropolitan borough.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the full information requested is not available. We estimate that current net annual expenditure for Great Britain is of the order of £10 million.

Heating Allowance

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the review of the cold weather heating allowance to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We are considering the provision to help with extra fuel costs during exceptionally severe weather further in the light of last winter's experience. It is, however, too early to say when that consideration will be completed.

Computer Bed Bank (West Midlands)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services further to the answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 135, to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire about the pilot scheme for the introduction of a computer bed bank in the West Midlands regional health authority, if he will indicate (a) when his Department first conveyed its decision to introduce the scheme to the West Midlands regional health authority, (b) when precisely the project co-ordinator was appointed, (c) what were the terms of the project co-ordinator's appointment, (d) what are the qualifications and experience of the project co-ordinator, (e) when doctors in the participating districts were first requested to provide relevant information, (f) the names of the 100 selected practitioners and (g) the names of the selected districts.

Mr. Hayhoe: The possibility of a pilot project was first raised with the region in a letter in April 1982. Interviews for the post of project co-ordinator were held in February 1985 and the successful candidate took up her post in April 1985. I understand that all districts in the region, with the exception of Rugby, will participate in the project by providing information on waiting times. The selected general practitioners are located in the following districts: north Staffordshire, Mid-Staffordshire, east Birmingham, Wolverhampton, Coventry, Herefordshire, Kidderminster, Sandwell, Dudley, west Birmingham, Worcestershire, central Birmingham and Shropshire.

My hon. Friend may wish to write direct to the chairman of the regional health authority for the further information he requires on the project and its co-ordinator.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the number of (a) single payments and (b) urgent needs payments, weekly and one-off, paid to claimants who are (i) under pensionable age and are not required to register for work, (ii) persons under pensionable age required to register for work and (iii) persons over pensionable age; and what is (x) the average rate per 1,000 claimants in i, ii and iii, (y) the average payment made to claimants in i, ii and iii and (z) the number of claimants in i, ii and iii with dependent children for the latest available year at Doncaster, Wath-on-Dearne and Mexborough Department of Health and Social Security offices.

Mr. Major: The table shows, for the categories of claimants specified, numbers of single payments and urgent needs payments made in the year up to 8 April 1986 by the Doncaster and Wath-on-Dearne offices.

The office at Mexborough does not deal with supplementary benefit claimants who are handled by Wath-on-Dearne office.

Comparable information about the number of claimants with dependent children is not available.

* The amounts of urgent needs payments are not recorded.

The number of awards of single payments and urgent needs payments for the year ending April 1986 have been set against the count of live cases in action as at 12 February 1986 to arrive at a rate per 1,000 claimants. These are the latest available figures.

Benefits

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of claimants in receipt of (a) sickness benefit, (b) invalidity benefit/pension, (c) industrial disablement benefit and (d) non-contributory invalidity pension/housewives' non-contributory invalidity pension or severe disablement allowance for the latest available year at Doncaster, Wath-on-Dearne and Mexborough Department of Health and Social Security offices.

Mr. Major: Wath-on-Dearne local office deals only with claims for supplementary benefit. The number of claimants in receipt of sickness and invalidity benefit/pension and severe disablement allowance as at 8 April 1986, and in receipt of industrial disablement benefit as at 11 February 1986 (the latest dates for which information is available) at the Doncaster (East), Doncaster (West) and Mexborough Department of Health and Social Security offices is as follows:—

	Doncaster East	Doncaster West	Mexborough
Sickness and Invalidity Benefit/Pension	3,457	4,805	1,642
Severe Disablement Allowance	513	925	195
Industrial Disablement Benefit	1,556	2,510	747

Separate records are not kept of the number of claimants in receipt of sickness and invalidity benefit/pension.

Child Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the additional cost of awarding child benefit payments to all parents of students in full-time higher education whose children are disqualified from receiving grants by virtue of the level of their parents' income.

Mr. Newton: The additional cost would be £25 million a year, on the basis that entitlement to child benefit would extend beyond the present age limit of 19, and that no provision was made for those students receiving grants tapered according to the level of their parents' income.

General Practitioners

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what has been the total cost to the National Health Service of fees and reimbursements paid to general practitioners in each of the years since 1960;

(2) what information he has concerning (a) the net average annual income and (b) the gross average annual income of general practitioners in each of the years since 1960.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested is as shown in the table. Information for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

* Review Body reports did not identify average net remuneration between 1 April 1966 and 31 March 1971. The rates shown are those assessed as appropriate by the Review Body in its 1971 report. The rates from 1 January 1960 to 31 March 1965 include unspecified amounts from hospital or other official sources.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has concerning the number of general practitioners in each of the regions of England and Wales in each year since 1960, (2) what information he has concerning the average size of general practitioners' patient lists in each of the regions of England and Wales in each of the years since 1960.

Mr. Hayhoe: Time series data showing the number of unrestricted principals and average list sizes separately for England and Wales are published in "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library. The data for 1963 to 1973 are analysed by standard regions (1974 edition); for 1973 to 1977 by standard region and by regional health authority (1978 and 1982 editions); for 1978 onwards by regional health authority only (1982 and 1985 editions).

Cervical Screening

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to increase the general facilities for cervical cytology to reduce the interval between tests from five to three years and to promote improved screening for younger age-groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Improvements to cervical cancer screening programmes have been made a service development priority for all health authorities, including implementation of computerised call and recall systems no later than April 1988 and ensuring that laboratories avoid backlogs. The screening interval and the call and recall of women under 35 are currently under review.

Hospitals (Statistics)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report, a list of those hospitals in England that have, during the last two years, reduced night-time, emergency or casualty cover in (a) ophthalmology, (b) anaesthetics, (c) trauma and (d) ear, nose and throat, where the reason given was shortage of specialist staff.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the information the hon. Member requests is not held centrally.

Overseas Doctors

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many overseas doctors applied for limited registration in order to work in Britain in (a) 1975, (b) 1980, (c) 1984 and (d) 1985; and what is the latest available figure for 1986.

Mr. Hayhoe: The category of limited registration was introduced by the Medical Act 1978 and superseded the former category of temporary registration. Numbers of registrations granted by the General Medical Council are published in its annual reports and the available figures are set out in the table. Other information may be available from the council.

Registration of Doctors qualified Overseas

	1975	1980	1984	1985
Initial grants of limited registration*	1,934	1,682	1,123	1,024
Full registration†	2,741	2,990	1,696	1,869

* Temporary registration in 1975.

† 1980-85 figures exclude doctors qualified in the European Community.

House Officer Vacancies

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of senior house officer vacancies in ophthalmology in each health authority in England, together with the mean, median and mode of the number of days that the vacancy has remained unfilled;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of senior house officer vacancies in anaesthetics in each health authority in England, together with the mean, median and mode of the number of days that the vacancy has remained unfilled;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of senior house officer vacancies in trauma in each health authority in England, together with the mean, median and mode of the number of days that the vacancy has remained unfilled;

(4) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of senior house officer vacancies in ear, nose and throat in each health authority in England, together with the mean, median and mode of the number of days that the vacancy has remained unfilled.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks, as it is not collected centrally.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many recipients of supplementary benefit have (a) claimed and (b) received assistance towards mortgage interest payments in each year from 1976 to 1985; what was the total cost of such payments; and what was the average payment per claimant.

Mr. Newton: Information is not available in the precise form requested. Information on the number of supplementary benefit recipients where the assessment of their benefit includes an allowance towards mortgage interest and or ground rent together with the average weekly payment and the estimated total cost of these payments for each year since 1976 is as follows:

Year	Claimants	Average weekly amount (£)	Total cost (£ million)
1976	123,000	4·22	27
1977	124,000	5·12	33
1978	105,000	4·81	26
1979	98,000	5·96	31
1980	134,000	10·18	71
1981	196,000	12·18	124
1982	235,000	13·87	170
1983	242,000	12·12	150
1984	277,000	n.a.	n.a.
1985	n.a.	n.a.	n.a.

* Provisional.

† Mortgage interest has only been collected as a separate item since 1983. Previous estimates were based on owner occupiers' residual housing costs (that is, after the deduction of rates, water rates, and repairs insurance) and included an element for ground rent.

n.a. Not yet available.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the hospitals within the North-West Thames regional health authority which have been closed since 1980, together with their bed complement and, where sold, the price paid by the purchaser and the percentage of that sum which was allocated to the district health authority concerned.

Mr. Hayhoe: Details of hospitals in the North West Thames regional health authority approved for complete closure between 1 January 1981 and 30 June 1985, the latest date for which information is available centrally, are shown in the table.

I regret that the further information asked for is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of the North West Thames regional health authority for the information.

Family Credit

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the implications of European legislation or of decisions of Community institutions with regard to any decision by Her Majesty's Government as to whether family credit should be payable on a sexually defined basis.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Income Support

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding the transitional protection of supplementary benefit claimants on the introduction of the income support scheme, in particular the proposal to limit such protection to an amount fixed in cash terms and advocating the introduction of provisions to maintain the protection when receipt of benefit is interrupted, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We are considering recent representations received from organisations representing disabled people and the suggestions made by the hon. Member and other hon. Members during the debate in Standing Committee B on 29 April 1986.

Westminster Hospital

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the number of cancer patients treated in the radiotherapy and onocology department at Westminster hospital in each of the last three years; what was the number of clinical and other staff at present employed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that I cannot give the hon. Member all the information he seeks. The information available centrally is given in the table. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Riverside district health authority for the other information requested.

* Not available.

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services until when he proposes to postpone further consideration of the proposals to close Westminster hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Riverside health authority has under review the future pattern of services in the district. It is considering a range of options for the way services are provided and where, including those at present provided by the three district general hospitals (St. Stephen's, Westminster and Charing Cross Hospitals). Decisions on future service provision will be taken in the light of this work. There is no presupposition that one of these three hospitals must close.

Cancer Treatment (North-East Thames)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the proposals in the Coopers and Lybrand review of cancer treatment services for the North-East Thames regional health authority in the light of the material which has been sent to him by the hon. Member for Brent, South.

Mr. Hayhoe: Following full public consultation and consideration of all views expressed, North East Thames regional health authority on 19 May adopted a policy of moving toward a pattern of care for cancer patients focussed on district general hospitals, supported by larger, better equipped specialist cancer treatment centres. The regional health authority has commissioned further research to consider all relevant evidence and will be considering recommendations on the choice of sites for the treatment centres at its July meeting. Any proposals to change the disposition of existing services will be subject to full public consultation under normal National Health Service procedures, including, if the relevant community health council objects, the referral of any final decision to Ministers. If would not therefore be appropriate for Ministers to comment further at this stage.

Health Authorities (Land Sales)

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy on the consideration to be given to the development needs of other health authorities when one health authority plans to sell land located within the boundaries of a neighbouring regional and district health authority.

Mr. Hayhoe: Where surplus property is situated within another region the disposing authority is required to notify both the neighbouring regional and appropriate district heath authorities in case they have a need for it.

South London Hospital for Women

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Social Services (1) whether he has sanctioned the sale on the open market of the site of the South London hospital for women;

(2) whether he had prior notice that the West Lambeth district health authority had notified the Wandsworth health authority of its interest in acquiring part of the site of the South London hospital for women to provide services for patients to be discharged into the community from its own long-stay hospitals designated for closure;

(3) whether he will take steps to ensure full consultation between the Wandsworth and West Lambeth health authorities on the future disposal and use of the site of the former South London hospital for women;

(4) whether he will make a statement on the future use of the site of the former South London hospital for women.

Mr. Hayhoe: The sale of the South London hospital site is subject to normal disposal procedures on the open market and does not require the Secretary of State's involvement. Bids were closed by the South West Thames regional health authority on 16 May. They consulted the other Thames regions on the sale of the site but no interest was registered.

West Lambeth DHA (Land Purchase)

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has of the needs of the West Lambeth district health authority to purchase land to provide services for patients to be discharged into the community from its own long-stay hospitals designated for closure.

Mr. Hayhoe: I am aware of the need of West Lambeth health authority to purchase land to house patients discharged from its long stay hospitals. I understand from the regional health authority that the district is at present involved in negotiations to purchase two local sites on which suitable facilities can be built.

Ambulance Service (London)

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, pursuant to the answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 116, he will make a statement on the future of London's ambulance services following the consideration given to this service by the South West Thames Regional Health Authority.

Mr. Hayhoe: Since February there have been improvements in response and activation times on emergency calls by the London ambulance service. There continue to be problems for the non-emergency service but these too are being tackled and an accelerated recruitment programme has provided 78 more ambulance persons for non-emergency work than in March. Sixty five more recruits are in training and will become operational in the next few weeks. Further interim measures are also in hand. The South West Thames regional health authority is continuing to review the situation.

Primary Health Care

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he proposes to issue a correction slip to paragraph 1 of chapter 4 of the Green Paper on primary care.

Mr. Hayhoe: The error does not affect the conclusions reached and there are no plans to issue a correction slip.

Potassium Iodate

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many potassium iodate tablets would be required to prevent radioactive iodine collecting in the thyroid of five, 10 and 18 year-olds, respectively, at levels of radiation reported within five miles of Windscale in 1957 and within five, 10 and 20 miles of Chernobyl in 1986.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Health Authorities (Revenue Allocations)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each district health authority wholly or partly in Greater London including the special health authorities, the total revenue allocations they have received in each year since 1978-79 at 1979 prices calculated by the National Health Service deflator.

Mr. Hayhoe: It is not appropriate to revalue district health authority expenditure by reference to centrally assessed movements in pay and prices because the composition of that expenditure can differ substantially from the national average. For other information on health authority expenditure in the Greater London area I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 17 December 1985 at columns 145-148.

Prisoners of War (Compensation)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much compensation has been paid to ex-prisoners of war by the Japanese Government to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Under articles 14 and 16 of the treaty of peace with Japan, just over £4·6 million was received from Japan and about £175,000 from Thailand. During the early 1950s about £4·25 million of the total was distributed to some 59,000 former prisoners of war and civilian internees through the then Ministry of Pensions and the International Committee of the Red Cross. Apart from £3,000 held to meet possible future claims, the remainder is now held in a trust fund administered by the Far East (Prisoners of War and Internees) Fund.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the housing benefit paid to (a) a single pensioner under 79 years, (b) a single pensioner over 80 years, (c) a pensioner couple under 79 years, (d) a pensioner couple over 80 years, (e) a single parent, working, with one child under 16 years, (f) a couple, one working, with one child under 16 years, (g) a single parent, working, with two children under 16 years and (h) a couple, one working, with two children under 16 years where the rent and rates are (i) 25 per cent. below average, (ii) average and (iii) 25 per cent. above average and gross weekly income is (x) at the level of unemployment benefit and (y) earnings of £45, £55, £65, £75, £85, £95, £110 and £125 a week, under the current provisions and under the assumptions set out in the technical annex to Cmnd. 9691, including the 20 per cent. contribution to rates; and in each case at what level of income the entitlement to housing benefit would disappear.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 12 May 1986, c. 382]: The information requested is given in the following tables.

Amounts of weekly housing benefit under current scheme

Notes:

1. Average rent is assumed to be £13·80 per week and average rates £5·20 per week.
2. In each case the pensioners' income is assumed to be unearned.
3. No account has been taken of possible entitlement to housing benefit supplement.

Notes:

1. The following average rent and rate levels have been assumed: £15·40 and £6·20 per week respectively for households with 1 child, and £16·50 per week and £6·30 per week for households with two children.
2. Child benefit and one-parent benefit have been assumed to be in payment, in addition to the earnings levels shown in the table, at November 1985 rates. The final column shows the earnings level at which housing benefit is no longer payable for consistency with the rest of the table; child benefit/one-parent benefit should be added to these figures to find the income level at which housing benefit is no longer payable.
3. No account has been taken of possible entitlement to FIS/Family Credit.

Notes:

1. The first two notes to table 1A also apply to this one.
2. November 1985 tax rates and allowances have been assumed and the current minimum benefit level of 50 pence has been used throughout. Pensioners are assumed to be over 65 for income tax purposes. Other assumptions are based on the illustrative figures used in the Technical Annex to Cmnd. 9691 including tapers of 60 per cent. (rents) and 20 per cent. (rates) and a minimum contribution towards domestic rates of 20 per cent.

Notes:

1. The notes to table 1B also apply to this one.
2. November 1985 tax rates and allowances, and national insurance rates have been assumed. The current minimum benefit level of 50 pence has been used throughout. Other assumptions are based on the illustrative figures used in the Technical Annex to Cmnd. 9691 including tapers of 60 per cent. (rents) and 20 per cent. (rates) and a minimum contribution to rates of 20 per cent.
3. The children are assumed to be aged 15 (one child), and 10 and 15 (two children).

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many whole-time equivalent community psychiatric nurses have been employed by each district health authority in each year from 1974 to the latest available date, broken down by (a) registered MNs, (b) RMNS, (c) SEN-M, (d) SEN-MH, (e) others and (f) total in England and Wales.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 12 May 1986, c. 390]: Figures for Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Tables giving such information as is available centrally for England without incurring disproportionate cost have been placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Oil Prices (Cost Savings)

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Defence what cost savings there are to his Department as a result of the fall in oil prices for the 1986-87 Budget.

Mr. Stanley: At current prices the volume of liquid fuel and lubricants provided for in the 1986-87 defence estimates will cost something of the order of £130 million less than was assumed when those estimates were prepared. The outturn will, of course, depend on future price levels, exchange rates and the actual volume purchased. The defence votes are managed as a block cash limit and so savings arising from lower oil prices may be used to offset pay and price increases elsewhere in the defence budget higher than allowed for in the estimates.

6 Airborne Brigade

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future compositon and role of 6 Airborne Brigade.

Mr. Stanley: On current plans the trial of 6 Airmobile Brigade in the airmobile role will finish in 1988, when it is due to commence remechanisation as part of the armoured re-equipment programme in BAOR. We plan to equip the brigade with armoured personnel carriers for both its infantry battalions and to strengthen it by the addition of the new in-theatre armoured regiment, the formation of which was announced in the 1985 "Statement on the Defence Estimates".

Shipbreaking (Naval Contracts)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that naval contracts for shipbreaking are offered only to British yards.

Mr. Lee: No. In view of the higher receipts that are likely to accrue to the defence budget it was decided last year to widen the scope of tendering for shipbreaking contracts to include overseas companies.

Jetfoil

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the evaluation of the use of jetfoils by the Royal Navy included analysis of staff requirements in relation to the use of the jetfoil in various operational modes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Since the acquisition of the jetfoil HMS Speedy in 1979 extensive consideration has been given to her use for various roles stemming from the relevant operational requirements. She is not however considered suitable for any of the roles examined and plans for her disposal by sale are proceeding.

Point Defence Gunnery Anti-Aircraft System

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the provision of point defence gunnery anti-aircraft systems to defend RAF airfields in the United Kingdom and abroad.

Mr. Stanley: The Skyguard anti-aircraft gun system, which was captured in the Falklands conflict, is in service at RAF Waddington. We have at present no plans to purchase any further anti-aircraft gun system for the defence of RAF Airfields.

Nuclear Installations (Evacuation)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the contingency planning for evacuating either the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment Aldermaston or Royal Ordnance Factory Burghfield in the event of serious nuclear mishap.

Mr. Stanley: Emergency plans at both establishments specify the actions to be taken and include the provision for the evacuation of single buildings, groups of buildings or the entire site as appropriate. Such evacuation would be carried out under the control of the establishment directors.

In addition to these plans, comprehensive liaison arrangements exist with outside authorities, including the Health and Safety Executive, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Department of the Environment, the Thames valley police, and Berkshire county council Emergency Planning Department and the local authorities.

Emergency plans are kept under constant review, and are tested and exercised periodically and up-dated as necessary.

HMS Tiger

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the shipbreaking contract for HMS Tiger; and if he will list the companies which have been invited to tender.

Mr. Lee: Tenders are now under consideration for the sale of HMS Tiger for scrap. Limitations on resale and, if the vessel is to be broken overseas, security and political factors will be considered before a contract is selected. Subject to that a contract will be awarded to the highest acceptable bidder.

Tenders were invited from the following:

1. F. A. Ashmead and Sons Ltd., Avonmouth, Bristol.
2. Belcon Shipping and Trading Co. Ltd., Putney, London.
3. Mr. N. Betteridge, B. and B. Marines Ltd., Brotherton, Near Nottingley, West Yorkshire.

Admiralty Shipbreaking Contracts

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total value of Admiralty shipbreaking contracts since 1975.

Mr. Lee: About £5·7 million.

National Crisis (News Broadcasts)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence what agreements exist between his Department and the broadcasting authorities for dealing with news in times of national crisis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Arrangements with the broadcasting authorities are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. I understand, however, that in discussions in the early 1960s the BBC gave assurances that in a time of national crisis it would, without prejudice to its independence of editorial judgement, act with a full sense of responsibility and in consultation with the Government. In their response in Cmnd. 9499 to the Beach report on the protection of military information immediately prior to and during the conduct of operations, the Government agreed that compulsion of the media would be neither practical nor desirable and that voluntary co-operation should be the guiding principle. The Government also accepted that circumstances could arise where additional powers need to be taken for the control of information or special arrangements needed for the live reporting of Parliament. But such matters must be for the Government and Parliament of the day.

SCOTLAND

Labour Statistics

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of (a) persons unemployed and (b) persons employed in the Glasgow travel-to-work area in June 1979; and what are the latest available figures.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In June 1979 the total number of person registered as unemployed in the Glasgow travel-to-work area, as defined prior to the 1984 review of travel-to-work areas, was 53,980. The number of unemployed claimants in April 1986 in the current Glasgow travel-to-work area was 113,579. Information on employment for the same dates is not available; the latest estimate of the number of employees in employment, again for pre-1984 Glasgow travel-to-work area, is 479,700 in September 1981.

Road Accidents (Hospital Treatment)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) men, (b) women and (c) children have been treated in hospital in Scotland for injuries arising out of road accidents during each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. John MacKay: The following table refers to emergency admissions to hospitals in Scotland following motor vehicle accidents in the latest five years for which information is available. Statistics for out-patient attendances resulting from injuries do not separately identify those caused by road traffic accidents.

	Number of Hospital Admissions

Unemployment (Greenock and Port Glasgow)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the latest available unemployment figures for the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow by electoral ward.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The number of unemployed people claiming benefit in the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow by electoral ward on 10 April 1986, the latest date for which information is available, is as follows. This information is also available in the House of Commons Library.

Electoral Ward	Male	Female	All
Port Glasgow East	632	198	830
Port Glasgow South	487	192	679

Hospital Beds

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of beds currently not in use in hospitals in Scotland that have been opened since 1979.

Mr. John MacKay: Comprehensive and up-to-date information is not held centrally in the form requested. Hospital facilties may be built under the major or the minor building programme. While the planned size of hospitals and hospital extensions built under the major building programme and opened since 1979 is known centrally, their commissioning and the current use of beds is a matter for individual health boards, as is the management of the minor building programme.

Town and Country Planning

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to amend the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) (Scotland) Order 1972 in the light of the Property Advisory Board's report on the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) Order 1972, in relation to England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend will consider the need for a revision of the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) (Scotland) Order 1973 in the light of the outcome of the further consultations to be undertaken by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on changes to the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) Order 1972 which were announced in the White Paper "Building Businesses . . . Not Barriers" (Cmnd 9794).

Police Establishment

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the authorised police establishment in Scotland for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is as follows:

Authorised police establishment: Scotland

	Number
31 December 1976	13,163
31 December 1977	13,144
31 December 1978	13,166
31 December 1979	13,274

	Number
31 December 1980	13,259
31 December 1981	13,262
31 December 1982	13,267
31 December 1983	13,321
31 December 1984	13,371
31 December 1985	13,465

Since 31 December 1985, the authorised police establishment has risen to 13,564.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to whether the European Commission official who has made an inspection visit to Scotland in connection with the extension of sheep annual premium to untupped gimmers visited north Sutherland and west Caithness to inspect Lairg type North Country Cheviots and the conditions under which they are produced.

Mr. John MacKay: The visit has been rescheduled for this week. The itinerary includes northern Scotand where Cheviots will be among the breeds inspected.

Bilderberg Conference

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the costs to public funds of the policing of the Bilderberg conference.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 1]: I understand from the chief constable of Tayside police that, excluding the costs of policing inside Gleneagles hotel and its grounds which were reimbursed by the conference organisers, his force incurred costs amounting to just over £57,400 in relation to this conference.

Radioactivity

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish locations of the three areas of highest rainfall in Scotland for which samples of rainfall have been analysed to detect levels of radiation since the Chernobyl disaster; and if he will publish a full record of the date and time of readings, and the level of each of the various forms of radioactivity which were recorded, together with the normal level and the lower emergency reference level for each such type of radioactivity.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his reply, 23 May 1986, c. 346]: It is not possible to predict where rainfall will be highest and the normal practice, which was used in monitoring rainfall over Scotland following the Chernobyl accident, is to sample at representative locations.

Details of the sampling locations were given in the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 21 May at column 228.

Radionuclides detected in rain have included ruthenium 103, ruthenium 106, iodine 131, iodine 132, caesium 134, caesium 137 and barium 140. The more significant in radiological terms are iodine 131 and the radiocaesium nuclides. Details of the three samples showing the highest concentrations of these are given in the following table, together with the lower derived emergency reference levels for these radionuclides. I will arrange for details of the other radionuclides in these samples and in other samples monitored following the Chernobyl reactor accident to be placed in the Library.

The levels of radioactivity due to fallout present in rainfall in the United Kingdom are monitored routinely as part of a joint programme by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) and the Harwell laboratory of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA). Concentrations of caesium 137 reported are generally less than 0·02 becquerel per litre; the shorter lived radionuclides associated with the fallout for the Chernobyl accident are not normally detectable in rainfall.

Voluntary Bodies (Grants)

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the total amount of money offered to voluntary bodies under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 for the financial year 1985-86; and, of this, what amount was capital and what revenue;

(2) if he will list each voluntary organisation that was offered grant assistance under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968, and the title of each project so assisted for 1985-86;

(3) if he will list the amount of capital and the amount of revenue offered under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968, by project, for 1985-86.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 6 May 1986]: The information requested is set out in the table. Grant assistance under section 10(1) of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 was offered in 1985-86 towards expenditure by voluntary organisations on ongoing activities (core expenditure) and towards the costs of specific projects. The table is divided between core expenditure grants; grants for specific mainstream projects; and grants for projects funded under the current care in the community and drug abuse initiatives.

Grant payments in 1985-86 will not equate exactly with offers of grant made in the same year because of the lead time normally occurring between an offer and take up of grant and the standard practice of retaining a small percentage of the amount offered until audited accounts are presented.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what departmental business took a ministerial car to Greek street, W1, in 1985 which led to a parking ticket being issued.

Sir George Young: I have been asked to reply. I shall answer this question shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nissan Cars

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, pursuant to his answer of 19 May, Official Report, column 45, he will raise during exploratory talks with Nissan UK the discrepancy between the 1986 agreed inclusive United Kingdom import and phase 1 Washington assembly quota, and the combined sales targets of all Nissan UK dealers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Nissan UK sales targets are a commercial matter for the company itself, but through its membership of the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders it is a party to the talks between that organisation and the Japanese Automobile Manufacturers Association (JAMA) about the size of the UK new car market, as is the Nissan Motor Company by virtue of its membership of JAMA.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to seek to exempt Bangladeshi clothing imports from any new multi-fibre arrangement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The mandate agreed by the Foreign Affairs Council in March provides for particularly liberal treatment in the MFA for the least developed exporters, including Bangladesh. The Commission has subsequently opened discussions with Bangladesh about arrangements to succeed the present bilateral agreement which expires in December. These discussions are continuing.

BSC and BS (Grants and Loans)

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has of the total amount of aid in grants and loans provided to (a) the British Steel Corporation and (b) British Shipbuilders in respect of their operations in the northern region (i) since 1979 and (ii) since 1983.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Regional Aid

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been spent in regional aid in the northern region since 1983; and how many jobs are estimated to have been (a) created or (b) preserved.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Printing Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the production and employment trends in the United Kingdom printing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the total value of the output of the United Kingdom printing industry in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what is this figure as a percentage of total industrial output in each of those years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Information in respect of the printing and publishing industry (group 475 of the standard industrial classification 1980) is as follows:

Year	Current value of net output £ million	Percentage of total industrial* output Per cent
1981	6,950	4·5
1982	7,980	4·3
1983	8,770	4·1
1984	10,130	4·3
1985	†11,160	†4·2

* Division 1 to 4 of the SIC (1980).
† Provisional.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the basic differences between the means of calculation used in determining trade deficits in manufactures with the European Economic Community as set out in his answers to the hon. Member for Southend, East on 14 May, Official Report, column 473 and on 20 May; which form of calculation reflects most accurately the trade situation; whether his Department uses the overseas trade statistics at the customary form of calculation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The figures quoted in the reply dated 20 May were on the Overseas Trade Statistics (OTS) basis, as the question stipulated; those in the earlier reply were on the balance of payments (BOP) basis.

Detailed monthly trade data are compiled on the OTS basis by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; the value of imports, but not exports, includes the costs of freight and insurance. These figures thus overstate the value of imports compared with exports and the "crude" balances derived from them are affected accordingly—surpluses are smaller and deficits bigger. The insurance and freight charges, where due to non-United Kingdom residents, are transferred to the appropriate headings in the invisibles account when the current account of the balance of payments is compiled.

Where possible, visible trade figures are given on the BOP basis, derived by my Department from the OTS figures, but in less detail. BOP figures of trade with the European Community are available quarterly.

Shotguns (Import)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he plans to take steps to control the import of semi-automatic shotguns; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No, since there are already such controls, the operation of which reflects the provisions concerning possession of these guns in the Firearms Act 1968 and the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981.

Wedgwood (Takeover)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received any recent representations opposing the proposed takeover of Wedgwood by the London International Group.

Mr. Howard: Yes. My right hon. Friend and I have received some representations opposing this proposed takeover, which, in accordance with our normal practice, have been drawn to the attention of the Director General of Fair Trading.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer the proposed takeover of Wedgwood by the London International Group to the Director General of Fair Trading for advice as to reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Howard: The proposed takeover by the London International Group of Josiah Wedgwood and Son Ltd is currently being considered by the Director General of Fair Trading. My right hon. Friend will make his decision on whether the proposal should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for further investigation in the light of advice from the Director General.

Unicol

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when allegations relating to the status and activities of Unicol of Harrow-on-the-Hill as a debt-collecting agency were first notified to the Office of Fair Trading; what investigations and action have taken place; if the validity of that company's application for a licence under the Consumer Credit Act has been re-checked; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The licensing of debt-collecting agencies under the Consumer Credit Act is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading, and I will ask him to write to the hon. Member.

Takeover Bids

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to seek to limit the present spate of opposed takeover bids; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend has powers under the Fair Trading Act 1973 to act to prevent a merger only if it is referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission and the Commission concludes that it would operate against the public interest. Our policy is to make references to the Commission primarily on competition grounds, although this does not rule out making references on other public interest grounds where appropriate. The fact that a merger is contested does not necessarily mean that it raises competition or other public interest issues which justify investigation by the Commission.

British Shipbuilders

Mr. Tony Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the likely level of employment in British Shipbuilders after the postulated cuts; how this compares with the number of workers at the time of nationalisation; and what has been the percentage reduction in employment since nationalisation.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Following the privatisation of the warship building and ship repair yards and its general engineering subsidiaries, British Shipbuilders now comprises merchant ship and engine building companies only. Once the current restructuring programme has been completed, employment in British Shipbuilders is likely to total about 6,500. This compares with 44,800 employed in merchant ship and engine building and 87,300 within the whole of British Shipbuilders at the time of nationalisation, reductions of some 85 and 92 per cent., respectively.

Regional Aid

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what proportion of the total of regional development grants has been paid to firms in the Northern Region in each year since 1979;

(2) what is his estimate of the number of firms in the northern region which have received regional development grant payments since 1979 and have subsequently closed down or announced redundancies; and if he will give an estimate of the number of jobs involved.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

British Steel Corporation

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people were employed by the British Steel Corporation in the northern region for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Shipyards (Aid)

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which of the listed shipyards are in areas with some form of assisted area status and which are outside any such area: Appledore, Ferguson-Ailsa, Govan, NESL, Smith's Dock and Clark-Kincaid.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Appledore is in a non-assisted area. The other yards listed fall within assisted areas.

Compensation (Defence) Act 1939 (Claims)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations have been made to his Department by other interested parties about the claim for compensation for the Wolverhampton group of companies under the Compensation (Defence) Act 1939.

Mr. Howard: Representations have been made to my Department by or on behalf of the former managing director and principal shareholder of the Wolverhampton Group of Steel Companies relating to a claim for compensation under the Compensation (Defence) Act 1939. No such representations have been made by or on behalf of any other parties known to have any financial interests in the companies.

Copyright

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, pursuant to his answer of 16 May, Official Report, column 569, to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) he will seek to amend the Copyright Act 1956 to add sculptured portraits to the statutory exceptions listed under section 4(3).

Mr. Pattie: As recently announced in the White Paper "Intellectual Property and Innovation" (Cmnd. 9712) at page 66, the Government have concluded that it is unnecessary and undesirable to amend either the basic ownership provision or the existing specific exceptions to that provision in the Copyright Act 1956. Accordingly, I am not seeking to add sculptured portraits to the statutory exceptions listed under section 4(3) of this Act.

Estate Agents

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people the Director General of Fair Trading has banned under the Estate Agents Act 1979 in each year since the Act came into force.

Mr. Howard: I am informed by the Director General of Fair Trading that the number of prohibition orders made during last year is:

	Number
*1982	2
1983	6
1984	6
1985	12
1986	17

* (May-December)

A further five orders are subject to appeal. Three of the orders listed have since been expunged from the public register kept by the Director General. Further information can be obtained from the Director General.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Crown Agents

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that there will be no compulsory redundancies resulting from the subsumation of the Crown Agents into the Overseas Development Agency.

Mr. Raison: No member of staff of the Overseas Development Administration will lose his or her job or be compulsorily transferred as a result of the merger of the Crown Agents' pensions division with the Overseas Development Administration. There will be staff savings in the area of work currently handled by the Crown Agents' pensions division as a result of the merger, but the Crown Agents' management and my officials are working closely together with a view to avoiding redundancies among Crown Agents' staff.

WALES

Road Accidents (Hospital Treatment)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) men, (b) women and (c) children have been treated in hospitals in Wales for injuries arising out of road accidents during each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The available information is given in the following table:

Persons discharged from NHS hospitals in Wales who were admitted as a result of a road traffic accident

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984

Shell Oil Terminal, Ynys Môn

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales (a) how much public money went into the Shell oil terminal at Ynys Môn, (b) what reasons Shell have given the Welsh Office for pulling out and (c) what are the terms of the renegotiated deal with Merseyside Port Authority.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The available information is as follows:

(a) Just over £3·8 million of regional development grant was paid in respect of the Rhosgoch tank farm.

(b) Shell UK Ltd. has said that its decision to cease operations in Anglesey was the result of a greatly reduced demand for oil products which meant that the facility is operating at only about 30 per cent. of its capability and giving rise to unacceptably high operating costs.

(c) That is a commercial matter for the company and the port authority.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Wales which breeds of ewe in which areas of Wales qualify for the higher rate of headage payments under the sheep annual premium arrangements; and if mountain breeds of ewe in well-defined regions of Wales were considered for the extension of sheep annual premium to untupped shearlings.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There is only one rate of sheep annual premium. All breeds of ewe are currently eligible for the premium, provided that all other conditions of the scheme are met. It is not the practice in Wales to leave shearlings untupped.

Wales Advisory Body

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to dismiss the chairman of the board of the Welsh Advisory Body on Further and Higher Education; and to appoint in his place a person who has not previously held office in either a university or college of further education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has every confidence in the chairman of the board of WAB and expects that he will continue to serve until the conclusion of his appointment at the end of this year.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Terrorism

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of recent discussions with other western Governments on international terrorism.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement given by my right hon. and learned Friend on 23 April about the meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the Twelve on 21 April. The commitment of the western democracies to resist terrorism and to take significant action to deal with it were also firmly underlined at the Tokyo summit. We shall continue to work with friendly and like-minded countries in fighting a problem which affects us all and to urge that measures similar to those agreed by the European Community and summit seven countries be applied on the widest possible basis in the international community.

United States

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects he expects to discuss at his next meeting with representatives of the Government of the United States of America.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has just had discussions on a wide range of international issues with the United States Secretary of State, Mr. Shultz, in Washington and during the North Atlantic Council meeting in Canada. He expects to continue these contacts on international subjects in future meetings.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government plan to submit proposals under article 2, section 1, of the partial test ban treaty to the depository Governments for ciruclation to all the treaty's signatories for a reduction in the 150 kiloton limit governing nuclear weapon tests.

Mr. Renton: No. The 150 kiloton limit is the subject of the 1974 threshold test ban treaty between the United States and the Soviet Union. This treaty is so far unratified. We regret that the Soviet Union has not responded to recent proposals by the United States on verifying the yield of nuclear tests with a view to ratifying this treaty.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in full the text of the scientific advice so far made available to the Government about technical inadequacies in the United Kingdom's ability to detect, identify and quantify nuclear weapon tests.

Mr. Renton: The United Kingdom's paper to the conference on disarmament in July 1985 (CD 610), a copy of which is available in the Library of the House, set out very fully the scientific grounds on which we continue to believe that verification difficulties at present stand in the way of negotiating a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the parameters governing his assessment of technical considerations when determining whether a proposed method of independently verifying nuclear weapons tests is adequate.

Mr. Renton: As has been made clear to the House on a number of occasions, we are looking for adequate verification that is sufficiently reliable to give confidence to all sides. In particular, I refer the hon. Member to the replies given in two Adjournment debates; the first by my right hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Luce), the then Minister of State, on 7 June 1985 and my own on 26 March 1986. In both those speeches there are details of the considerations which we would need to take into account in assessing the adequacy of any verification regime.

Mr. Cenos Delos Santos

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department is paying per annum for the accommodation of Mr. Cenos Delos Santos in Wormwood Scrubs prison; and how long it is anticipated that such expenditure will continue.

Mr. Eggar: The cost to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office of Mr. Delos Santos' accommodation in Wormwood Scrubs prison is currently £29,000 a year. This is reimbursement of costs incurred by the Home Office. Delos Santos was sentenced to life imprisonment in November 1985, and the present expenditure will continue until, after assessment, he is moved from a main centre dispersal prison such as Wormwood Scrubs. Assessment normally takes place after three or four years, following which most life prisoners are transferred to category B training establishments, where costs can be expected to be lower.

Diego Garcia

Mr. Cambell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied that the construction contract awarded to John Mowlem and companies complies with the terms of the lease between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Government on the use of Diego Garcia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Diego Garcia is not leased to the United States Government. Its use is based on exchanges of notes dated 30 December 1966 and 25 February 1976 between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States. I am satisfied that the construction contract complies with the terms of those exchanges of notes.

Mr. Cambell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list those contractors currently engaged on projects on Diego Garcia under the terms of the lease agreement.

Mr. Eggar: There are two major consortia engaged on maintenance or construction projects in Diego Garcia. They are FEBROE, a joint venture between the United States firms Frank E. Basal and Burns and Roe Services; and RBRM, which comprises John Mowlem (UK), Brown and Root and Raymond International of the USA. In addition, RCA (US) and TRW (US) are engaged in the installation of equipment; Overseas Express Inc. (US) is operating tug boats, and Cable and Wireless (UK) is operating the telephone and telex system.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what construction contracts are currently being undertaken on Diego Garcia by (a) British contractors and (b) other contractors.

Mr. Eggar: The only contract for construction work in Diego Garcia was awarded to a consortium of Brown and Root, Raymond International and Mowlem (UK). The contract, which is nearing completion, covers the improvement of services and utilities on the island including refuelling arrangements, expansion of storage, warehousing, maintenance and wharf installations and the upgrading of the runway and other airfield support facilities.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the value of the contract awarded to John Mowlem for its construction works in Diego Garcia by the United Kingdom Government.

Mr. Eggar: The contract in which John Mowlem is engaged with other members of the RBRM consortium was not awarded by the United Kingdom Government. It is a United States Government contract, paid for by the United States Government.

Berlin Bomb Incident (Libyan Involvement)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will instruct Her Majesty's ambassador to the Federal Republic of Germany to seek from the Federal authorities their latest assessment of the Libyan involvement in the bomb explosion in Berlin in April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No. Berlin is not part of the Federal Republic of Germany and is not governed by it. The Allies, who have supreme authority in Berlin, remain in close touch with the German authorities in the city.

School Fees

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the answer of 19 May, Official Report, columns 17-18, he will state the number of families concerned; whether there is any maximum school fee per child set by his Department; and what is the highest fee paid.

Mr. Eggar: In the financial year 1985-86, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office paid boarding school allowance to 562 officers serving overseas. The FCO pays an allowance towards both fees and board and lodging costs charged by schools. The maximum allowance currently paid is £1,553·08 per term for boys at senior schools. Any costs in excess of these allowances have to be met by officers themselves.

Western European Union

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the enlargement of the Western European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: At their meeting in Venice on 29-30 April, WEU Ministers agreed that the new institutional arrangements approved at the Council meeting in Bonn in April 1985 should be allowed to run until the end of 1987, when a review of the structure and operation of the organisation will take place. At that time member Governments will be able to assess the achievements of the WEU's reactivation and the way ahead. We support this approach.

Disarmament Conference, Geneva

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent developments in the chemical arms control talks in committee at the conference on disarmament in Geneva.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 24 April at column 223. The spring session of the conference on disarmament ended on 25 April. The summer session will start on 10 June.

EMPLOYMENT

Workfare Scheme

26. Mr. Marlow asked the Paymaster General if he will make it his policy to develop plans to introduce into the social security system in the United Kingdom a scheme similar to the workfare scheme operated in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The restart programme for the long-term unemployed which will be fully operational by July this year will include a number of elements which feature in workfare programmes in the United States of America, in particular job clubs to help and encourage the unemployed to find work. The Government are continuing to study the American experience of workfare programmes to see if there are further elements which should be applied here.

Northern Region

Mr. Fallon asked the Paymaster General how much assistance has been given to small businesses in the northern region in each year since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: Figures are not available for the total amount of assistance given to small firms in the northern region, but a broad range of assistance, including the benefits of the Government's overall economic policies, is available to them. Specific measures for which figures are available include the small firms service, the enterprise allowance scheme, the loan guarantee scheme, and the Department of Trade and Industry's business improvement services. The following figures can be provided, although they do not all refer to the same geographical area.

The small firms centre in Newcastle from 1980 to 1985 answered 95,000 inquiries and arranged 10,000 counselling sessions.

The loan guarantee scheme, since its introduction in 1981, has provided guarantees for bank lending to small firms in the north-east, totalling over £22 million.

The enterprise allowance scheme has since 1983 helped 7,333 unemployed people in the northern region to start their own businesses at a cost of over £11 million.

In the period to 31 March 1985, 816 applications had been made in those areas of the north-east eligible for business improvement services, and £6·78 million of expenditure committed.

Mr. Fallon asked the Paymaster General what has been the total expenditure by his Department and by the Manpower Services Commission in each year since 1979 on (a) job creation and (b) training, including retraining in the northern region.

Mr. Lang: Expenditure in the northern region is not separately accounted for and precise figures are therefore not available. Estimates of expenditure are given in the table.

	1979-80 £ million	1980-81 £ million	1981-82 £ million	1982-83 £ million	1983-84 £ million	1984-85 £ million	1985-86 £ million

* Figure includes estimated expenditure in Cumbria.

Expenditure on the job splitting scheme in the northern region is estimated to have been below £50,000, in each year.

Mr. Fallon asked the Paymaster General how many people were placed in jobs by jobcentres in the northern region in 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Lang: Following is the requested information. The figures exclude placings on Government schemes.

	Number
1983	83,311
1984	92,094
1985	99,408

Mr. Fallon asked the Paymaster General whether he will publish a table showing how many people have benefited in the northern region from (a) the community programme, (b) the enterprise allowance scheme, (c) YTS and (d) adult training in each year since 1983; and how many are currently benefiting from each scheme.

Mr. Lang: In April 1986, 29,854 people in the northern region were benefiting from the schemes. The number of participants, by scheme, were:

	Number
Community Programme	22,492
Enterprise Allowance Scheme	2,864
YTS	1,663
Adult Training	2,835

The number of entrants to the above schemes in the northern region during the past three years is shown in the table.

Programme	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86
Community Programme	13,343	15,942	24,009
Enterprise Allowance Scheme	1,562	2,588	3,183

Printing Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Paymaster General what has been the total number of people employed in each region of England and Wales in the printing industry in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what percentage of the total possible work force this figure represents in each of those years.

Mr. Lang: The Department's employment statistics are analysed according to the 1980 standard industrial classification, which combines the printing industry with publishing. Estimates of the numbers of employees in employment in printing and publishing in Great Britain for September of each year from 1981 to 1985, and expressed as a percentage of the working population (employees in employment, the self-employed, Her Majesty's forces and the unemployed) are given in table 1.

Regional estimates of employees in employment in the printing and publishing industry are available only from censuses of employment. The latest available regional estimates for the industry are based on the September 1981 census of employment, and those for England and Wales are given in table 2. The figures are expressed as a percentage of the civilian working population — employees in employment, the self-employed and the unemployed—in each region.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Clay asked the Paymaster General what is his estimate of the number of unemployed building workers in the northern region.

Mr. Lang: The labour force survey showed that in the northern region in the spring of 1984 there were about 21,000 people without a job and looking for work who had been employed at some time in the last three years, their previous job having been in the construction industry.

Mr. Clay asked the Paymaster General how many people were registered as unemployed in (a) the northern region and (b) Sunderland for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The numbers of unemployed claimants seasonally adjusted, excluding school leavers in the northern region, for April of each year from 1979 to 1986, are as follows:

	Numbers
April 1979	99,500
April 1980	112,900
April 1981	163,900
April 1982	186,000
April 1983	204,500
April 1984	215,700
April 1985	227,200
April 1986	228,600

The numbers of unemployed claimants in the Sunderland local authority district for April of each year from 1984 to 1986 are as follows:

	Numbers
April 1984	26,941
April 1985	28,387
April 1986	28,859

These figures are unadjusted and are affected by the change in the timing of compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986. Statistics of unemployment for local authority districts are derived from the new ward-based system and are available only from June 1983.

Mr. Clay asked the Paymaster General how many people were unemployed for more than one year in (a) Northern region and (b) Sunderland for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The figures are affected by the 1983 Budget provisions, which mean that certain older men, mainly aged 60 or over, no longer have to sign on at unemployment benefit offices to receive benefit and by the change in the timing of compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986. Statistics of unemployment for local authority districts are derived from the new ward-based system and are available only from June 1983. Comparisons of unemployment over the period are difficult to make because of changes in the method of collection and compilation of the data.

Mr. Clay asked the Paymaster General what has been the rate of redundancies per thousand employees for (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the northern region for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The available information, relating to confirmed redundancies, is given in the following table:

Redundancies confirmed as due to occur per 1,000 employees in employment†*

	Great Britain	Northern region
1979	8	12
1980	22	28
1981	25	36
1982	19	30
1983	16	29
1984	11	25
1985	11	23

* Redundancies confirmed by the Manpower Services Commission as due to occur and based on notifications of impending redundancies involving 10 or more workers. Figures for 1985 are provisional.

† Based on the latest mid-year (June) estimates of employees in employment.

Mr. Clay asked the Paymaster General how many people were employed in manufacturing industry in the northern region in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows:

Employees in employment in the manufacturing industries in the northern region
December of each year

Year	Number
1979	403,000
1980	359,000
1981	334,000

Mr. Clay asked the Paymaster General how many vacancies were available in jobcentres in (a) the northern region and (b) Sunderland in May 1979, June 1983 and at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: The following figures relate to the numbers of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres in the northern region and at Sunderland jobcentre. Figures for May 1979 exclude self-employed vacancies.

	Northern Region	Sunderland Jobcentre
May 1979	10,585	766
June 1983	6,239	281
April 1986	8,753	569

Mr. Clay asked the Paymaster General how many vacancies were available at careers offices in (a) the northern region and (b) Sunderland in May 1979, June 1983 and at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: The following figures relate to the numbers of unfilled vacancies at careers offices in the northern region and at Sunderland careers office.

	Northern Region	Sunderland Careers Office
May 1979	744	33
June 1983	304	17
April 1986	317	34

Mr. Clay asked the Paymaster General how many places were available at skillcentres in the northern region in 1979 and at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that figures for 1979 are not available. 68,000 weeks of training were provided in the northern region of the skills training agency in 1985-86.

Since 1983 statistics on skillcentre training volumes have been kept in terms of training weeks provided, rather than places available.

Mr. Clay asked the Paymaster General how many people were employed in (a) the northern region and (b) Sunderland in 1979, 1983 and the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: The available information is given in the table. For areas smaller than regions, this information is available only for those dates when censuses of employment are taken. The table therefore includes the available information from the 1978 and 1981 censuses of employment. More-up-to-date employee figures for local areas will become available following publication of the 1984 census of employment later this year.

Mr. Clay asked the Paymaster General what were the unemployment figures by ward for Sunderland as at (a) May 1979, (b) June 1983 and (c) the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. Figures are given showing the numbers of unemployed claimants in June 1983 and April 1986 in the wards of the Sunderland local authority district. This comparison is affected by seasonal factors, the 1983 Budget provisions, which meant that certain older men, mainly aged 60 and over no longer have to sign on to obtain national insurance credits or supplementary benefits, and by the change in the timing of compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986. Statistics of unemployment for local electoral wards are derived from the new ward-based system and are available only from June 1983.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what particular plans he has to seek to reduce youth unemployment (a) in Lancashire and (b) in Burnley.

Mr. Trippier: A reduction in youth unemployment in Lancashire and Burnley depends on a sustained improvement in the performance of industry, business and the economy as a whole. Our economic policies are designed to create the conditions for that improvement and we are making substantial progress. We also need levels of pay which ensure the competitiveness of our industry.

In 1986-87 two-year YTS will provide 8,651 places in Lancashire and 770 in Burnley, with a further 1,898 and 152 continuation places respectively being provided for young people who entered training last year. The job prospects of those completing YTS and those ineligible for training will be further enhanced by the new workers scheme.

Those young people who have been unemployed for some time will be able to benefit from temporary employment under the community programme. In 1986-87, 6,218 places will be available in Lancashire and 513 in Burnley. Our other employment measures will also directly or indirectly benefit young people.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what was the level of youth unemployment in the Burnley travel-to-work area at the latest date for which figures are available; and what were the comparable figures in 1979 and subsequent years.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. On 10 April 1986, the number of claimants in the Burnley travel-to-work area aged under 25 years was 2,113. The corresponding figures for April 1984 and April 1985 were 2,011 and 2,033 respectively. This comparison is affected by the change in the timing of compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986. Larger discontinuities occurred in the local area statistics in 1982 and 1983, with the change in the basis of the count, the introduction of ward-based statistics and the revision to boundaries of travel-to-work areas. Therefore, the figures for earlier years are not directly comparable.

Tourism

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General (1) if any contribution is being made by the airlines to the £1 million which the British tourist industry proposes to spend in the United States of America to halt the decline in the number of United States visitors to the United Kingdom;

(2) if any contribution is being made by the largest of three hotel operators in London to the £1 million being spent by the British Tourist Authority in the United States of America to halt the decline in the number of American tourists to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: The British Tourist Authority is devoting $400,000 to this campaign and aims to raise a further $800,000 from the trade. It is currently negotiating with prospective partners and it is very much hoped that the major airlines and hotel operators, as well as others, will contribute but nothing has yet been finalised.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General what is the Government's contribution to tourism this year; what was the comparable sum in 1973-74; and if he will break down the expenditure by end use.

Mr. Trippier: The following table shows the estimated provision by my Department for the British Tourist Authority and the English Tourist Board in the current financial year together with the equivalent figures for 1973-74:

	1986-87 £000's	1973-74 £000's
BTA Grant-in-aid	20,370	5,600
ETB Grant-in-aid	10,369	1,750
Assistance to tourist projects under Section 4 of the Development of Tourist Act 1969	9,400	570
	40,139	7,920

In 1973-74 an additional sum of £20·8 million was paid in grants and loans to eligible applicants in England under the hotel developments incentive scheme. This scheme provided non-discretionary grants for hotel developments which met certain conditions of eligibility. Developments had to start before 1 April 1971 and be completed before 1 April 1973 and this resulted in an exceptionally high level of payments in 1973-74.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Norris asked the Paymaster General whether any change will be made to cash limits or gross running cost limits for his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the following changes will be made.

The cash limit for class VII, vote 1 (labour market services) will be increased by £82,400,000 from £1,227,006,000 to £1,309,406,000 to cover the expansion of the community programme and an associated increase in the average wage limit, and the introduction of a new workers scheme, announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement on 18 March 1986.

The cash limit for class VII, vote 3 (administration) will be increased by £1,500,000 from £60,505,000 to £62,005,000 to cover the Department's administrative costs arising from the measures announced in the 1986 Budget, and increased payments to the Manpower Services Commission for statistical work and in connection with city action teams. Increased expenditure of £8,300,000 on the vote is partially offset by receipts totalling £6,800,000 from class XV, vote 5 (DHSS administration).

The cash limit for class VII, vote 6 (MSC) will be increased by £78,354,000 from £1,566,832,000 to £1,645,186,000 to cover the nationwide expansion of the restart programme and an increase in the number of places on the enterprise allowance scheme, partially offset by a reduction in expenditure on MSC's geographical mobility schemes, as announced in the Budget. A gross increase of £93,074,000 is offset by increased appropriations in aid totalling £14,720,000 from the industry department for Scotland (class XVI, vote 4) and the Welsh Office (class XVII, vote 4).

The cash limit for class XVI, vote 4 (MSC, Scotland) will be increased by £9,008,000 from £155,069,000 to £164,077,000 to meet the proportion of the MSC increases described above which can be specifically identified.

The cash limit for class XVII, vote 4 (MSC, Wales) will be increased by £5.712,000 from £95,076,000 to £100,788,000 to meet the proportion of the MSC increases which can be specifically identified with services in Wales.

As a result of these changes, the Department of Employment's gross running cost limit is increased by £10,300,000 from £374,288,000 to £384,588,000; and the MSC's gross running cost limit is increased by £28,458,000 from £370,875,000 to £399,360,000. Taken together with the existing gross running cost limits for the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service and the Health and Safety Commission, the total for the Department of Employment group as a whole will be increased by £38,785,000 from £846,463,000 to a new aggregate of £885,248,000.

The public expenditure costs of these measures have been charged to the Reserve so do not add to the public expenditure planning total.

Job Creation

Mr. Knox asked the Paymaster General what steps the United Kingdom Government are proposing to take to combat the problems of unemployment in the European Community.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have, acting jointly with the Employment Ministers of Italy and Ireland, put forward a paper entitled "Employment Growth into the 1990s—a strategy for the Labour Market," which will be discussed at the EC Council of Labour and Social Affairs Ministers on Thursday 5 June. The paper, which has been agreed by the three member states concerned, sets out proposals for a labour market initiative aimed at combating the problem of unemployment in the European Community. The paper concentrates on four main areas where action might be taken: promoting enterprise and self-employment; flexible employment patterns and conditions of work; training; and long-term unemployment. It proposes a number of specific measures in each area as part of a programme of action which could be carried forward jointly by the European Commission and member states.

We shall now be looking to take this initiative forward as part of our presidency of the Community in the second half of this year.

I am placing a copy of the paper in the Library.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Magistrates

Mr. Hoyle asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the number of magistrates who reside in each ward, on a ward for ward basis; and what percentage this is of the total magistrates on each bench in the petty sessional districts of Wigan, St. Helen's, Halton and Bury, respectively.

Mr. Tebbit [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 55]: The figures requested are in the schedule. These do not include the figures for Halton justices. As these serve on the Cheshire commission of the peace, the ministerial responsibility for these falls to my noble Friend the Lord Chancellor.

DEFENCE

Coopers Lane, Bramley

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence what were the findings of the review of the requirements from his Department's housing in Coopers Lane, Bramley, near Basingstoke.

Mr. Lee: As I advised my hon. Friend in my letter of 22 January 1986 to him the programme for reducing the MOD's housing stock in the Aldermaston area had been deferred in order to provide accommodation for additional manpower needed for the nuclear defence programme. This decision includes the houses in Cooper's lane, Bramley.

It is too early yet to say whether the availability of MOD housing has proved to be a worthwhile recruitment incentive, but I am keeping the situation under review and will continue to bear in mind that the local housing authority would be interested in the short-term loan of houses in Cooper's Lane, whenever this can be arranged without detriment to the MOD's requirements.

Research and Development Contracts

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what firms received research and development contracts from the Ministry of Defence or its research establishments in 1983-84 in total (a) over £50 million, (b) between £25 million and £50 million, (c) between £10 million and £25 million, (d) between £5 million and £10 million and (e) between £1 million and £5 million;

(2) what expenditure for research and development was allocated in 1983-84 to those companies listed in annex G of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates", Cmnd. 9430-1, which were paid (a) between £50 million and £100 million for equipment in 1983-84, (b) between £25 million and £50 million for equipment in 1983-84, (c) between £10 million and £25 million for equipment in 1983-84 and (d) between £5 million and £10 million for equipment in 1983-84.

Mr. Freeman: As shown in table 3.2 of Part 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986" (Cmnd 9763-II), which gives a comprehensive breakdown of MOD's research and development spending, the net total for extramural expenditure on research and development in 1983-84 was £1,378 million. The detailed information requested is, however, not readily available and could not be obtained without disproportionate effort.

Lines of Communication Agreement

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the terms of the United States-United Kingdom lines of communication agreement; what powers under this agreement would be made available to United States armed forces in Britain in times of emergency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The United States-United Kingdom lines of communication arrangement which has been in existence since 1973 permits the United States to establish, operate and maintain lines of communication and logistic support facilities in the United Kingdom for use under emergency conditions as part of their NATO obligations. The arrangement itself is classified and cannot therefore be published. It makes no powers available to United States armed forces in the United Kingdom in times of emergency.

Auxiliary Oiler Replenishment Vessel

Mr. Trotter asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the expected delivery date for the first auxiliary oiler replenishment vessel.

Mr. Lee: It is not our practice to give precise planned acceptance dates. I have nothing to add, therefore, to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 24 April at column 434.

Vessel Costs

Mr. Trotter asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the anticipated cost of (i) a type 23 frigate, (ii) a type 2400 submarine and (iii) an auxiliary oil replenishment vessel.

Mr. Lee: Precise costs are commercially confidential. However, the approximate cost (at 1985-86 price levels) are £115 million for the Type 23 frigate and £100 million for the Type 2400 submarine. These are the average prices we expect to pay for vessels in the first batch and include weapons and equipment fitted in each case, but exclude first of class costs which are covered by separate contracts.

For the AOR, we achieved a price slightly below our target of £130 million (at 1985-86 price levels) for the first ship. Because this vessel is being procured on a design and build contract, this includes design costs. We expect follow-on vessels to be significantly cheaper.

Dr. Kurt Waldheim

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether, pursuant to the answer of the Lord Privy Seal of 22 May to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West, any of the documents listed as missing from the Public Records Office cited in the Prime Minister's answer of 19 May relate directly or indirectly to Dr. Kurt Waldheim.

Mr. Freeman: Pursuant to the reply of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister of 19 May to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West, it is not the practice to disclose any part of the contents of records retained with the approval of the Lord Chancellor under the Public Records Acts.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether he has any information as to British prisoners of war interrogated by German Army group E while Dr. Kurt Waldheim was a senior staff officer in charge of interrogation other than those referred to him for inquiry by the Lord Privy Seal and as identified by the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West on 22 May;

(2) whether he will complete his inquiry into the interrogation and subsequent fate of British prisoners of war by German Army group E, while Dr. Kurt Waldheim was senior staff officer in charge of interrogation, by 3 June;

(3) whether he will make a statement concerning the identities and fate of British prisoners of war interrogated by German Army group E while Dr. Kurt Waldheim was a senior staff officer in charge of interrogation and concerning Dr. Kurt Waldheim's part in such interrogation and, in particular, in the deaths and disappearance of such service men following their interrogation.

Mr. Freeman: The research into Ministry of Defence records continues as a matter of urgency, and it would not be appropriate to make any statement until it is completed. It has not, however, been possible to complete it by 3 June.

Captain Brian Courtney

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what date Captain Brian Courtney of the Army police was discharged from the Army; and what was his last date of active service.

Mr. Freeman: Captain Courtney's last day of Army service was 23 July 1984, when he left on completion of a short service commission.

Corporal Peter Clark

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence, on what date the decision was taken to court-martial Corporal Peter Clark of 9 Signals Regiment.

Mr. Freeman: The application for Corporal Clark to be tried by court-martial was authorised on 31 August 1984.

Flight Sergeant Timothy Sheeham

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what date Flight Sergeant Timothy Sheeham was discharged from the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Freeman: Flight Sergeant Sheehan completed a pensionable engagement and was discharged on 5 April 1985.

Cyprus (Security)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what date a representative of the United States Government was first informed of a breach of security in Cyprus in the spring of 1984.

Mr. Stanley: 24 February 1984.

United States Starlifter Aircraft

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Defence which bases in the United Kingdom have been visited by United States C-141 Starlifter strategic aircraft.

Mr. Stanley: C-141 transport aircraft of the United States Air Force have deployed regularly to airfields in the United Kingdom since the 1960s, but no detailed records are maintained of visits to individual bases.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he had with his West German and American counterparts prior to the discussion by North Atlantic Treaty Organisation officials on 14 May, on the proposed crisis deployment of binary chemical weapons in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Stanley: None. My right hon. Friend has however had general discussions concerning United States chemical weapon modernisation proposals with both the Defence Secretaries of the United States and of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) by what means and when Her Majesty's Government indicated to the United States Government their willingness to consider the deployment of binary chemical weapons in Britain;

(2) if there have been discussions with the United States Government about which bases in the United Kingdom might be considered for the deployment of binary chemical weapons in time of crises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made clear to the House on 19 May at column 33, the Government have received no requests from other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries for chemical weapons to be based in the United Kingdom. The United States Government have indicated that they have no plans to deploy binary chemical weapons in any foreign country in peacetime. To date we have not been consulted about possible contingency arrangements. If a request for deployment of United States binary chemical munitions were ever to be received it would be a matter for decision by the British Government of the day in the light of all the circumstances prevailing at the time. Any deployment to the United Kingdom at any time would require the consent of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Defence if Her Majesty's Government have received any representations from allied governments opposing their support for the adoption of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation force goal stipulating the need for the modernisation of the United States share of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation chemical weapons deterrent.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Nuclear Tests (Nevada)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the nuclear tests in Nevada in April attended by British observers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No British observers were present at any nuclear test held in Nevada during April.

Spy Trial (Cyprus)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence why three service men acquitted at the end of the Cyprus spy trial have been discharged from the services.

Mr. Freeman: Five service men have so far been discharged from the services following the conclusion of the Cyprus secrets trial. Four left on completion of their engagement and one left at his own request. The remaining three service men are at present still serving in the Royal Air Force: the Air Force Board has been recommended to consider their discharge. The reasons for the recommendation have been given to the service men, who have made representations to the Air Force Board.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of cruise missiles at United States Air Force, Greenham common, that are assigned to maintenance programmes; and whether these are included in the complement of 96 cruise missiles deployed at Greenham common as stated in the 1986 Defence Estimates, paragraph 320.

Mr. Stanley: It would not be in the public interest to publish detailed information on the number of cruise missiles undergoing maintenance at RAF Greenham common. However, I understand that the figure of 96 missiles quoted in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986" includes those undergoing maintenance.

Turkey (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the purpose and outcome of the visit to Turkey made by the then Minister of State for Defence Procurement, the hon. Member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont).

Mr. Freeman: The visit was designed to promote co-operation between British and Turkish manufacturers in order to assist Turkey in the modernisation of its defence industrial capability. The Turkish Government were assured of the British Government's support for this objective while the 20 or so British defence companies who took part were fully briefed on the opportunities in that country by the Turkish authorities and met a large number of potential industrial partners. I believe the visit was considered a valuable first step by all those who took part.

Research Contracts

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the guidelines for awarding Ministry of Defence research contracts.

Mr. Freeman: Research contracts are awarded on broadly the same criteria as apply to other defence contracts, taking into account the requirement for the work and the ability of prospective contractors to carry it out.

Diego Garcia

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish the terms of the lease between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Government for the use of Diego Garcia.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

There is no lease between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States for the use of Diego Garcia. Its use is based on exchanges of notes dated 30 December 1966 (published as Cmnd. 3231) and 25 February 1976 (published as Cmnd. 6413).

Homefield School, Christchurch (Rifle Range)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the reasons why he has given a 90 per cent. grant to the Homefield school, Christchurch, for a rifle range.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his answer 22 May 1986, c. 264]: The provision of a minature rifle range for an open Army Cadet Force detachment at Homefield school near Christchurch, Dorset is the responsibility of eastern Wessex territorial auxiliary and volunteer reserve association who have obtained a site rent-free from the school for that purpose, and for the use of an air training corps squadron which is planned to be located there. My Department has made no grant to the school for the range, but has made a grant to the association of some 90 per cent. of the anticipated costs of the necessary works, with the school contributing just over 10 per cent. The range remains under TAVRA control.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Magistrates (Swindon)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Attorney-General how many of the magistrates of the petty sessional district of Swindon, on a ward by ward basis, reside in each ward; and what percentage this of the total number of magistrates on the bench.

The Attorney-General: I refer to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 19 May. The information is not available and could be ascertained only at disproportionate cost.

9 Signals Regiment

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General what were the terms of reference given to Superintendent Eames in connection with his visit to Cyprus to inquire into possible breaches of security involving 9 Signals Regiment; what limitations were imposed on his inquiries in respect of (a) the geographical area of his investigation and (b) the scope of his inquiries; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Presumably the hon. Member is referring to the visit to Cyprus by three Metropolitan police officers in March and April 1984. The officers went to Cyprus in order to investigate, within the sovereign base area, allegations that service men in 9 Signals Regiment had committed offences under the Official Secrets Acts.

Secrets Trial (Cyprus)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General, pursuant to the answer of 20 May, if he will state the reasons why no attempt was made to bring to the United Kingdom the Cypriot national alleged by the prosecution to be a KGB agent, to appear at the trial of service men from 9 Signals Regiment; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: It is not the practice to give reasons why individuals were, or were not, called to give evidence in a particular case.

PRIME MINISTER

Housing Support

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Prime Minister if she will update her answer to the hon. Member for Kensington, 20 March 1985, Official Report, c. 505, showing Government support for housing, by category, in 1984-85 and 1985-86.

The Prime Minister: Following are the available estimates for 1983-84 to 1985-86:

Rates

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Prime Minister if she will update her answer to the hon. Member for Kensington, 12 February 1985, Official Report, column 102, giving the breakdown of revenues from local rates in the United Kingdom, in each year since 1978-79.

The Prime Minister: The following is the available information:

£ billion

	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87

Benefits, Grants and Tax

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Prime Minister what were the costs for the United Kingdom as a whole in 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 of administering (a) social security benefits, (b) housing benefit, (c) personal social services, (d) Manpower Services Commission and Northern Ireland equivalent grants and allowances, (e) student grants and (f) income tax.

The Prime Minister: Information is not available in precisely the form requested; what is available is set out in the table:

Cost of administration of:—	£ million United Kingdom
	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86
(a) Social Security benefits	1,608	1,616	1,784
(b) Housing benefit*	104	124	137
(c) Personal Social services†	409	420	n/a
(d) Manpower Services Commission and Northern Ireland equivalent schemes‡	275	276	299
(f) Income Tax‖	676	730	793

Figures for the costs of administering student grants are not available
n/a=not available
* Item (b) represents the cost to local authorities of administering housing benefit. The cost to central Government of administration of this benefit cannot be identified separately, and is included in item (a).
† Costs to local authorities. Figures for 1985-86 are not yet available.
‡ The cost of administering all Manpower Services Commission programmes in Great Britain except the Skills Training Agency and Professional and Executive Recruitment and the costs of administering the Northern Ireland equivalent schemes to those administered by the Manpower Services Commission.
‖ The cost to central Government of the collection of income tax.

Tax Credits

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Prime Minister what would have been the net cost in 1985-86 of replacing all existing personal income tax allowances with tax-free, non means-tested tax credits or basic incomes of (a) £13, (b) £14, and (c) £15 per week per adult, aged 16 years and over, assuming reductions in all existing Department of Health and Social Security, Department of Employment and Department of Education and Science benefits and allowances to take account of the change.

The Prime Minister: The extra tax revenues raised from abolishing personal allowances and taxing income from the first pound in 1985-86 would have been £24 billion from persons who are currently on Inland Revenue records. There would be an additional yield from persons with small incomes below the tax threshold. The cost of tax credits of (a) £13, (b) £14 and (c) £15 a week for all residents aged 16 or over would have been (a) £30 billion, (b) £32½ billion and (c) £35 billion. The effect on benefits and allowances would depend on the precise way in which changes in income associated with the change to tax credits were taken into account.

School Meals

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Prime Minister what is her latest estimate of the cost for the United Kingdom as a whole of free school meals in (a) 1983-84, (b) 1984-85 and (c) 1985-86.

The Prime Minister: "Free" school meals are, of course, paid for through rates and taxes. The cost of providing them to pupils in the United Kingdom is estimated to have been £232 million in 1983-84 and £251 million in 1984-85. Both figures are in cash terms. It is not possible to give corresponding information for 1985-86.

Protea Coins

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister when she expects to have completed her consideration of whether the spirit of the undertaking at the Commonwealth Heads of Government conference in 1985 covers protea coins as well as Kruggerrands; and if she will consult Commonwealth authorities on this matter.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to a reply given by the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 23 May at column 327.

Select Committees

Mr. Mason asked the Prime Minister what were the main recommendations accepted by Her Majesty's Government from the reports of the 14 departmental Select Committees during the year March 1985 to March 1986.

The Prime Minister: The table shows the main recommendations accepted by Her Majesty's Government from the reports of the departmental Select Committees published between March 1985 and March 1986. In addition, during this period there have been numerous lesser recommendations which have been accepted and suggestions or statements made in reports which the Government have noted.

Agriculture Committee

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
Session 1985-86
Sixth Report 1984-85: The United Kindom Government Agricultural Development and Advisory Services including Lower Input Farming	Community wide movement towards lower production. Government should press for such a reduction for commodities in structural surplus within the CAP. Different systems of production including those involving the use of Lower inputs, should be investigated by MAFF. The social cost of changes in Conservation policy should be borne by recognised sources of funding, including those from the European Community.

Defence

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
Session 1984-85
First Report: The use of merchant shipping for defence purposes—June 1985	That the Statement on Defence Estimates should include manpower figures, for officers and ratings in the United Kingdom merchant fleet, in comparison with those for earlier years.

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
Second Report: Security at Royal Ordnance Factories and nuclear bases —June 1985	That security and accounting procedures at all Royal Ordnance Factories should be subject to regular monitoring by Ministry of Defence and external auditors as appropriate. That physical security improvements at all ROFs should be completed as a matter of urgency.
Third Report: Defence commitments and resources and the Defence Estimates1985-86—June 1985	That a review of policy priorities should be included in the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986. That the question of British and wider European participation in Strategic Defence Initiative research required urgent consideration. That the Committee should be able to observe a demonstration of the enhancements to 5 Airborne Brigade. That the tables in Volume 2 of future Statements on the Defence Estimates should present constant-price information adjusted for carry-forward. That more examples should be provided of the savings achieved through competition procurement than the one example given in the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985.
Fourth Report: The future of the Royal Dockyards—July 1985	That the Government should not decide in favour of introducing commercial management to the Royal Dockyards unless they were confident that the objections discussed in the Committee's report could be satisfactorily met and that the advantages of a Trading Fund were outweighed by those of commercial management.
Fifth Report: The appointment and objectives of the Chief of Defence Procurement—July 1985	That the Secretary of State for Defence should inform the Committee of his views on the extension or otherwise, beyond the twelve month period originally envisaged, of the arrangements designed to prevent a conflict of interest between Mr. Levene's position as Chief of Defence Procurement and his former role as Chairman of United Scientific Holdings Ltd., and that the House should be informed of the Secretary of State's decision regarding this matter once taken.
Sixth Report: The Trident programme—July 1985	That the published anual revised cost estimate of the Trident programme should be only a part of a regular and detailed progress report on the state of the programme as a whole.
Session 1985-86
First Report: Further observations on the future of the dockyards—December 1985	That the Government should approach the debates on the Dockyard Services Bill with an open mind and be prepared to consider opinions expressed in such debates.

Employment

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
Session 1984-85
Fourth Report: The Manpower Service Commission's Corporate Plan 1985-89—March 1985	There should be general study of the funding for training purposes.

Energy

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
Session 1984-85
Seventh Report: Gas Depletion—July 1985	The Government must declare a policy on gas imports and exports. The fiscal regime should be stable and should not distort development patterns. The Department of Energy to investigate the Dutch statistical method used to assess the level of gas reserves.
Eighth Report: The EEO—November 1985	The commitment to effective use of taxpayers' money through efficient energy management must be universal through all Departments of State. The opportunities which Energy Efficiency Year will offer for putting across the energy efficiency message in the domestic sector must not be lost. The first priority for the next year must be development and public announcement of the EEO's priorities and the logic behind them. Inside Government, energy efficiency should not be regarded as someone else's concern and there should be no complacency that it is all a matter to be sorted out by the Property Services Agency or the EEO.
Session 1985-86
First Report: Regulation of the Gas Industry— February 1986	The Gas Consumers Council should be given explicit authority by legislation to safeguard the interests of consumers on such matters as safety, installation, servicing and repair and appliance quality and performance.

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
	The right of appeal (against transmission tariffs and terms for the supply of back-up gas) should be defined in the Gas Bill.
	An assurance that Standing Charges are taken into account in the price formula.
	Directions made by the Secretary of State to the Director of OFGAS to be laid before Parliament.

Environment

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
Session 1985-86
First Report: Radioactive Waste—March 1986.	[Note: The Government has made only an interim response to this Report: its final response is still being considered.]
	Classification of radioactive waste should be modified. [Partially accepted].
	Any disposal methods chosen should reduce the "dilute and disperse element of their design" to be as small as technically possible.
	The Drigg radioactive waste disposal site in the UK is not an acceptable model for future sites.
	Near surface disposal facilities should only be acceptable for short-lived low level waste and must be engineered on a complete containment basis.
	Serious consideration should be given to the issue of compensation to those affected by the establishment of radioactive waste disposal facilities.
	Any future site should have a strong and widely representative local liaison committee, with greater power to influence decisions than is presently the case. [Partially accepted].
	The Nuclear Installations Inspectorate should be more forward looking in its licensing role and should put in hand a generic safety study of solid waste disposal sites at an early date — to be published in advance of any public inquiry into such sites. [Partially accepted].
	The industry, through a body like NIREX should retain executive responsibility for disposal of the waste in accordance with the "polluter pays" principle.
Third Report: DOE main estimates 1985-86—June 1985	The situation whereby dog licences cost more to issue than they raise in revenue should be ended.
	Specific statutory authority should be sought for grants to London Zoo and certain other bodies.
	The effectiveness of policy on gypsy sites should be reviewed.
	Steps should be taken to discourage applications for urban programme grant which are unlikely to succeed.
	A full evaluation should be made of experience with the Liverpool International Garden Festival.
	Means of reducing the administrative costs of the London Docklands Development Corporation should be explored.
Fourth Report: PSA Main Estimates 1985-86—June 1985	PSA should delegate to departments more operational and financial responsibility for the maintenance of their own buildings.
	PSA should ensure that common standards are applied to the maintenance work for which PSA retains responsibility.
	PSA should provide the Environment Committee with fuller and clearer reasons for variations in the original and current costs of projects, and, wherever possible, avoid changes in the design and construction stages.
	There should be a review of the economies achieved by the Property Repayment Services system and of the way that PSA accounts for expenditure and receipts including the possibility of producing a civil accommodation account on commercial lines.

Foreign Affairs

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
Session 1984-85
Second Report: Famine in Africa—April 1985	It is important that United Kingdom Embassy staff should have the training to inform themselves on the food situation in countries where food supply is a problem.
	Every effort must be made to ensure that aid distribution is properly monitored and checked.
	It must be a priority to get relief supplies through as urgently as possible.
	Short-term and long-term needs should be considered together.
	A continued commitment to the needs of African countries will be needed for many years.
	Support in general for the ODA's approach of channelling a sizeable part of the relief effort through voluntary and international agencies.

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
	Support for Government's broad approach on food aid policy.
	Support for the increasing concentration of the United Kingdom bilateral programme.
Fourth Report: Overseas Programme Expenditure 1985-86—June 1985	A review should be carried out on the way the FCO is charged by the British Airports Authority for VIP lounges.
	Government treatment of overseas students should be reviewed.

Home Affairs

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
Session 1984-85
Third Report: Refugees and Asylum, with special reference to the Vietnamese—April 1985.	Family reunion criteria should be relaxed in respect of Vietnamese in camps in countries of temporary asylum.
	A considerable degree of Ministerial discretion should be retained in the granting of family reunion applications.
	Britain's willingness to relax its family reunion criteria for Vietnamese in camps in countries of temporary asylum should be used as a bargaining counter to attract offers of additional resettlement places from other countries.
	The aim of such negotiation should be to reduce drastically the size of Hong Kong Vietnamese refugee population and to resettle all those whose stay in camps has been prolonged.
	The FCO should make resolution of Hong Kong's Vietnamese refugee problem a major priority in its dealings with foreign governments.
	A Joint Working Group consisting of Home Office, MSC and refugee agency representatives should be established to assess the type and scale of assistance needed in respect of training and employment and to press for it it to be provided.
	The MSC should be permitted to relax its eligibility criteria in respect of the Vietnamese, particularly for YTS, and should ensure that the intended expansion of the Community Programme enables many more Vietnamese to find employment.
	The Home Office (and the Department of Environment) should examine with the refugee agencies and local authorities what sort of service the agencies could provide for authorities with a few Vietnamese and how such services should be paid for.
	The scale of the refugee agencies' Vietnamese Programme should be increased, and its funding should be continued for as long as necessary to achieve its objectives.
	In normal circumstances, asylum seekers at ports of entry who would otherwise be detained should be granted temporary admission to a refugee hostel or other suitable and accepted accommodation.
	Various recommendations on the staffing of the Home Office refugee unit and the monitoring of progress on cases have been broadly accepted.
	There should be a presumption in favour of giving permanent settlement to those with exceptional leave to remain after seven years.
	Statistics relating to immigration and those relating to the granting of asylum should be clearly separated if possible in separate documents.
Fifth Report: Misuse of Hard Drugs (Interim Report)—May 1985.	There should be intensified law enforcement effort against drug trafficking.
	The penalty for systematic dealing in hard drugs should be no less than the penalty for premeditated murder.
	The Government should do all it can to assist in crop eradication and substitution schemes in drug producer countries.
	The civil and criminal law of the United Kingdom should be amended to provide for the seizure and forfeiture of assets connected with drug trafficking.
	Immediate steps should be taken to reform the laws of banking to remove the secrecy which now protects the international drug traffickers and makes the "laundering" of their money easy.
Sixth Report: Immigration and Nationality Department (IND) of the Home Office—June 1985.	A continuing effort should be made to increase the number of immigration officers from ethnic minorities.
	IND should continue and expand its programme of producing leaflets in minority languages, after appropriate consultation.
	The possibility of extending charging for certain of the department's services should be considered when an opportunity for legislation arises.
	Permanent arrangements should be made for independent inspection of the Immigration Service's detention facilities.
First Report: Session 1985-86 Misuse of Hard Drugs—March 1986.	There should be statutory protection for bankers who volunteer information to the authorities about their clients' finances when these seem to be connected with drug trafficking.

Scottish Affairs

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
	Session 1984-85
Second Report: Highlands and Islands Development Board (HIDB)—March 1985	To raise financial limit for any one social project.
	HIDB should not adopt, in public, an independent stance on matters of public controversy.
	No change required in HIDB's powers of compulsory purchase of land.
	HIDB should produce a clear statement of objectives for all projects carried out at its own hand—costs and performance should be assessed against these objectives.
	HIDB members should have business and commercial experience and should be appointed for 5 years initially.
	HIDB must remain a source of practical support and guidance on all economic activities.
	HIDB's policy of decentralising to local offices to be supported.
	Staff performance indicators should be published in HIDB's Annual Report.
	HIDB should explore the possibility of extending its co-operative arrangements with outside organisations.
	Crofter's Commission's Livestock Loan Scheme to be reviewed.
	No diminution in the functions of either HIDB or Sea Fish Industry Authority.
	Responsibility for supporting tourism development projects should be retained by HIDB.
	Good relations and co-operation between HIDB and the Nature Conservancy Council should be a continuing priority.
	Rahory Deer Farm should not be sold and the deer farming experiment should continue.
	Targets should be set for returns on factory accommodation.
	Greater private sector involvement in providing finance for projects within the Board's area.
	Consideration should be given to extending HIDB's boundary into certain adjoining areas.
	Session 1985-86
Second Report: Fisheries Protection—March 1986	Fishery Protection Vessel Norna should be replaced.
	RAF Nimrods should be replaced by a civil aircraft.
	Clearer numbering and marking of fishing vessels is required.
	The Government continue to oppose any relaxation regarding 10 per cent. by-catch in pout fishery.
	Compulsory calibration of refrigerated sea-water tanks would aid monitoring of pelagic catches.
	EC Fishery Inspectors complement should be increased.
	The Government should continue to ensure that United Kingdom quotas are reserved for bona fide United Kingdom fishermen.
	DAFs keep a close watch on inshore fisheries to ascertain the effect on Salmon fishing.

Social Services

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendation Accepted
	Session 1984-85
Third Report: UGC Cuts and Medical Services Report—May 1985	The NHS should not be expected to engage in widespread funding of medical academic posts nor to replace many lost university posts with newly created NHS posts.
	The Government should continue to monitor the effects of the reductions in academic funding on shortage and new specialities, in particular on pathology.
	Continued monitoring of the spread of clinical academic job losses across grades.
	The Department, the DES and the UGC together examine the effect of UGC funding reductions on clinical dental services.
Fourth Report: Misuse of Drugs—June 1985	National guidelines for developing a framework of services for drug misusers should be established.
	A National Drug Advisory Service should be established.
	An immediate, sizeable and recurring injection of additional money is needed for services for drug misuers.

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendation Accepted
Fifth Report: Medical Education Follow up to 1981 Report — June 1985	Further consideration should be given to regularising the terms and conditions of those individuals who have been in training posts for many years without the prospect of becoming consultants. Continued monitoring by the Department of the clinical assistant grade to ensure that clinical assistant posts are not used as a substitute for consultant expansion. A thorough local examination of the possibilities of extending cross-over as a means of further reducing onerous rotas [of junior hospital doctors].
Sixth Report: Public Expenditure on the Social Services—July 1985	The detailed results of the monitoring exercise on savings actually achieved from the introduction of the limited list be laid before Parliament. The estimated proportion of Family Practitioner Services expenditure met from related charges be published in each year's Public Expenditure White Paper. Provision be made for the evaluation of the latest central initiative, "Helping the Community to Care" and that the results of other evaluations of central initiatives be made available to Parliament as they become available. The Estimates should henceforth include brief explanatory notes on substantial real increases from the previous year's total provision in subhead or subheads. The Department investigate in detail the reasons for the growing number of invalidity beneficiaries.
Seventh Report: The Government's Green Paper 'Reform of Social Security'—July 1985	The Government and the House allow the Department a high degree of financial flexibility with regard to the Social Fund for at least the first few years while national and local needs are established. The White Paper should include plans for monitoring the progress of the Social Fund once it is implemented. The structure of the Social Fund should be sufficiently flexible to cover other areas of need wherever they might be identified: it must not be enclosed in a legislative straitjacket. The automatic payment under entitlement of the new maternity grant should be paid out of a separate and non cash-limited fund, and payments for the expenses of maternity out of the Social Fund must recognise the real costs of maternity. [Partially accepted]. Claimants under the age of 25 with children should receive the full adult rate of income support. The White Paper contain a fuller explanation of the Government's proposals for increasing budgeting help through loans. The Department put forward in the White Paper proposals for some sort of review mechanism. The proposed changes in the assessment procedure be reconsidered in the White Paper and any proposals made be fully supported by evidence and argument. Ministers seriously reconsider the proposal for a combined rent and rates taper.
Session 1985-86
Second Report: Resettlement Units and Re-establishment Centres—February 1986.	In developing new provision for the itinerant homeless, the Department make every effort to ensure that those staff whose skills are not suitable for re-employment elsewhere in the Department can be offered the opportunity of transfer to positions in the replacement facilities provided by local authorities or voluntary organisations. The Government issue immediate guidance to local authorities and voluntary organisations clarifying how, and to what extent, replacement provision will be funded, with regard to both capital and revenue. The Secretary of State postpone closure of the restablishment centres until he can demonstrate that the MSC is able to fill the gap that their closure may create.

Trade and Industry

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
Session 1984-85
Third Report: Trade with China—July 1985	Provision of soft loans where necessary to secure competitiveness of UK exporters.

Transport

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
Session 1984-85

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
Fourth Report: Transport Aspects of the 1985 Public Expenditure White Paper—March and July 1985	The Government agreed: to consider how to include in the White Paper more information on measurement of output against objectives; in particular for road schemes built and under construction, and on benefits from local roads; that schemes which appear in Estimates will continue to be included in the White Paper until completed. (The Department will continue to include schemes over £25 million which are firmly committed but for which no expenditure is expected in expenditure year. Additional information on contracts will be provided with the Supply Estimates); the importance of preserving the real level of investment in National Roads Programme and maintaining present level of output subject to overall public expenditure constraints. (Extra funds for National Roads Programme have been made available in PES.); that there is a need to promote efficient planning of capital projects; this will be taken into account in the current review of the whole system for controlling local authority capital expenditure; to encourage and help local authorities to give road maintenance high priority in 1986-87.
Fifth Report: Marine Pilotage—August 1985	The Government accepted: that the Danish system of auxiliary and permanent auxiliary pilots or variations thereof be considered for this country; that it should be for future pilotage authorities to set the criteria for the issue of certificates but that the criteria should pay due regard to the high standard of expertise and safety awareness needed to navigate in confined waters; that separate pilotage accounts should continue to be made.

Treasury and Civil Service

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
Session 1985-86
Third Report: The Government Expenditure Plans 1986-87 to 1988-89 —February 1986	Charts showing total civil service manpower and targets for future years and civil service manpower by Departments should be included in future [Public Expenditure] White Papers. [Partially accepted]. Reference to reductions together with an explanation of underlying policy and other considerations . . . should be included in Volume 1. [Partially accepted]. Give urgent consideration to how it can assist local authorities to plan ahead with greater certainty. [Accepted in principle]. A table analysing gross and net interest payments be included again in future White Papers. The goods and services category in the economic category analysis tables should be divided into capital and current spending.

Welsh Affairs

Committee, Session, Report and Date	Main Recommendations Accepted
Session 1985-86
First Report: Coastal Sewage Pollution in Wales—December 1985	The Welsh Office should commission surveys of coastal water quality at periodic intervals from bodies independent of the Welsh Water Authority (WWA), and publish the results. [Partially accepted]. Private discharges to coastal waters should be catalogued by the WWA and when full implementation of COPA 1974 permits their regulation, consent procedures should ensure they do not discharge un-disintegrated faecal material to recreational areas. Progress should also be made in eliminating such discharges in other coastal waters. The WWA should accelerate its policy of replacing those antiquated crude sewage outfalls which deposit human excrement in recreational waters with carefully sited long sea outfalls discharging screened macerated effluents. Urgent attention should be given to maintenance and repair of existing sewage outfalls. Research should be carried out by a body such as the Water Research Centre to determine the fate of viruses discharged to the sea in sewage and sufficient resources to support the work should be allocated by the Government There should be a total exclusion of faecal solids from bathing waters and compliance with the E Coli standard of the EEC Directive. The environmental health officers of the ADC should increase their efforts to make the public aware of the dangers of eating shellfish that have not been properly treated and purified The WWA should retain its virological facility and encourage its expansion as a reference centre for the water industry, financed by contractual work from other water authorities. The necessary capital should be made available to allow the tidal water schemes to be carried out in order of priority.

Mr. Mason asked the Prime Minister what was the cost to Her Majesty's Government of providing briefing material and other services in connection with the activities of the 14 departmental select committees of the House of Commons during the financial year 1985-86.

The Prime Minister: A study was carried out in 1980-81 of the work of the departmental Select Committees, which costed the time spent by Departments on this work; a copy of this study was placed in the Library on 10 December 1982. It would not be possible to update this information for the financial year 1985-86 without an extensive new study at disproportionate cost; in general, however, the work occasioned by departmental Select Committees in 1985-86 has not changed markedly from the year on which the 1980-81 study was based.

Israel (Visit)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will report on the purpose and outcome of her recent visit to the state of Israel.

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her visit to Israel.

The Prime Minister: I held friendly and wide-ranging talks with the Israeli Government and with leading Palestinians from the occupied territories. I underlined the importance we attach to the search for middle east peace and our readiness to help if we can.

Dr. Kurt Waldheim

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Prime Minister (1) whether the search of Ministry of Defence records in connection with the allegations relating to Dr. Kurt Waldheim's wartime activities has yet yielded information which would lead Her Majesty's Government to seek from the United Nations copies of all documents in their possession relating to those activities; and if she will make a further statement;

(2) if she will make it her policy to make a statement to the House before 8 June on the interim results of the search of military records of the Ministry of Defence in connection with Dr. Kurt Waldheim's wartime activities.

The Prime Minister: The search of Ministry of Defence records is continuing. It is being given priority. But equally it must be thorough and cannot be tied to a particular deadline. It would be inappropriate to comment, or to consider seeking access to United Nations files, until the search is completed.

Young People

Mr. Lawler asked the Prime Minister what initiatives the Government have taken to further the interests of young people.

The Prime Minister: In education there has been an increase of 18 per cent. in real terms in spending per pupil between 1979-80 and 1984-85. This has enabled the average size of one-teacher classes between 1979 and 1985 to be reduced from 25·9 to 24·9 in primary and from 21 to 20·4 in secondary. In January 1985, the overall pupil-teacher ratio was at a best ever level of 17·8:1. More young children than ever before are receiving nursery education — an increase from 210,000 to 267,000 between 1979 and 1985—and the proportion of young people continuing their education beyond compulsory school age has gone up from 40 to 46 per cent. over the same period. The number of students going into higher education has increased by 78,000 to its highest level—a record proportion of a record age cohort. The number of students on science and engineering courses has increased by 30 per cent. The engineering and technology programme launched by the Secretary of State for Education and Science last year will provide a further 5,000 university and polytechnic places in these subjects. In addition, we are placing greater emphasis on the achievements of higher standards.

Our White Paper "Better Schools" (Cmnd. 9469) set out a range of initiatives to improve standards in schools: we are now taking vigorous action to put these into effect. Examination results have shown a welcome improvement. The number of students leaving school with no qualifications has fallen to below 10 per cent. High priority is being placed on all young people in schools having a broad and balanced education including the opportunity of following a more relevant and practical curriculum: under the technical and vocational education initiatives which started in 1983, and which will involve over 100,000 young people, pilot projects run by education authorities are exploring ways of organising the technical and vocational education of students of all abilities in the 14 to 18 range. In aggregate this will cost £250 million over nine years. In addition, first year enrolments are exceeding expectation for the new certificate of pre-vocational education designed for 16-year-olds remaining in full-time education who are not taking a specific academic or vocational course. In addition, we are promoting the use of computers and information technology in schools through the new micro-electronics education support unit, enhanced teacher training, and through the software in schools scheme. Government expenditure this year on new technology in schools will be some £6 million. We are also promoting better links between industry and education through a variety of projects. The current scheme for Industry Year, to encourage every school to have a mini-enterprise, is an example.

We are acting to improve the quality of teaching. We are promoting more purposeful in-service training and the introduction of new appraisal arrangements. And we have offered substantial additional resources for school teachers' pay, beyond the recent increases, in return for a bargain on duties, appraisal and career development and on a new salary structure which will better reward responsibility, leadership and commitment.

In the field of youth training, the training scheme (YTS) has already helped one million young people and will now provide two years of high quality training and planned work experience for 16-year-old school leavers, and one year for 17-year-old leavers. It will place particular emphasis on quality and occupational relevance; all entrants will have the chance to gain a recognised vocational qualification or credit towards one.

Other measures to enhance the employment prospects of young people include the new workers scheme announced in this year's Budget; the job release scheme; the community programme; and community industry. Our reforms of the wages council system will also make it easier for young people to find work at a rate of pay which they will accept and employers can afford.

For the youth service, we have established a new youth service unit within the Department of Education and Science; published the first circular on youth service policy generally for many years; and established a new national advisory council for the youth service. Grants payable to national voluntary youth organisations for headquarters expenditure have also been substantially increased in total.

The Government have developed a comprehensive strategy for tackling all aspects of drug misuse including an information and education campaign, the appointment of prevention co-ordinators in each local education authority and the expansion of treatment and rehabilitation services. A £1 million pilot campaign to deter teenagers from smoking has also been launched.

In the field of sports and recreation, increased grant to the Sports Council has supported initiatives specifically aimed at encouraging young people to take part in sport and recreation. The Council's national action sport programme, jointly funded by the Manpower Services Commission, will employ over 1,000 sports leaders to encourage young people to take up sport.

Our policies to encourage home ownership have benefited young people and particularly first-time buyers. This country has a very high proportion of owner-occupation in the younger age categories: some 25 per cent. of householders under 25 are owner-occupiers—the highest proportion in Europe.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 3 June.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 3 June.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 3 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Parking Fines

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister which Department is responsible for paying parking fines on behalf of the Home Office.

Mr. Hurd: I have been asked to reply.

The Home Office policy on the payment of parking fines is based on section 80 of the Road Traffic Regulations 1967 which makes provision for a fixed penalty to be imposed on a person who commits an offence. In the light of this, the payment of such penalties is considered to be the responsibility of the person who was in charge of the vehicle at the time the offence was committed.

It is recognised however, that the offence could have been committed in extenuating circumstances and to protect the interests of the individual in such cases, consideration can be given to the payment of an ex gratia award equal to the amount of the penalty. These payments would be made from Home Office funds. Three such payments have been made in the past 12 months.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received since the change in the Government of France concerning continuing support for the all-rail Channel tunnel link.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend received several representations after the time of the change in the Government of France, including confirmation from the new French Government of their strong support for the chosen Channel tunnel project.

Ticketing Machines

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 19 May, Official Report, column 27, concerning underground ticketing machines, what consideration was given by his Department, prior to the granting of approval for the new system as to the effects of the new system on (a) the incidence of machines not providing the correct change and (b) the sums of money wrongly retained from travellers as a result of machines not giving the correct change.

Mr. David Mitchell: A major advantage of the new underground ticketing system is that the passenger-operated ticket-issuing machines will be an integral part of the booking office. They will be far more easily serviced by the booking office staff than the existing isolated machines. This was taken into account in our assessment of LRT's investment proposal.

BREL (Orders)

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the value and percentage of total British Rail Engineering Ltd. orders which have been placed abroad in each of the last three years, giving a breakdown between the countries involved.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail's policy is to buy British whenever the product and price are right. In the years 1983 to 1985 British Rail Engineering Ltd. placed about 95 per cent. by value of its orders with British suppliers — and most of the remainder via United Kingdom-based companies. Details of individual orders are a management matter for BREL, and I understand that a breakdown by country could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Drink-driving Campaign

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what account he took of the passage of relevant information to police traffic officers in designing the current drink-driving campaign; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has received representations from the Association of Chief Police Officers or individual chief officers on the implications for the level of enforcement of the drink-driving law of the current drink-driving campaign.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As I explained in answer to my hon. Friend's questions on 28 April and 9 May, the current focus on drinking and driving was planned in close consultation with representatives of the traffic committee of the Association of Chief Police Officers. Consultation began early in the year and provided an opportunity to take account of police views on the implications for enforcement and other relevant aspects.

Detailed information about the campaign was provided to all police forces by the Department on 17 April. I understand information was also made available by the traffic committee.

Road Projects (Northern Region)

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list the major road construction or improvement projects carried out in the northern region in each year since 1979 together with an estimate of the cost of each at current prices.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The major trunk road schemes carried out in the northern region since 1979 and the cost of each are listed. Further schemes are in preparation to start in the next two years at an estimated cost of an additional £91 million.

		Estimated Cost £ million (May 1986 Prices)
1980	A1 Felton Bypass	4·38
1981	A66 Stockton-Thornaby Bypass	20·93
1982	A19 Billingham Bypass	22·09
1983	A66 Bowes Bypass	9·25
	A1 Berwick Bypass	11·25
	A1 Belford Bypass	4·12
	A69 Bardon Mill Diversion	2·26
1985	A69 Greenhead Diversion	3·79
	A1 Alnwick Bypass Stage II	5·56
	A66 Darlington Bypass	8·79
	A69 Team Valley Grade Separated Junction	2·92
1986	A69 Cross Lane Interchange Phases I and II	2·00

In addition to the expenditure listed, about £10·4 million has been spent between 1979 and 1986 on small improvement schemes.

Woolwich Ferry

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will state the dates since 1 April when the Woolwich free ferry was not operating as planned together with the nature and period of the respective delays;

(2) if he is satisfied with the level of performance of the Woolwich free ferry service since 1 April; if he will investigate the reasons for reduction or cessation of service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand there have been seven days with no service and 34 days with some disruption due to labour difficulties or mechanical failure.

As I said in my answer to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 28 April at column 311, Greenwich borough council is operating the Woolwich ferry as our agent and questions on its day-to-day operation should be addressed to the council.

Beckton and Tower Hill (Trunk Road)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for a new trunk road between Beckton and Tower hill.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None. A significant part of the A13 became a trunk road on 1 April, as a basis for improvements relating to docklands access. There are no plans to extend trunking as far as Tower hill.

British Airways and KLM (Agreement)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in view of the decision of the European Court of Justice on 30 April, he will now declare null and void the bilateral tariff and pooling agreement concluded by British Airways and KLM on the Heathrow to Amsterdam route in 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The European Court of Justice has made it clear that inter-airline agreements cannot automatically be regarded as contrary to article 85(1) of the treaty of Rome, but must be scrutinised and ruled upon to determine their validity. This process can be carried out either under a Council regulation, or by individual member states, or by the Commission. The Government are now considering how best to act in the light of this judgment.

Stubbings Bypass

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to announce his decision on the A423 Stubbings bypass following the public inquiry in September 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The inspector's report is expected shortly.

A decision should not be expected before the autumn.

Road Fill

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to publish the findings of the inter-departmental committee's report on the use of waste material for road fill.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have today published this report in full, so that the background to the findings is clearly understood. The report concluded that the experimental dual tendering arrangements have been ineffective in increasing the use of material for road fill. Given that road fill can at best make only a very small contribution to reducing the stock of waste material, it argues that it is better to abandon dual tendering and place greater reliance on competitive pricing of waste material than to retain dual tendering in a modified form. Procedures to ensure better information about sources of waste material should be provided to tenderers so that these sources are not overlooked. Before the Government decide whether to accept these conclusions, I am consulting interested organisations and expect to receive their comments by 25 July 1986.

Copies of the report have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

TRANSPORT

Trailers (Speed Limits)

Mr. Powley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has yet decided on regulations to amend the speed limits for vehicles towing trailers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has today laid regulations amending the speed limits for vehicles towing trailers. These, if approved by Parliament, will come into effect within the next two months.

The main change is to increase, from 50 mph to 60 mph, the limit for cars and light vans towing trailers on dual carriageways and motorways. The limits for these vehicles towing trailers will then be 10 mph below the national road speed limits.

I am satisfied that these new limits allow for safe maximum speeds in normal conditions and that they will not have an adverse effect on road safety.

Trunk Roads (Mobile Refreshment Vans)

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the placement of unauthorised signs advertising mobile refreshment vans in trunk road laybys.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 27]: I have received in the last three months two letters from hon. Friends on behalf of constituents who have expressed concern about such signs.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Teaching Costs

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the allocation for teaching costs from education and library boards for each of the further education colleges in Northern Ireland at present and for each of the past three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The education and library boards meet directly the cost of employing part-time lecturers and the additional hours of full-time lecturers. The costs for each college are given in the following table.

College	1983-84 £000's	1984-85 £000's	1985-86 £000's

Note: Figures for 1986-87 are not available.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what information he has on the full-time staff: Burnham unit ratio for each further education college in Northern Ireland;

(2) what information he has on the part-time staff: Burnham unit ratio for each further education college in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the numbers of long-term unemployed in the Province at the latest date and the comparable figures for May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: At 10 April 1986, 60,868 claimants had been continuously unemployed for more than one year in Northern Ireland. At April 1979 (figures for May are not available), 19,916 unemployed people had been registered at employment service jobmarkets for more than one year.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the level of youth unemployment in the Province at the latest date; and what were the figures for May 1979.

Dr. Boyson: At 10 April 1986, 47,116 unemployment claimants in Northern Ireland were under 25 years old. At April 1979 (figures for May are not available), 22,469 unemployed people aged under 25 were registered at employment service jobmarkets in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many job vacancies there were in the Province at the latest date; and what was the figure for May 1979.

Dr. Boyson: At 4 April 1985 there were 2,206 unfilled vacancies for adults and 576 for young people (under age 18) at employment service jobmarkets in Northern Ireland. At May 1979 there were 1,558 unfilled vacancies for adults and 306 for young people.

Job Creation

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to reduce long-term unemployment in the Province.

Dr. Boyson: On 26 March I announced a package of enterprise and employment measures for Northern Ireland, designed to reduce long-term unemployment. These include: individual in-depth counselling interviews; short restart courses; a £20 weekly jobstart allowance; and an extra 325 job places available in the Enterprise Ulster and Action for Community Employment schemes.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to reduce youth unemployment in the Province.

Dr. Boyson: A great deal is being done in Northern Ireland through community employment schemes, assistance to those wanting to start their own business, and training schemes, including the youth training programme. This will continue. In addition, I announced in March the introduction of a new workers scheme which gives employers incentives to take on 18 to 20-year-olds at realistic wages. The employment prospects of young people will also be improved by legislation which will be brought forward to take under-21s out of the scope of wages councils.

Intimidation

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing how many acts of intimidation have been reported against members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, the Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve full-time and the Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve part-time, while they were off duty, detailing specifically (a) whether these aspects involved petrol bombs, stonings, shootings, (b) if property was damaged and to what extent, (c) whether people were injured, and how severe those injuries were, (d) where the incidents took place and (e) whether they were during the day or the night, since 1 March.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 6 May 1986, c. 37]: Information in the precise form requested is not readily available from existing records and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Such information as is available however indicates that during the period 1 March to 7 May 1985 there were 368 incidents of intimidation involving officers of the Royal Ulster Constabularly, ex-members and police families. Of these, 284 were attacks on or intimidation at homes; 116 involved regular members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, 115 involved members of the full-time Reserve and the remaining 53 involved members of the part-time Reserve. The attacks included 39 petrol bombings, 140 stonings and 11 shootings. Fortunately few injuries, none serious, have resulted from these despicable acts.

Fatalities

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of deaths due to terrorist and paramilitary activity in Northern Ireland during the six months since 15 November 1985.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 16 May 1986 c. 566.]: Since 15 November 1985, 22 people are believed to have been killed by members of terrorist or paramilitary organisations in Northern Ireland.

Ainsworth Avenue, Belfast (Attacks)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homes of Protestant families were attacked in the Ainsworth avenue district of Belfast during the weekend of 9 to 11 May; what security is provided for these families; if he is satisfied with the present arrangements for the safety of these Protestants; who attacked them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: In the early hours of 10 May a block of five houses in Ainsworth avenue was attacked. Following this incident the police made a number of arrests and their inquiries are continuing. To date (20 May) one person has been charged with riotous behaviour.

The Ainsworth avenue/Springfield road area has over many years seen a number of inter-communal assaults and disturbances. It has therefore received particular attention from the police. The details of this are an operational matter for the Chief Constable but I am satisfied that everything possible is being done to preserve the peace in the area.

I understand that meetings have taken place between residents, police representatives, local councillors and appropriate officials to discuss security and that since the recent attacks the police have been in daily contact with the residents.

Construction (Ballyhalbert)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the proposed primary school scheme at Victoria school, Ballyhalbert, is still a priority scheme; at what stage is the preparation of the tender documents; and during which year work is expected to commence.

Dr. Mawhinney: Yes. Planning of the scheme is at a very early stage and the point has not been reached at which a tender document could be prepared. The timing of the commencement of work on the scheme will depend on the availability of finance for the school building programme and on the completion of the necessary planning.

Spina Bifida

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what educational and training facilities are available for young people suffering from spina bifida in the constituency of Strangford to prepare them for employment at the age of 18 years; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Facilities for these young people are available at secondary schools and colleges of further education in the constituency. Those who are unable to attend ordinary secondary schools and colleges of further education normally attend special schools in Belfast.

Terrorism (Railways)

Mr. A. Cecil Walker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list the amount of compensation paid to individuals in respect of claims for compensation in relation to incidents since 1970 attributable to Republican terrorist groups involving trains, the railway line and railway property;

(2) if he will list, with dates, those incidents since 1970 attributable to Republican terrorist groups involving trains, the railway line and railway property on the route from Belfast to Dublin which have given rise to payments of, or claims for, compensation; and how much in monetary terms has been paid for such incidents (a) to Northern Ireland Railways and (b) to Coras Iompair Eireann.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The table provides general information in respect of claims for terrorist damage which have been made by the companies, Northern Ireland Railways (NIR) and Coras Iompair Eireann (CIE).

Year of claim	NIR	CIE	Total
1973	2	1	3
1974	—	—	—
1975	1	3	4
1976	1	2	3
1977	4	1	5
1978	10	2	12
1979	8	3	11
1980	8	2	10
1981	12	3	15
1982	10	2	12
1983	2	—	2
1984	—	—	—
1985	2	—	2
*1986	1	1	2
TOTALS	61	20	81

* Up to 23 May 1986.

Notes:

(1) The number of claims shown for 1973 to 1976 inclusive relates only to claims still in existence at the time of computerisation of records in August 1977. Information for the years 1970 to 1972 could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

(2) It is not possible to attribute responsibility for damage to particular terrorist groups or to isolate claims specifically to the Belfast-Dublin line.

Compensation amounting to £4,529,007 (£3,527,584 to NI Railways and £1,001,423 to CIE) has been paid in respect of 62 claims. In the remaining 19 cases the claims were abandoned, withdrawn, refused or payments have yet to be made.

AOR Contract

Mr. Trotter asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will place in the Library a copy of the report made by P. A. Consultants on the tender made by Harland and Wolff for the auxiliary oil replenishment vessel contract.

Dr. Boyson: No. The report contains commercially confidential information.

Employment

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make a statement on the group set up to assist employment prospects in the Carrickfergus area, giving details of its composition, brief, resources and any undertakings given by Her Majesty's Government in respect of requests or recommendations made by this group;

(2) if he will make a statement on the work to date of the special task force established to help employment prospects in the East Antrim area;

(3) if he will give consideration to appointing further task forces to assist the needs of areas with long standing problems of high unemployment.

Dr. Boyson: I have set up a working group, composed of officials of the Department of Economic Development, the Industrial Development Board and the local enterprise development unit, to examine ways of alleviating the effects of the redundancies caused by the impending closure of the Rothmans factory at Carrickfergus. The group reports to me on a regular basis. As a result of its work, on the spot information about job vacancies is being provided and individual counselling is being provided to those who request it. The Department of Economic Development is also co-operating with Rothmans, LEDU and Enterprise Carrick to provide information and guidance on the scope for the establishment of small enterprises in the area. Last week I announced an increase from 45 per cent. to 50 per cent. in the rate of industrial development grant available in the Carrickfergus area.

I shall certainly consider setting up such special groups again where large scale redundancies occur.

Training Centres

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the courses available in each Government training centre in Northern Ireland, indicating the uptake of each course and the number of staff employed in each course.

Dr. Boyson: The table indicates the courses available at each training centre and the number of persons entering training during the year ended 31 March 1986.

Each course is manned by one instructor per class of 10-12 trainees and all centres have additional instructional staff to cover courses in the event of sickness, annual leave and so on.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what account is taken of local need, population distribution and fair employment aims in deciding the allocation of courses and resources among Government training centres.

Dr. Boyson: The allocation of courses and resources at training centres is based on the needs of industry, industrial promotion and of individuals in the areas which the centres serve. In allocating such courses and resources the Government are concerned to ensure equality of opportunity of access to training in accordance with the principles of fair employment legislation.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many deaths from cervical cancer there have been in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Deaths from cervical cancer—Northern Ireland

	Number
1981	43
1982	48
1983	39
1984	30
1985	27

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases where cervical cancer was diagnosed in each of the past five years were, or are being, successfully treated.

Mr. Needham: The number of new cases of cervical cancer (malignant neoplasm and carcinoma in situ of the cervix uteri) registered with the Northern Ireland cancer registration scheme for each of the years from 1980 to 1984 is given in table A.

It is not possible to provide information concerning the number of those who were or are being successfully treated for this disease. The number of deaths registered with the general register office in these years, where cervical cancer was the principal cause of death, and the rate per 100,000 of the female population aged 15 and over are given in table B.

The two sets of statistics should not be directly associated for any one year in view of the known deficiencies in the data from the Northern Ireland cancer registration scheme and the variation in time between a case being registered and a death occurring.

Table A
New cases of malignant neoplasm and carcinoma in situ of the cervix uteri registered 1980-84

	New cases
1980	136 (63)
1981	137 (48)
1982	152 (69)
1983	217 (121)
1984	189 (113)

Note: Figures in brackets relate to cases of carcinoma in situ included in total.

Table B

1981	43	7·21
1982	48	7·99
1983	39	6·44
1984	30	4·91

Note: All deaths shown in above table relate to deaths from malignant neoplasm of cervix uteri.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average length of time taken to deal with claims for attendance allowance and appeals, at each stage, against refusal of this allowance.

Mr. Needham: The average time between the receipt of a claim and determination of title is about 17 weeks. Attendance allowance appeals on medical questions are considered by way of review and a sample check made recently indicated that the average time taken was about 10 weeks.

Mobility and Attendance Allowances

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average length of time taken to deal with claims for mobility allowance and appeals, at each stage, against refusal of this allowance.

Mr. Needham: The average time between the receipt of a claim and determination of title is just less than six weeks. The other information is not available. However, the average time taken by a medical board or medical appeal tribunal to deal with an appeal, calculated from small recent surveys, was two weeks and 23 weeks respectively.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are receiving (a) mobility allowance and (b) attendance allowance at (i) higher rate and (ii) lower rate and (c) both allowances.

Mr. Needham: There are 9,600 people receiving mobility allowance and 21,700 receiving attendance allowance of whom 11,500 are being paid at the higher rate. Information about the number of people receiving both allowances is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for attendance allowance and mobility allowance in each of the past five years were granted on their initial application and at each review or appeal stage.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows. All figures related to decisions given in the relevant years, not to the results of claims made in those years. Four attendance allowance appeals considered by way of review include awards from the lower to the higher rate.

(a) Attendance allowance

	Initial applications granted	Reviews decided in claimants favour
1981	5,051	635
1982	6,682	1,023
1983	7,938	850

Navan Fort

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the preservation of Navan Fort and access of the public thereto; and what he estimates will be the effect on the economy and employment of the prohibition of quarrying.

Mr. Needham: Navan Fort is a historic monument of primary archaeological importance which is in the ownership of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. The preservation of the fort itself, therefore, is secure and the public has complete freedom of access.

Officials are currently in discussion with the operator of the quarry adjacent to Navan Fort about the future of the business in the light of the decision to refuse planning permission for continued quarry operations.

Assembly

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his future plans for the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Mr. Tom King: I am at present considering the position of the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Terrorism

Mr. A. Cecil Walker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the number of bomb plantings, the number of shooting incidents and the number of attacks on the security forces in the five-month period commencing 15 November 1985; and how this compares with the previous five-month period in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

	*Bomb incidents	Shootings	Attacks on the RUC	Attacks on the regular army UDR†
1 June to 14 November 1985	128	85	394	60
15 November to 30 April 1985	79	126	681	40

* Includes explosions and devices neutralised.
† Includes all attacks involving firearms or explosives and other incidents which resulted in death or injury or in which plastic baton rounds were discharged.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of persons charged under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act and the Prevention of Terrorism Act in 1984 and 1985 in Northern Ireland; and what was the total number of persons charged under other Acts with terrorist-type offences in Northern Ireland for 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 14 May 1986, c. 463-4]: The information is as follows:

	1984	1985
Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978	*14	*2
Prevention of terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984	—	5
Persons charged with other terrorist-type offences‡	524	516

* Ten of these were also charged under other legislation.
† One of these was also charged under legislation.
‡ To identify separately persons charged with statutory offences and persons charged with common law offences would involve disproportionate cost.

ENERGY

Electricity Prices

Mr. Woodall asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a table showing the average price per unit of electricity supplied to British industry for each year since 1970.

Mr. Goodlad: The average revenue per kWh of electricity sold to industrial consumers in Great Britain from 1970 to 1984 was as follows:

	Pence
1970	0·654
1971	0·721
1972	0·739
1973	0·742

Nuclear Materials (Safety)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will (a) give the breakdown of expenditure by the International Atomic Energy Agency's budget as between safety, safeguards, medical research and promotional activity and (b) indicate whether any representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government since May 1979 to the board of governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency urging that a higher proportion of its budget be allocated to safety issues.

Mr. Goodlad: The following allocations of proposed expenditure are made in the 1986 budget of the International Atomic Energy Agency:

	$ million
Nuclear Safety and Radiation Protection	5·0
Safeguards	33·3
Nuclear Power and Fuel Cycle	8·1
Nuclear Applications (of which Human Health accounts for £2·3 million)	14·5
Direction and Support (of which Technical Co-operation Servicing and Co-ordination accounts for $5·0 million)	34

Her Majesty's Government have regularly stressed our support for the IAEA's work in the field of nuclear safety.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will indicate in constant prices the annual contribution paid by the United Kingdom Government to the International Atomic Energy Agency since 1957.

Mr. Goodlad: The IAEA regular budget is drawn up in United States dollars and member states contributions are assessed in that currency. The table sets out the United Kingdom's assessed contribution to that budget in the period 1958-1985, together with the equivalent figures at 1985 prices.

Note
There is no immediately appropriate deflator for converting these figures to constant prices. The one employed was the purchasing power of the dollar in terms of United States consumer prices.

National Coal Board

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much aid has been given since 1979 to the National Coal Board in grants and loans in respect of its Northumberland, Durham and Tyne and Wear operations.

Mr. David Hunt: Grant aid to the National Coal Board since 1979 totals £5,700 million, capital investment by the Board in the same period totals £4,800 million. Assistance is given to the National Coal Board in respect of its operations nationally, and no regional allocations are made.

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Energy how may people were employed by the National Coal Board in the Northumberland and Durham area for each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of wage earners on colliery books in the north-east area of British Coal at the end of each year since 1979-80 was as follows:

	Number
1979-80	33,400
1980-81	32,000
1981-82	29,000
1982-83	26,400
1983-84	22,900
1984-85	21,900
1985-86	17,900

Nuclear Industry

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will (a) list for each year of operation the percentage of the yearly total of nuclear material reprocessed in the Windscale R204 plant that arose from reactors operated by the electricity boards and (b) publish the percentage of the total throughput of spent fuel processed in the Windscale B204 plant that came from civilian reactors;

(2) on how many occasions Her Majesty's Government have informed (a) the European Commission and (b) the International Atomic Energy Agency that safeguarded plutonium had been withdrawn from safeguards under the article 14 provisions of the 1978 tripartite safeguards treaty (Cmnd. 6730);

(3) if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Walthamstow, East (Mr. Deakins), Official Report, column 292, of 5 December 1985, he will (a) make an estimate of the cost of implementation of the full separation of civil and military facilities and activities at Sellafield and (b) state what proportions of the annual United Kingdom payment to the International Atomic Energy Agency such a safeguards system would require.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy what proportions of his time is devoted to the assessment of British Nuclear Fuel Ltd's operation of the reactors at Calder Hall and Chapel Cross.

Mr. Goodlad: These reactors are regularly inspected by the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate. British Nuclear Fuels also reports to my Department on any relevant commercial aspects of its operation. I commit as much time to any matters requiring my attention as necessary.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department has any plans to issue guidance to British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. on the use of stockpiled safeguarded civil origin plutonium at Sellafield in mixed oxide fuel for (a) advanced gas-cooled reactors and (b) fast breeder reactors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The use of mixed uranium and plutonium fuel in fast reactors is well established. The generating boards have no plans at present to use such fuel in their advanced gas-cooled reactors.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list for each year of the operation of British Nuclear Fuel plc's chemical separation plant B205 at Sellafield (a) the weight of plutonium reprocessed from spent fuel from the Central Electricity Generating Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board reactors and (b) the total tonnage of spent fuel reprocessed from civil reactors.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to a question from the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 11 December 1985 at column 638-39.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown), Official Report, 26 July 1985, column 806, whether he will set out the reasons why it is not in the public interest to publish details of nuclear materials withdrawn from nuclear safeguards under article 14 of the tripartite safeguards treaty (Cmnd. 6730).

Mr. Goodlad: For national security reasons.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown), Official Report, 26 July 1985, column 806, which reactors are included within the definition of civil reactors to which he refers in relation to plutonium withdrawn from safeguards.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas), Official Report, 1 May, column 460, he will list the nuclear reactors from which the nuclear material to which he makes reference originated.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Members to my earlier answer to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) of 18 December 1984 at column 82.

Mr. D. E Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations have taken place between his Department and the Central Electricity Generating Board in 1986 on (a) plutonium and (b) the safeguarding of nuclear materials generated in the Central Electricity Generating Board's nuclear reactors against diversion to military use.

Mr. Goodlad: My Department has had various discussions with the CEGB on these matters.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if the Central Electricity Generating Board has any plans to hold an exercise simulating a nuclear emergency presenting a radiological hazard to the local population at one of its Magnox power stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by the Central Electricity Generating Board that it regularly exercises its contingency plans at all its sites. These exercises are witnessed by observers from the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate, and a number of further exercises are being planned.

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed of 25 March, Official Report, column 407, the estimated costs of the European fast reactor demonstration reprocessing plant are priced in 1986 terms; and if he will identify the waste management facilities estimated to cost one quarter of the total figure.

Mr. Goodlad: BNFL and the UKAEA advise me that the indicative estimate of £300 million given for the European fast reactor demonstration reprocessing plant in my answer of 25 March is based upon costings at January 1985 prices. That estimate includes volume reduction plant and interim storage facilities for all types of waste produced.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on nuclear safeguards at Sellafield, Official Report, 6 May, column 107, he will state when his Department came to an agreement not to divulge details on safeguards discussions with the European Parliament; and at whose initiative the decision was taken.

Mr. Goodlad: I have nothing to add to my right hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) of 6 May 1986 at column 107.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas), Official Report, 6 May column 106, on plutonium all the occurrences, naming each country as appropriate, of the re-transfer of civil plutonium from the United Kingdom, and if he will list the amounts of plutonium involved in each transaction.

Mr. Goodlad: Details of individual transfers are confidential to the Governments involved.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements are in force for security at the Central Electricity Generating Board site of South Killingholme; and who will be responsible for protection of contractors' equipment.

Mr. Peter Walker: I shall ask the chairman of the CEGB to write to the hon. Member.

North Sea Oil

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will detail in the Official Report those representations which he has received requesting permission to suspend planned drilling or annexe B development, detailing in each case the oil company and specific field involved.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I refer to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 15 May 1986 at column 503-4.

Superphénix Fast Reactor, Malville

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessments have been made by his Department since 1979 of the implications for the United Kingdom of the maximum credible accident at the Superphénix fast reactor at Malville; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: As agreed at the Tokyo economic summit, it is the responsibility of each country engaged in nuclear power generation to provide detailed and complete information on nuclear emergencies and accidents with potential trans-boundary consequences. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 22 May about the agreement between Her Majesty's Government and the French Government which refers to the actions to be taken in the event of an accident occurring in either country which could have radiological consequences for the other.

EC (Reactor Safety)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether, at the next meeting of the European Community Energy Ministers, he will raise the implications of the Chernobyl accident for the safety assessments of operational and proposed European reactors, particularly those of new design; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: As envisaged at the Tokyo summit, the International Atomic Energy Agency provides the principal forum for examination of the implications of the Chernobyl accident for nuclear safety. The first step must be consideration of the detailed information on the causes of the accident and subsequent events which the Soviet Government are expected to present at the IAEA later this summer.

Foratom Status Report

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library a copy of the Foratom status report on nuclear power in Western Europe.

Mr. Goodlad: Yes.

Ministerial Vehicles (Parking Tickets)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Energy what departmental business took ministerial vehicles to Knightsbridge and London airport in 1985 which resulted in parking tickets being issued.

Mr. Peter Walker: The car at Heathrow was meeting a Minister returning from an official engagement. The car in Knightsbridge was being used in connection with the purchase of an official gift required for a ministerial visit.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the addition to the central Government borrowing requirement in 1984; and how much this cost in interest payments in 1985.

Mr. MacGregor: The central Government borrowing requirement on own account was £6·6 billion in 1984-85. Applying to that borrowing the average of the interest rates applicable in 1985-86 to all new central Government borrowing in 1984-85 (including lending to the rest of the public sector, and the refinance of maturing debt), interest payments in 1985-86 on the £6·6 billion amounted to around £0·6 billion.

Revenue Statistics

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of total Government revenue has been received from (a) direct taxation of individuals, (b) indirect taxation, including excise duties and car tax, (c) North sea oil and gas taxation and (d) sales of public assets in each of the past five years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The figures are as follows:

Percentages of general Government receipts

	(a) Taxes on personal incomes	*(b) Expenditure taxes	(c) North Sea revenues
1981-82	25·7	40·0	5·8
1982-83	24·9	38·4	6·4

* Including local authority rates.
† Estimates (see FSBR, Table 1.2).

The proceeds from sales of public assets are not treated as revenue, but as negative expenditure.

Estimates of privatisation proceeds were given in the 1986 Public Expenditure White Paper, Cmnd. 9702–II (tables 2.1 and 2.2). Some estimates of other asset sales were give in answer to the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on 28 January at columns 441-2.

Wage Increases

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, when he next meets the director general of the Confederation of British Industry, he will raise with him the subject of private sector wage increases which exceed the rate of inflation or which exceed productivity improvements.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has discussed the problem of excessive pay rises with the Director General of the CBI on a number of occasions, and will no doubt continue to do so.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers receive mortgage interest relief at above the standard rate of income tax; how many taxpayers each year receive such relief on a new or extended mortgage which replaces an existing mortgage; and what is the average amount of mortgage tax relief received by each of those categories.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is estimated that in 1986-87 about 800,000 mortgagors receive relief at rates in excess of the basic rate of income tax. The average value of the relief for this group is about £1,200 per annum of which about a third is due to relief above the basic rate. Analysis of such relief for new or extended mortgages is not available centrally.

Gross National Product

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the ranking of the United Kingdom in world tables of gross national product per head in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. MacGregor: Figures published annually by the World Bank show the United Kingdom ranked 20th in 1976, 19th in 1977-1980, 18th in 1981 and 1982, and 17th in 1983 (the last year for which the World Bank has published figures).

Freeports

Mr. Best asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, further to his answer of 1 May, Official Report, columns 476-7, he will publish in the Official Report the information he has as to which concessions exist in freeports in other European Economic Community countries which are not available in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brooke: All the customs duty reliefs which are available in freeports in other European Economic Community countries, operating under the EC free zone directive, are also available in the United Kingdom. I am not aware of the concessions made with regard to other duties and taxes except that in the freeport of Hamburg domestic VAT is not charged on supplies made within the zone and excise goods may be stored without payment of duty.

A number of areas popularly known in other member states as freeports do not operate under the free zone directive but are, in fact, warehousing systems. Rotterdam, Le Havre, and Shannon are examples. These offer facilities similar to those available in customs and excise warehouses in the United Kingdom.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Fallon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many new companies were registered for value added tax in the northern region in each year since 1979; and what was the net change in each year.

Mr. Brooke: The number of new registrations for value added tax, together with the net change, for the area covered by the value added tax offices at Middlesborough, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and Washington in each of the calendar years since 1979 is as follows:

	Number	Change
1979	5,607	+1,680
1980	5,568	+533
1981	4,769	+1,278
1982	5,260	+472
1983	5,800	+953
1984	5,821	+620
1985	6,046	−198

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect of the elimination of value added tax payments on credit transactions between registered traders on the tax yield on the assumption that Customs and Excise continues to take appropriate measures to collect all revenue due; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: As I told the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) on 20 November 1985 at column 190 any loss could be prevented. However, steps would have to be taken to ensure that tax currently charged on taxable supplies to businesses which is irrecoverable by them was not lost to the Exchequer. These steps, including the need to separate credit and cash transactions, would involve extra complexity both in the operation of the tax and for the trader.

Members' Car Allowance

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make an extra-statutory concession to exempt from income tax car mileage allowance paid to hon. Members in respect of travel from Westminister to their homes within a 20-mile radius of Westminister after 11 pm on days the House does not rise until that time or later.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The general rule is that tax is payable on mileage allowances paid for travel between home and work, and it would not be appropriate to introduce a special exemption for hon. Members in respect of travel between Westminister and their homes.

Unemployment (Departmental Cost)

Mr. Clay asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimate of the total cost to his Department of unemployment in (a) the northern region and (b) Sunderland.

Mr. MacGregor: The overall cost of unemployment and supplementary benefit paid to the unemployed is estimated to be £5·6 billion in 1986-87. In addition, it is estimated that £1·15 billion will be paid in housing benefit, a benefit which can continue to be paid if the recipient finds employment. A regional breakdown of this expenditure would only be available at disproportionate cost. It is not possible to estimate the tax revenue forgone.

Bank of England

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1970 the Government's income from the Bank of England; and what information he has over the same period on the German Government's income from the German Central Bank.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the payments which the Bank of England makes to the Treasury in lieu of dividend under section 1(4) of the Bank of England Act 1946. The amounts paid are published in the Bank of England's report and accounts, as follows:

*Year	£ million†

Child Benefit and Tax Allowances

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the rates of child benefit, single person's tax allowance and married man's allowance at current and at 1979 prices, in April each year since 1979 up to April 1986 on the same basis as his reply of 3rd December 1985 to the hon. Member for Kensington, Official Report, columns 173-174.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 22 May 1986, c. 310]: Information is as follows:

Taxation

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will up-date to 1986-87 the tax thresholds for a single person, married couple without children, married couple with two children and four children on the same basis as appendix C of the 1985 "Inland Revenue Statistics".

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 22 May 1986, c. 310]: Latest estimates for 1985-86 and 1986-87 are as follows:

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Closures

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many secondary schools subject to a section 12 order have been kept open as a result of an appeal to the Secretary of State by parents or governors in each of the last seven years;

(2) how many primary schools subject to a section 12 order have been kept open as a result of an appeal to the Secretary of State by parents or governors in each of the last seven years.

Mr. Dunn: Since the Education Act 1980 came into force, 122 out of a total of 1,509 school closure proposals have been rejected by the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State considered these cases on their individual merits and reached his decisions on the basis of all the relevant factors, including any objections made by parents or governors.

General Certificate of Secondary Education

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has now received in total against the proposed introduction of the general certificate of secondary education; and how many of these representations are from (a) local education authorities, (b) examination boards or groups, (c) independent or private schools, (d) state schools, (e) right hon. and hon. Members and (f) other individuals.

Mr. Chris Patten: Since the beginning of the year, the Department has received some 1,400 letters from various bodies and individuals requesting that the GCSE be delayed. Of these, 27 are from local education authorities, two are from examining groups and four are from CSE examinations boards. Further information is not available in the form requested.

Education Initiatives

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the initiatives taken in education since June 1983 by his Department.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government's principal concern in education has been to raise standards at all ability levels and to obtain better value for money throughout the education system. We have put great emphasis on the need for a closer relationship between the education service and the outside world, particularly industry and commerce. The following initiatives have been taken:

In Schools

The Government's principal achievements in respect to the schools are set out in the White Paper "Better Schools" (Cmnd. 9469) published on 26 March 1985. In particular, the definition with greater clarity of the objectives and content of the curriculum, financial support for a pilot initiative to promote technical and vocational education for 14 to 18-year-olds in schools and colleges; the support of a pilot programme for improving the education of lower attaining pupils; and the establishment of a scheme for in-service grants for teachers.

Decisions have been taken to introduce a new system of examinations at 16, the general certificate of secondary education, based on national criteria; to introduce the AS level examination to broaden A-level studies; and to introduce, and to develop, through specially financed pilot projects, records of achievement for all school leavers.

The Education Bill, now before Parliament, will reform school government, giving more influence to parents. It will also provide for new financial arrangements to make in-service training of teachers more effective.

All initial training courses are being reviewed and strengthened where necessary.

Spending per pupil increased by 18 per cent. between 1979-80 and 1984-85, with a best ever overall pupil-teacher ratio of 17·8:1 in January 1985.

In Adult and Continuing Education

Implementing PICKUP to promote provision of updating and broadening the skills of those in mid-career; the programme is helping to secure an increase in updating education of about 10 per cent. a year, especially in the areas of technology and business studies.

Establishing over 100 local collaborative projects in which educational institutions and firms work in partnership to offer adult training and updating—a joint venture between PICKUP and the MSC within the Government's adult training campaign.

Initiating REPLAN for meeting more effectively the education needs of unemployed adults.

Promoting the establishment of a national unit for the development of continuing education.

In Higher Education

Since 1979 the number of home students in higher education has increased, including a general shift towards vocational courses and specifically a 30 per cent. increase in the numbers on science and engineering courses. This reflects a 15 per cent. growth in the proportion of 18 to 19-year-olds entering higher education and an increase of 12 per cent. in the number of mature entrants. At the same time measures to preserve and enhance quality and to increase the cost-effectiveness of the system and its responsiveness to the needs of the economy have been pursued.

As elements within the movement towards science and engineering, launching the information technology initiative in 1982 and the engineering and technology programme with industry itself contributing £24 million. Specific measures to link higher education and industry in collaborative projects include the appointment of more industrialists to educational bodies.

In Further Education

Setting out and implementing important decisions for vocational education in the White Paper "Training for Jobs".

The formation of the Business and Technician Education Council with an important role in the preparation of skilled manpower.

Introducing the new certificate of pre-vocational education (CPVE) as an additional option in the range of courses preparing young people for the world of work, and available in both schools and colleges.

The establishment of a scheme of in-service training grants for further education lecturers.

The operation of college-employer links project (CELP) aimed at increasing colleges' responsiveness to employers' needs and the awareness of the latter of college facilities.

Developing the work of the further education unit, giving it new status and developing the presentation of its reports.

The Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education has been set up to review and evaluate initial teacher training courses for which criteria have been set down.

Establishing the education counselling and credit transfer information service (ECCTIS); and supporting the development of a computer-aided careers guidance system for graduates.

Providing resources for "new blood" in the universities; and for the enhancement of equipment in selected centres of high quality research in the universities.

Reviewing academic validation procedures in the public sector of higher education a committee under Sir Norman Lindop reported in 1985, and the Government's position was set out in a statement on 17 March 1986.

Providing support for programmes of efficiency studies in the universities and in public sector higher education.

Generally in Education

Publishing reports of formal inspections by Her Majesty's Inspectorate and introducing arrangements for more systematic follow-up action, and publishing the annual HMI report on the observed effects of LEA expenditure policies.

Introducing a scheme of education support grants which covered just over £39 million of expenditure in 1985-86 on selected activities of national education importance, as provided for under the Education (Grants and Awards) Act 1984.

Introducing new arrangements for decision-making and management within the Department, aimed at greater efficiency and value for money.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the future of the Medical Research Council's mammaliary genome unit; and if he will make a statement on its future.

Mr. Walden: The Department has received five letters from right hon. and hon. Members and other interested parties about the future of the Medical Research Council's mammalian genome unit. I would also refer the hon. Member to my reply of 16 april at column 383 to a question from the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Etterick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel).

Leicester (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the recent visit to Leicester by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Walden).

Mr. Walden: My visit to Leicester university on 12 May was interesting and informative. I had useful discussions on higher education policies with academic staff and students, and I saw and heard in detail about work in four departments and units of the university.

National Advisory Body (Planning Exercise)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in the past month on the planning exercise of the National Advisory Body for 1987-88.

Mr. Walden: Since the secretariat of the National Advisory Body wrote to institutions on 4 April with proposals for student numbers in 1987-88, about 400 representations have been received.

Student Awards

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish figures showing the cost of student awards in each year since 1982-83, including an estimate for 1985-86, distinguishing between mandatory and discretionary awards and between awards for fees and awards for maintenance, and including an estimate for administrative costs.

Mr. Walden: The table below provides a breakdown of expenditure on student awards as requested. The related administrative costs are not available.

Middle School, Verwood

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to reach a decision in connection with the proposals concerning the provision of a voluntary-aided middle school in Verwood, Dorset.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is aware of the urgency of these proposals and expects to be able to reach a decision shortly.

Epilepsy

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much has been spent by the Medical Research Council on research into epilepsy in each of the past five years.

Mr. Walden: I understand that the expenditure by the Medical Research Council on research into epilepsy has been as follows:

Financial year	£(000s)
1980-81	n.a.
1981-82	270

University Funding

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the percentage change in the funding of each university by the University Grants Committee between 1980-81 and 1986-87, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in home students fees, for redundancy and for early retirement, changes to take account of minor capital works from the recurrent grant, changes in the level of local authority rates and additions made for the information technology and new blood programmes;

(2) what is the percentage change in real terms, measured by the gross domestic product deflator, in the funding of each university by the University Grants Committee between 1980-81 and 1986-87, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in home student fees, compensation for redundancy and early retirement, changes to take account of minor capital works from the recurrent grant and changes in the level of local authority rates (a) including and (b) excluding additions made for the information technology and new blood programmes.

Mr. Walden: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Sex Education

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy on sex or relationships education in primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government firmly believe that sex education is an essential curricular element in preparing pupils for the realities and responsibilities of adult life. Last year's White Paper "Better Schools" made clear that the Government expect to see sex education being taught within a moral framework which is supportive of family life.

CIVIL SERVICE

Planners and Architects

Mr. Steen asked the Minister for the Civil Service what is the cost of employing architects in central Government Departments, pursuant to his answer of 21 May, Official Report, column 226, and the cost of support staff.

Mr. Luce: The cost of employing architects in central Government Departments for the year 1986-87 is estimated at £22 million. Details of support staff are not held centrally and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Steen asked the Minister for the Civil Service what is the total cost of employing town and country planners in central Government Departments, pursuant to his answer of 21 May, Official Report, column 226; and what cost to the public purse of employing support staff.

Mr. Luce: The total cost of employing town and country planners in central Government Departments for the year 1986-87 is estimated at £4 million. Details of support staff are not held centrally and can be obtained only at disproportonate cost.

THE ARTS

News International

Mr. Cartwright asked the Minister for the Arts what information he now has about the current extent of the ban on News International newspapers in public libraries; and to what extent this has changed since his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 219.

Mr. Luce: I understand that at least 14 library authorities may currently be applying a ban. I have recently written to those authorities about whom I have received specific complaints to ask them whether the complaints are true and, if so, how they reconcile their action with their duties under the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964. I will consider what further action to take in the light of their replies.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committees

Mr. Mason asked the Lord Privy Seal how many reports were published by the 14 departmental select committees during the period March 1985 to March 1986; and how many were debated in the House.

Mr. Biffen: Sixty-four reports (excluding special reports) from the departmental Select Committees were published between 1 April 1985 and 31 March 1986. In that period, one report was debated on a substantive motion in the House, 10 were referred to on the Order Paper as being relevant to debate in the House, including motions for the Adjournment of the House, but excluding Estimates days, and six were subject to debate on Estimates days. Other reports have been germane to legislation before the House.

Mr. Mason asked the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will give the total operating costs of the 14 departmental Select Committees for the financial year 1985-86, indicating separately, costs for overseas visits, listing all visits by each Committee, together with the administrative and clerical costs and expenditure on specialist advisers, as well as the printing costs of the Committees' reports.

Mr. Beith: Costs, other than staff salary costs, identifiable as attibutable to the 14 departmental Select Committees during the financial year 1985-86 were as follows:

Visits within the United Kingdom	43,527
Overseas Visits	210,000
Witnesses Expenses	4,811
Remuneration of Specialist Advisers	72,714
Expenses of Specialist Advisers	11,787
Work Commissioned	813
Entertainment	924
Publications not supplied by HMSO	1,019

Estimated shorthand writing costs, and the estimated costs of printing and publishing reports (including evidence printed with reports), as shown in the notes to volumes published during the financial year 1985-86, were as follows:

Shorthand Writing Costs	88,452
Cost of printing reports (including evidence printed with reports)	880,248

No allowance is made for the revenue recouped from sales of the publications in question.

The table shows the overseas visits made by each Committee on which costs fell to be paid during the financial year 1985-86. The costs shown are those actually paid during the financial year and exclude (a) payments made prior to 1 April 1985 in the case of visits taking place before that date, (b) payments made subsequent to 31 March 1986, and (c) any provision for accounts not yet received.

Mr. Mason asked the Lord Privy Seal if, in the light of the decision by the House of 20 May in relation to the report of the Committee of Privileges on the leak of a draft report from the Environment Committee, he will bring forward proposals to clarify the relationship between Select Committees and the media, as it affects the deliberations and reports of those committees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: I am considering the procedural position in the light of the decision of the House on 20 May, and will, if necessary, put forward proposals to the House.

Energy (News Communiqué)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Lord Privy Seal whether he will arrange for copies of the World Information Service on Energy bi-weekly news communiqué on nuclear and renewable energy issues to be placed in the Library on a regular basis.

Mr. Biffen: The Library receives many requests and suggestions from hon. Members for the purchase of periodicals and, as is customary, arrangements are being made to obtain a sample copy of this title and to assess its usefulness as a source of information. The Librarian will be writing to the hon. Member in due course.

Restaurant Menus

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will exclude frogs' legs and turtle soup from restaurant menus within the Palace of Westminster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: I am informed that frogs' legs cannot be purchased from the Refreshment Department and do not appear on its menus. Turtle soup is available only on a la carte and banqueting menus, at the request of Members. I have no proposals to change these arrangements.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Training

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much public money was spent on training in agriculture in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Fenner: Information is not available on the total public funding of adult education and training in agriculture undertaken by local education authorities at county agricultural colleges. Central Government funding of training in the agriculture industry in Great Britain in the last five years was as follows:

	1981-82 £ million	1982-83 £ million	1983-84 £ million	1984-85 £ million	1985-86 £ million
Agricultural Training Board Grant-in-Aid	7·950	7·500	7·486	7·200	7·736
YTS payments by the Manpower Services Commission	—	—	*11·700	*11·700	*12·300
Other Manpower Services Commission projects	—	—	—	0·204	0·559

* Estimate

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much public money was spent on training in the fishing industry in each of the past five years.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is as follows:

	£ million
1981-82	0·479
1982-83	0·679
1983-84	1·162
1984-85	1·457
1985-86	1·414

These figures represent public funds allocated to the Sea Fish Industry Authority and the fishing industry for training activities and exclude levy funding provided by the fishing industry.

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria govern Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the extent to which (a) the fishing industry and (b) agriculture contribute from their own resources to training in their respective industries.

Mrs. Fenner: The Government attach considerable importance to vocational training in both the fishing and agriculture industries and look to both industries to contribute towards the costs of such training. In the case of the fishing industry this is through the Sea Fish Industry Authority levy, although in recent years the Government have increased significantly the contribution to training from public funds. So far as agricultural training is concerned, the industry's contribution is mainly through the time, on-farm activities and financial help contributed by individual farmers to some 650 training groups linked to the Agricultural Training Board. However, at our instigation the board itself is now having to meet from industry and other sources a greater share of its own expenditure.

Sugar Beet

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has of the anticipated tonnage of sugar beet production in the United Kingdom for the current year; what were the comparable figures for each of the last five years; and what the European Economic Community quota for United Kingdom production has been over the same period.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested on production of sugar beet in the United Kingdom is as follows:

('000 tonnes)

*Season	Beet Production
1985-86	7,717
1984-85	9,017
1983-84	7,494
1982-83	10,008
1981-82	7,395
1980-81	7,380

* July-June year.

The United Kingdom production quota is measured in terms of white sugar, not beet, production. For each of the above years the maximum quota was 1·144 million tonnes white sugar equivalent.

Cereals

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what incentives there are to cereal producers to switch to the growing of alternative crops or alternative land usage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The changes agreed at this year's CAP price fixing provide incentives for cereals producers to switch to alternatives. Cereals production has been discouraged by the significant reduction in support as a result of adjustments to the quality standards and the introduction of a 3 per cent. co-responsibility levy. The balance is further shifted by the differentiated changes in the green rates which results in a rise of about 2¾ per cent. in the general level of support for livestock products in the United Kingdom, while modest support increases agreed for protein crops together with the green rate change provide an increase of up to 2·3 per cent. in our support levels. We are also studying the possibility of a scheme of voluntary set-aside for cereals.

Sheep

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many sheep grading inspectors are employed by his Department; and what is the annual cost of their employment and overheads.

Mr. Gummer: The grading of sheep under the sheep variable premium scheme is one of the technical functions performed by the fatstock staff of the Meat and Livestock Commission, acting as agents for the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce. During 1985-86, the MLC's fatstock staff averaged 680. The intervention board paid the MLC approximately £9·5 million during 1985-86 for agency services, but it is not possible to say how much of that was attributable to sheep certification work. My Ministry's own Fatstock Inspectorate, whose duties include monitoring the sheep grading work carried out by the MLC staff in England and Wales, has a total complement of 11. The cost of the inspectorate salaries and overheads was approximately £260,000 in 1985-86.

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has of the percentage of sheep rejected for subsidy over the most convenient recent period.

Mr. Gummer: During the year April 1985 to March 1986, 7 per cent. of sheep presented in Great Britain were rejected for variable premium on liveweight certification and 5 per cent. were rejected at deadweight certification.

Linseed

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the 1985 production of linseed in the European Economic Community expressed as a percentage of its total consumption; and what estimate he has of (a) the tonnage of imports of linseed to the European Economic Community in the current year and (b) the production of linseed from within the Community.

Mr. Gummer: Production of linseed within the Community of Ten in 1985 amounted to 77,000 tonnes, which represents about 16 per cent. of utilisation of linseed in that year. In the first two months of 1986, the latest period for which figures are available, the Community of Ten imported 58,341 tonnes of linseed and 1,656 tonnes of linseed oil. Forecasts of 1986 Community production are not yet available.

Veal

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information and statistics he has about the numbers of farmers continuing to operate veal crate systems despite the voluntary code of practice on the matter.

Mrs. Fenner: We believe that the number of establishments using veal crates has declined in recent years. The state veterinary service is currently carrying out a survey on the use of the veal crate system in Great Britain. I shall reply to my hon. Friend in due course when this information is available.

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the meeting of the Council of Agriculture Ministers on 26 and 27 May.

Mr. Jopling: The Council decided to prolong for a further month the partial suspension of negative monetary compensatory amounts of pigs, eggs and poultry which had been agreed as a temporary measure at last month's price-fixing negotiations. The amount of MCA suspended for the United Kingdom continues to be closely in line with that for France, thus avoiding trade distortions as between these two countries. The Commission intends shortly to propose permanent changes in the method of calculating MCAs in these sectors.

Following the accession of Spain and Portugal to the Community, the Council considered proposals defining the parts of these two countries which are to be classified as agriculturally less-favoured areas, thus enabling special support measures to be applied. A proposal for a substantial extension of the less-favoured areas in Germany was also considered. The Council agreed in principle to these proposals, subject to the opinion of the European Parliament.

Finally, the Council adopted two measures designed to harmonise rules within the Community relating to pesticides and thereby improve freedom of trade. One measure fixes maximum residue limits for pesticides in cereals and in products of animal origin. The other prohibits the use of ethylene oxide as a pesticide but permits its continued use for a number of purposes until 31 December 1989. This is intended to allow time for effective alternative treatments to be developed.

Radiation (Cumbria)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the results of tests being carried out into the absorption of radioactive elements by sheep and cattle in the county of Cumbria.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Hill Land Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Livsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the remaining 25 per cent. of the payment for hill land compensatory allowances will be paid to farmers.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 72]: All claimants for hill livestock compensatory allowances in Great Britain received 75 per cent. of the sum claimed shortly after submitting their applications. These advances were made on the basis of an initial check, and enabled nearly 60 per cent. more farmers to receive significant sums in the early months of the year than was the case in 1985. The Agricultural Departments' local offices then had to carry out the normal detailed checks before authorising payment of the balance. However, over three quarters of farmers have already received the outstanding 25 per cent. and the rest will be paid as soon as possible. This seems a proper balance between helping farmers in an emergency and protecting the taxpayer from improper payments.

Milk

Mr. Hicks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the quantities of milk supplied to each local education authority in Great Britain on which a European Economic Community subsidy was claimed during the 1984-85 school year.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 71]: Subsidy was paid on the following amounts of whole milk supplied by local education authorities and local authorities during the 1984-85 school year:

Whiting Fishery

Mr. Beith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is seeking to secure a derogation from the proposed European Economic Community mesh size increase so as to allow the North Sea whiting fishery to continue.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 23 May 1986, c. 367]: The Government fully support the increase in the minimum whitefish mesh size in the North sea to 90 mm, which is due to come into effect from 1 January next. The purpose of this increase, which is based on clear and repeated recommendations by international fisheries scientists, is to give increased protection to the round fish stocks in the North sea and improve their long-term productivity. As is invariably the case with measures to achieve long-term conservation gains, there will be some short-term losses and I am aware of the hon. Member's concern on behalf of fishermen, particularly inshore fishermen, whose income may be especially dependent on their catches of whiting. The question of derogations from the general mesh size increase is currently under discussion in the Community, and when this matter comes to the Council for decision we shall seek to reconcile as far as possible the needs of the fishermen concerned with the overriding priority of ensuring the improved conservation of the North sea roundfish stocks.

North-east Salmon Fishery

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his present estimate of the total number of people in north-east England who are directly or indirectly employed in the north-east drift net salmon fishery; and if he can express the total in terms of man days per year.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 12 May 1986, c. 372]: It is not possible to estimate the total employment involved in the drift net fishery. In 1985 nearly 600 people were directly involved either as licensed fishermen or by having their names entered on licences as servants or agents. This fishery is critical to the continued existence of the inshore fishing industry in the area. A number of other people in the area are involved in ancillary industries including fish marketing and boat building. There is also additional employment created outside the fishing industry by the existence of these jobs. Specific numbers are not available, but they will add significantly to the numbers directly involved.

ENVIRONMENT

Radiation

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the procedures for informing the public in East Sussex and Brighton regarding precautionary measures to be adopted in the event of airborne radioactive materials reaching the area.

Mrs. Rumbold: Emergency plans to cope with the results of nuclear accidents and emergencies are described in a pamphlet entitled "Emergency plans for civil nuclear installations" published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in 1982.

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the recorded levels of normal background radiation for those areas of England for which the information is available.

Mrs. Rumbold: The National Radiological Protection Board has determined the normal background radiation throughout Great Britain. Gamma-ray dose rates were measured out of doors in most of the 10 km squares of the national grid. The information is very bulky in tabular form, so I will arrange for a radiation map of the country, prepared by NRPB, to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all airborne releases from nuclear facilities in the United Kingdom for the period 25 April to 20 May.

Mrs. Rumbold: I shall answer this question shortly.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment from what sources his assessment of the radioactivity arising from the Chernobyl accident was made; how much of his information came from private companies; and if he is satisfied with the technical resources available to him to assess risks from such accidents.

Mrs. Rumbold: The assessment was based on the advice of professional officers within my Department, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Department of Health and Social Security and the National Radiological Protection Board. All information available to these bodies was taken into account. Some came from private companies. Technical resources required to deal with the situation were adequate but are currently under review.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he hopes to provide every hon. Member with a briefing note on the British Broadcasting Corporation "Panorama" programme on British radiation limits.

Mrs. Rumbold: I hope to make this note available within the next few days.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his assessment of the risk posed to the population in (a) East Sussex, (b) West Sussex, (c) Hampshire and (d) Kent in terms of the expected additional number of cancer deaths per 10,000 population as a result of the Chernobyl disaster.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have been asked to reply.

I am advised that it is not possible to provide specific information for the location requested. However, the National Radiological Protection Board has estimated that, for the population of the United Kingdom, exposure to radiation from the Chernobyl disaster could ultimately result in a few tens of additional deaths. This effectively represents less than 0.1 additional deaths per 10,000 people.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the United States Government informed the United Kingdom Government of any releases of radioactivity in the United States of America in April; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of (a) the number of curies of alpha activity in the total estimated future quantity of low-level waste up to 2030, and (b) the increased cost of disposal if the alpha activity were removed.

Mrs. Rumbold: Low-level waste is subject to an upper limit of 4GBq/tonne for alpha activity. The total quantity cannot be reliably estimated; nor, therefore, can the cost of removing it.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in considering the list of suggested dumps, he sought evidence from Dr. Michael Heath or considered Dr. Heath's report of Greenpeace on the sites.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many petition signatures, letters and deputations (a) for and (b) against nuclear dumping he has had up to the end of May in connection with nuclear dumps at South Killingholme, Fulbeck, Elstow and Bradwell.

Mrs. Rumbold: Between 25 February, when potential sites were announced, and the end of May, the numbers of letters received in the Department opposing the siting of a radioactive waste facility were approximately as follows: South Killingholme 320; Fulbeck 275; Elstow 230; Bradwell 55. A number of postcards were also received. Four letters were received in favour of NIREX investigating the suitability of a particular site; three from South Killingholme and one from Bradwell. In addition, approximately 150 letters were received on the subject of radioactive waste management generally.

In the same period, my right hon. Friend, my hon. Friend the Minister of State and I have together or separately met 14 deputations, in London and the areas concerned. I shall write to the hon. Members about the number of petition signatures received.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment who is responsible for the costs of security at the proposed four sites for nuclear waste dumps; and what financial arrangements have been made for compensation to contractors in the event of damage to equipment.

Mrs. Rumbold: The costs of general security at the four sites remain a matter for the site owners in the first instance. Should they incur extra costs because of NIREX's interest in the sites, this would be a matter for negotiation between them and NIREX. NIREX will be responsible for the costs of security arrangements which it itself contracts for. Any compensation arrangements with contractors, if needed, would be for negotiation between NIREX and the firms concerned.

Local Government Finance

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update to 1985-86 his reply to the hon. Member for Kensington, Official Report, 10 May 1985, giving estimates of (a) rate support grant, (b) rate support grant per domestic ratepayer, (c) expenditure on education, (d) expenditure on police, (e) revenue from domestic rates and (f) revenue from commercial and business rates.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have today placed the available information in the Library which is based on local authorities' revised estimates for 1985-86, except for the rate support grant figures which are taken from the second supplementary report.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for the years 1980-81 to 1985-86 inclusive, in both cash prices and constant 1985-86 prices (a) local authority gross expenditure in England on (i) housing revenue account land, new dwellings and acquisitions and (ii) housing revenue account renovation and (b) English local authority receipts from (i) sales of land and other assets, (ii) initial receipts from sales of dwellings and (iii) repayment of sums outstanding on sales of dwellings.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested on gross capital expenditure and capital receipts by local housing authorities in England is given in the following table. The figures for 1985-86 are estimates based on returns by local authorities for the third quarter.

	Capital Expenditure HRA land, new dwellings and acquisitions	HRA renovation	Sales of land and other assets	Capital Receipts Initial receipts from sales of dwellings	Repayment of sums outstanding on sales of dwellings

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will state the total amount to date which has been withheld from (a) all local authorities, (b) local authorities in the northern region and (c) the borough of Sunderland in the form of penalties which were imposed on councils for spending in excess of required amounts;

(2) if he will state the total amount of capital receipts which (a) all local authorities, (b) local authorities in the northern region and (c) the borough of Sunderland are currently prevented from spending because of the regulations regarding such spending which prevail at present.

Mrs. Rumbold: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Liverpool (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Liverpool.

Mr. Ridley: My predecessor as Secretary of State for the Environment was to have visited Merseyside on 22 and 23 May 1986. However, the announcement of Cabinet changes on 21 May meant that this visit had to be cancelled.

Northern Region

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will give details of the urban and environmental aid made available in the northern region in each since 1983, and of how much is being spent in the current financial year.

Sir George Young: The information is as follows:

£'000s

	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
(a) Urban programme allocations to partnership and programme authorities and other designated districts under the Inner Areas Act 1978 and traditional urban programme allocations	41,302	37,222	38,042	34,314
(b) Urban development grant approvals for private sectors developments	2,242	7,893	1,171	—
(c) Derelict land reclamation allocations to local authorities	10,199	10,300	11,615	13,000

Urban programme and urban development grant schemes normally attract Exchequer grant at the rate of 75 per cent. and derelict land reclamation schemes at 100 per cent. In addition to the allocations for 1986-87 referred to, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced on 14 May that an additional £10 million would be made available to the northern region to help deal with prospective shipbuilding closures, including £2 million urban programme and £1 million derelict land reclamation resources.

Liverpool (Direct Labour Organisation)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet a deputation of Liverpool hon. Members to discuss the organisational problems of the direct labour organisation of the Liverpool city council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has asked Liverpool city council to provide a special report on its DLO's new building work, and he does not feel that it would be useful to meet Liverpool hon. Members before the council has provided that report.

Radiation Leak, Cap la Hague

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the emergency warning procedure agreement between the British and French Governments was used following the recent incident of a radiological leak at the Cap la Hague nuclear reprocessing plant; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. Since there was no escape of radioactivity to the atmosphere and therefore no radiological consequences for the United Kingdom the warning procedure was not implemented.

Tip Sites (Methane Gas Explosions)

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many other build-ups of methane gas on the tip sites in Britain have led to explosions since 1956 similar to that which occurred at Loscoe, Derbyshire on 24 March.

Mrs. Rumbold: No central records are kept on incidents of this nature.

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has carried out any research into the reasons for the tip blast at Loscoe, Derbyshire on 24 March.

Mrs. Rumbold: An official of my Department has visited the site and had discussions with those concerned. My Department and the fire research station have carried out research into the problems of landfill gas generally.

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has taken any steps since 1956 to deal with the aftermath of waste tip explosions similar to that at Loscoe, Derbyshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Remedial action is the responsibility of the local authority. The research sponsored by my Departmemt into methane production and control in landfill sites should form a basis for any remedial work necessary.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment at what intervals he plans to review the salary of the chairman of the London Residuary Body.

Mr. Tracey: General reviews of the level of remuneration payable to the chairmen and members of the residuary bodies will be undertaken annually in line with the procedure adopted for chairmen and members of other public boards.

Hook Kennels, Northaw (Planning Application)

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why he called in for determination the appeal by the Retirement Homes Association over the planning application in respect of Hook Kennels, Northaw, Hertfordshire; when he expects to give his decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: With the exception of appeals by statutory undertakers involving development proposals on operational land, all planning appeals are transferred to inspectors for decision. The aim is to leave as many appeals as possible for inspectors to decide and to recover jurisdiction for a decision by the Secretary of State only in the more important cases.

There are a variety of reasons to warrant the recovery of jurisdiction; for example, where more than 100 houses are proposed, or residential development is proposed on land extending to more than 3·5 hectares, or if significant development is proposed in green belt.

The planning appeal by the Retirement Homes Association involves the provision of 220 units of residential accommodation on almost 23 hectares of land within the Metropolitan green belt at Hook Kennels, Northaw, Hertfordshire. There were good reasons, therefore, to recover jurisdiction for a decision to be made by the Secretary of State.

I am unable to say when a decision can be expected. Careful consideration will be given to the inspector's report of the inquiry when it is submitted. In the meantime, I cannot make a statement about the development proposed because this would prejudice my right hon. Friend's position in deciding the appeal.

Water Authorities

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list in the Official Report the members of each water authority stating (a) their date of original appointment, (b) their date of completion of present appointment, (c) whether councillors or not and (d) their present professions;

(2) what is his policy towards the appointment of full-time executive water authority members;

(3) if he will list in the Official Report a list of those members of each water authority whose terms of office has been or will be completed in the current year, stating in each case whether or not they have been or will be reappointed;

(4) what criteria he uses in deciding whether to reappoint water authority members who complete their period of office.

Mr. John Patten: As stated in paragraph 102 of the white Paper "Privatisation of the Water Authorities" (Cmnd. 9734), a WSPLC will not necessarily have the same board members as the present water authorities.

Individuals will be appointed or reappointed who are best equipped to contribute positively to the efficient running of these important businesses. In line with policy since 1983, they will often include full-time executive members.

Not all decisions on the position of members whose periods of appointment expire in the current year have yet been taken but where available the information sought on individual members is shown in the following table.

Water Meters

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he now intends to carry out further experiments in water metering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) on 21 May, at columns 357-58.

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the anticipated cost to domestic users of installing a water meter in each home.

Mr. John Patten: The economic consultants to the Watts committee estimated the additional costs of meter provision, installation and billing at about £4·75 per household per year on average with benefits of around the same magnitude in terms of reduced expenditure by water authorities in meeting demand. The consultants however drew attention to the deficiencies of the data on which their estimates were based. A co-ordinated programme of trials will be carried out, as recommended by the committee, to find out in what types of area and circumstances universal domestic metering might be most worth while.

Transferable Discounts

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will extend to tenants of wheelchair housing the right to qualify for a transferably discount to purchase property on the open market; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received from disability organisations concerning the extension of the transferable discount scheme to tenants of wheelchair housing owned by local authorities or housing associations; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Representations have been received from the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation. The transferable discount scheme currently in operation serves a limited and specific purpose: to help those tenants of charitable housing associations whose homes have been provided with assistance from public funds and who would have had the right to buy but for the charitable status of their landlord. There is no general presumption that tenants whose homes are excluded from the right to buy should receive financial compensation and we have no plans to extend the transferable discount scheme to tenants of wheelchair housing.

I sympathise with disabled tenants who wish to become home owners and I hope that local authorities will do what they can to assist them. Authorities can, for instance, offer vacant housing for sale at a discount, and provide assistance towards costs of adaptation.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tenants of housing associations have applied for a transferable discount; and if he will express this figure as a percentage of the total number of housing units owned by housing associations whose tenants are eligible for transferable discounts.

Sir George Young: Up to 31 March 1986, 7,543 tenants of housing associations in England had applied for a transferable discount under the home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations. This represents just under 4 per cent. of the tenants who live in houses owned by housing associations that are eligible for the scheme.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the annual cost to public funds of offering transferable discounts to tenants of wheelchair housing owned by local authorities or housing associations on the same basis as to abled-bodied tenants of housing associations.

Sir George Young: There are estimated to be some 14,600 public sector wheelchair dwellings in England and Wales, and a further 27,000 dwellings for the disabled where substantial adaptations would be likely to result in their exclusion from the right to buy. Both types of dwelling need to be taken into account.

The average transferable discount granted under the home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations (HOTCHA) is £13,400. Assuming the same rate of assistance, and take-up corresponding to the national average rate under the right to buy (15 per cent.), the total cost of a transferable discount scheme for disabled tenants would be £83 million. If take-up were closer to the 4 per cent. rate under the HOTCHA scheme, costs would be correspondingly lower. No reliable estimate of annual costs can be made.

Wheelchair Dwellings

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the cost of providing a local authority or housing association wheelchair dwelling; how many such dwellings have been completed in each of the last five years; and what is his estimate of the number of disabled people wishing to rent such a dwelling but unable to do so.

Sir George Young: The average construction cost (excluding site works, fees and land) was about £23,000 for wheelchair dwellings in tenders accepted by English local authorities during 1985.

Numbers of completions of specialised dwellings for local authorities and new towns and for housing associations in 1983-85 appear in table 1.6*(b)* of "Housing and Construction Statistics" No. 24 and figures for earlier years are in table 6.7*(b)* of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1974-1984"; copies are in the Library.

No estimate is available of the number of disabled people wishing to rent wheelchair dwellings (as distinct from other accommodation for the disabled) but unable to do so.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the amount of housing investment programme bids for each council in the northern region; and what was the amount of allocation for each authority for each year since 1979.

Sir George Young: The housing investment programme bids and allocations for each local authority in the northern region since 1979 are as follows. Local authorities may also supplement their housing investment programmes by using the prescribed proportion of capital receipts.

All figures are on a case basis except the following:

	Bids
1978-79	November 1976 prices
1979-80	November 1977 prices

Heritage

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the main achievements of Her Majesty's Government with respect to the heritage in the last seven years.

Mr. Tracey: Looking first at the natural heritage, the passage of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 greatly strengthened the statutory framework for species and habitat protection while respecting the legitimate interests of landowners and users. By the end of January 1986, 2,595 sites of special scientific interest had been given the full protection of the Act, 256 management agreements covering 9,775 hectares had been completed, and over 600 more were in negotiation. 19 nature conservation orders have been made to protect sites of national importance that were under threat. There has also been a substantial increase in the resources made available to the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission. The national parks, following an efficiency review, have also had their resources increased, and a national awareness campaign has been mounted by the Countryside Commission with the help of the Council for National Parks.

The Government have ratified the Bern convention on the Conservation of European Wildlife, the Bonn convention on Migratory Species and the convention concerning the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage. We continue to work for the implementation of the RAMSAR convention and the EEC birds directive. We have taken further steps to control trade in whales, seals and other endangered species. We have taken measures to improve British zoos through the provision of the Zoo Licensing Act 1981 and to support the Zoological Society of London. And we shall introduce legislation to establish a statutory Broads Authority.

Turning now to the architectural and cultural aspects of our heritage, the Government established the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission to manage and better present 400 monuments to the public, and the Royal Armouries to present the national museum of arms and armour at the Tower of London. The Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission has already made excellent progress in attracting both membership and commercial sponsorship, and in improving its presentation of its monuments. In 1984 we set up an independent trust to promote and manage Chatham historic dockyard. We accelerated the national survey of listed buildings in 1981 and have so far added a further 100,000 buildings to the statutory list. Calke Abbey was accepted in lieu of taxes and a special grant of £25 million was given to the National Heritage Memorial Fund to safeguard the future of Kedleston Hall, Weston Park and Nostell Priory, and to continue its varied tasks of assisting in preserving the heritage.

Government measures to improve the marketing and presentation of royal palaces open to the public produced consistent growth in visitor numbers, gate receipts and sales. The Court Dress Collection in Kensington palace was opened by HRH Princess Margaret in May 1984 and attracted over 60,000 visitors in its first nine months.

The Property Services Agency, which forms part of the Department of the Environment, continued to maintain historic buildings in the Government estate with care and sensitivity. At the Palace of Westminster stone repairs have now been completed on the west front of the House of Lords, the Terrace and the Clock Tower, while the first phase of refurbishments to the Foreign Office will be achieved on schedule later this year.

The above are necessarily selective rather than comprehensive and confined to areas of responsibility of my Department. Further progress has been made by the Scottish Office, the Welsh Office and the Office of Arts and Libraries. Taken together, these achievements demonstrate the very high regard this Government have for the national heritage.

Housing Stock

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of dwellings needing capital works of renovation in (a) the borough of Sunderland and (b) all other local authorities in the northern region, as estimated by "The Inquiry into the Condition of the Local Authority Housing Stock in England: 1985"; and what are the estimated costs of such works in (a) the borough of Sunderland and (b) all other local authorities in the northern region.

Sir George Young: Local authorities responded to the inquiry on the understanding that their figures would be used only in aggregate form and not published by the Department at the individual authority level. In the northern region, the inquiry indicated that 302,300 dwellings require renovation at an estimated total cost of £1,426 million.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Crown Suppliers will remain as the procurement agency within his Department.

Sir George Young: The functions of the Crown Suppliers is to provide furniture and equipment to the whole of the Government service and to other public sector bodies, not just to one Department. It will continue to do so as long as it remains an efficient and economical source of supply.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if any study has been carried out on the value of individual departments of the service supplied to them by the Crown Suppliers.

Sir George Young: The recent report of the Cabinet Office review team contains information on the value of services provided by the Crown Suppliers and the central unit on purchasing also keeps these matters under review.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will continue the policy of asking Crown Suppliers to buy from Remploy.

Sir George Young: Yes, where this continues to be an economical source of supply.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of the Crown Suppliers.

Sir George Young: I am still considering the recommendations of the team of officials which was asked to consider whether it would be in the public interest to transfer to the private sector all or part of the activities of the Crown Suppliers. I shall also take into account the views of the central unit on purchasing.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. and learned Member for Mid-Bedfordshire (Mr. Lyell) of 12 May, Official Report, column 358, he will set out the total volume of each category of nuclear waste, by source, arising if the reprocessing of foreign spent fuel were deferred until 2030.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to table 2 of the report on the "Assessment of Best Practicable Environmental Options for Management of Low—and Intermediate-level solid Radioactive Wastes." In column 3, about 75 per cent. of waste arising from oxide fuel reprocessing and about 5 per cent. of the waste arising from Magnox fuel reprocessing is associated with the reprocessing of foreign spent fuel. If the reprocessing of foreign spent fuel were deferred until 2030 the figures in column 3 would be reduced accordingly.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby of 12 May, Official Report, column 357, if low and intermediate-level waste produced from the reprocessing of spent thermal oxide fuel from West Germany has been returned to West Germany, what was done with the plutonium separated out from that fuel; and if he will make it his policy to send back all low and intermediate-level waste to those countries from whose thermal oxide fuel it arose in reprocessing.

Mrs. Rumbold: The low and intermediate-level waste arising from the reprocessing of German oxide fuel in the early 1970s has not been returned to West Germany, but the plutonium has. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 6 May, at column 61, regarding the return of waste from the reprocessing of overseas contracts.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Department's test study of the geology suitable for nuclear waste disposal was abandoned; why it was abandoned; if he will publish the evidence so far acquired; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Minister for Local Government and Environment Services announced on 16 December 1981, at columns 171-72, that the feasibility of disposing of heat-generating wastes in geological formations had been established; and that in consequence the United Kingdom programme of exploratory drilling in respect of these wastes was being halted. The results of the drilling that had taken place at Altnabreac in Caithness have been published by the British Geological Survey of the Natural Environment Research Council in 36 reports in the environmental protection unit and fluid processes research group reports series, and copies were placed in the British National Library, Boston Spa.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the basis of his statement to the Environment Committee that 15 per cent. of United Kingdom geology was suitable for disposal of dangerous radioactive waste; whether he will publish the studies on which this statement was based; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to a paper by Mather JD, Gray DA, and Greenwood, PB, entitled "Review of geological criteria and site selection for high-level radioactive waste repositories in the United Kingdom. Proceedings of Symposium on the Underground Disposal of Radioactive Waste, Otaniemi, Finland, 2-6 July 1979". Paper IAEA-SM-243/29, which has been published.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the permission given to NIREX in the special development order to initiate geological explorations also extends to contractors employed by NIREX; what supervision NIREX is required to exercise; and what arrangements ensure in the event of the financial failure of a contractor.

Mrs. Rumbold: The special development order permits geological investigations to be carried out by or on behalf of NIREX. NIREX would be expected to ensure that work carried out on its behalf was within the terms of the order. Financial arrangements are a matter for NIREX.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment who will be responsible for paying the Anglian water authority for work necessary for the assessment of the suitability of the four sites being surveyed for suitability as nuclear dumps.

Mrs. Rumbold: This is a matter for the Anglian water authority and NIREX.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date NIREX appointed consultants to investigate the geology of the four sites for nuclear dumps under the special development order; when contracts were signed; and on what basis payments are to be made.

Mrs. Rumbold: This is a matter for NIREX.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the total of radioactive waste disposed of at Drigg arose from the activities of the civil nuclear power industry and medical research.

Mrs. Rumbold: In 1984, the latest year for which figures are available, the proportions by volume of wastes disposed of at Drigg, by source, are:

	per cent.
Civil nuclear power industry (CEGB and SSEB)	8
BNFL	78
Others (including medical research)	14

From 1987, when BNFL has announced its intention to compact its waste before disposal at Drigg, an overall volume reduction to one third of its wastes is likely to be achieved.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information was made available to him by NIREX about the aquifers below the clay at the South Killingholme site; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Only a general indication of the geological strata below the South Killingholme site has been provided so far. Further information will come from the site investigations to be carried out by UK NIREX Ltd.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that no nuclear waste resulting from reprocessing of spent thermal oxide nuclear fuel will be dumped in any new disposal sites.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Anglian water authority expressing its concern about the disposal of radioactive waste in shallow bored trenches above aquifers.

Mrs. Rumbold: The board is naturally concerned that any near-surface facility should not have an adverse effect on water supplies. The chairman has written to me, however, acknowledging that no informed view of this possibility can be taken until the detailed investigations sanctioned by the special development order have been carried out. I can assure the hon. Gentleman that if it seems likely that the integrity of the water supply would be compromised no planning permission will be given.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make available the survey work and suitability studies carried out by the Central Electricity Generating Board on the site of South Killingholme when it was being considered for a nuclear or conventional power station.

Mr. Goodlad: I have been asked to reply.

I have asked the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to write to the hon. Member.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimated proportion of the low-level nuclear waste produced up to the year 2030 will come from (a) hospitals and laboratories (b) nuclear power plants and (c) reprocessing.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to the reply, 22 May 1986, c. 295]: Of the 1·2 million cu m of conditioned low-level radioactive waste expected to arise up to the year 2030, assuming a moderate growth in nuclear power generation, approximately 6 per cent. will come from research, medical and industrial sources; approximately 24 per cent. will come from committed and proposed reactors and from decommissioning; and about 70 per cent. will come from reprocessing.

Rent Rebates and Allowances

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the answer of 12 May, Official Report, columns 363-6, he will present the information about rent rebate and rent allowance payments, taking into account the payment of rent under the supplementary benefit scheme.

Mr. Major: I have been asked to reply.

I shall let the hon. Member have the information that is available as soon as possible.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are made by the London Docklands Development Corporation over opening its files to the public in respect of planning applications.

Sir George Young: I shall answer this question shortly.

Parking Fines

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the total amount paid by his Department in 1985 in respect of parking fines incurred by Government Departments;

(2) when his Department became responsible for paying parking fines on behalf of Government Departments;

(3) if he will provide an analysis of the parking fines incurred by each of the Government Departments as listed in his answer of 15 May, Official Report, column 554, excluding the Scottish Office and the Department of Energy; and how many of the fines were in respect of ministerial vehicles in each case.

Sir George Young: I shall answer these questions shortly.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Foreign Visitors

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Syrians are in the United Kingdom; how many Iranians are in the United Kingdom; how many Syrians have overstayed their visas; how many Iranians have overstayed their visas; if he is taking steps to find out how many Syrians and Iranians are in the United Kingdom illegally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Precise estimates of the numbers of nationals of particular countries in the United Kingdom at any particular time are not available. However, based on the results of the labour force survey, we estimate that there are about 25,000 Iranian nationals and about 2,000 Syrian nationals resident in Great Britain.

In 1985, 36,000 Iranian visitors, 1,000 Iranian students and 10,000 Iranian transit passengers were admitted at United Kingdom ports. The equivalent figures for Syrians were 11,500 visitors, 1,000 students and nearly 1,500 transit passengers. More detailed information about Iranians and Syrians admitted at United Kingdom ports in 1984 was published in the "Control of Immigration: Statistics" (Cmnd. 9544). Similar information for 1985 will be published later this year.

There are no special arrangements for recording the landings and embarkations of all Syrians and Iranians, so that the information requested in the second part of the question is not available. As with other nationalities, the recording of landing and embarkation is selective; investigation of apparent overstaying is also conducted on a selective basis. We are satisfied that this approach represents the best use of available resources.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what extent immigration records accurately show the number of foreigners leaving the United Kingdom; how many foreigners have overstayed their visa; how many Libyans have overstayed their visa; if he is taking any steps to find out how many Libyans are in the United Kingdom illegally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1986, c. 516]: The recording of landings and embarkations is selective. Where landing details are recorded, subsequent embarkation or the subsequent grant of leave to remain can be readily confirmed in about 95 per cent. of cases. The remaining 5 per cent., who may have overstayed, are selectively investigated; in most of the cases investigated embarkation is confirmed, or an application for renewed leave to remain is received. Statistics relating to all foreign nationals are not, however, available in the form requested.

Since May 1984 the landings and embarkations of all Libyan nationals admitted on conditions have been recorded and every indication of apparent overstaying is followed up. Of the 5,560 Libyan nationals so admitted between then and 31 March 1986 there were, as at 21 May 1986, 54 cases in which an individual's leave had expired but in which there was no evidence that he had left the United Kingdom, or applied for an extension of stay. These remaining cases are being vigorously investigated to establish whether embarkation, though not yet recorded, has in fact occurred, or whether action is necessary to enforce departure.

Fraud

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available (i) the number of cases of fraud tried on indictment, (ii) the number of defendants convicted and acquitted, both expressed numerically and as a percentage of the whole and (iii) the value of the sums involved.

Mr. Mellor: Information on offences of fraud and forgery is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary tables (Volume 1) in table S2.1(A) and corresponding tables for earlier years, under offence classifications 51 to 61. The information is summarised in the following table. Corresponding information for 1985 is not yet available. Information on the value of the sums involved is not collected centrally.

Defendants tried on indictment for offences of fraud and forgery in England and Wales.

	Tried on indictment	Acquitted	Found guilty	Acquitted	Found guilty
		Numbers		Percentages
1975	3,845	585	3,260	15	85
1976	4,149	605	3,544	15	85

Police Consultative Committees

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he has used the powers conferred on him by subsections (10) and (11) of section 106 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984;

(2) if any police authorities have failed to set up police consultative committees;

(3) how he ascertains the adequacy of arrangements for police consultative committees set up under section 106 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Section 106 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 requires police authorities (in the Metropolitan police district and the City of London, the Commissioners respectively) to make arrangements for obtaining the views of people in their area about matters concerning the policing of the area and for obtaining their co-operation with the police in preventing crime in the area. The guidance provided to police authorities by Home Office circular 2/1985 explained that as the needs and problems of different areas vary, consultative arrangements should reflect these differences, and that a uniform pattern of methods of consultation would not be sensible. Consequently there is no requirement on police authorities to set up police consultative committees in all circumstances. Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary take account in their inspections of police forces of the consultative arrangements in their area and report to my right hon. Friend on them on a regular basis. He has not felt it necessary to exercise the powers conferred on him by subsections (10) and (11) of section 106 of the 1984 Act.

London Fire Brigade

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the previous authorised complement of non-uniformed staff in the London fire brigade; and what is the current authorised complement of non-uniformed staff under the new organisation following the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The establishment scheme approved by my right hon. Friend for 1986-87 provides for 1,181 non-uniformed posts. Before 1 April 1986 my right hon. Friend had no responsibility for the establishment of non-uniformed staff, but I understand that the number in post in the London fire brigade on 31 March was 997. My reply to my hon. Friend's previous question on 19 May, at column 16, explained the reasons for the change.

Criminal Convictions (Disclosure)

Mr. Cormack asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on the review of disclosure of criminal convictions; when he expects to publish the circular dealing with the conviction of those who have substantial access to children; if he plans to extend the review to the disclosure of convictions for those who have access in a position of trust to people who are mentally or physically disabled by reason of age or infirmity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We expect to issue within a few weeks a joint circular to provide for the disclosure of the criminal background of those seeking positions, paid or unpaid, in local authority education and social services and in the probation service which will give them substantial access to children. Consideration is being given to the issue of a similar circular in relation to National Health Service staff. The review team is considering what arrangements can be made to provide disclosure in relation to people working with children in the voluntary sector and independent schools. Our first priority is to introduce the arrangements for children before consideration is given to any extension of the review.

Paramilitary Training

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he plans to seek to control the activities of private bodies offering paramilitary training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is already an offence under section 2 of the Public Order Act 1936 for a person to take part in the training of others for the purpose of usurping the functions of the police or the armed forces. The maximum penalty on indictment is two years imprisonment or an unlimited fine, or both.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received any representations concerning the activities of the Combat Shotgun Society of Great Britain in relation to paramilitary training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have received one letter about the activities of this society.

Shotguns

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to review the Firearms Acts in order to restrict the availability of semi-automatic shotguns; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Self-loading shotguns are subject to control under section 2 of the Firearms Act 1968 and chief officers of police have power under the Act to refuse to issue or renew a shotgun certificate in certain circumstances. We have no plans to introduce further restrictions on ownership.

News International

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has requested News International temporarily to close down its plant at Wapping on any occasion on the grounds of public order.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Thames Valley Police

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current expenditure per head of population in the Thames Valley police area; and how this compares with the national average.

Mr. Giles Shaw: "Police Statistics 1985-86 Estimates", published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, show that the estimated net expenditure of Thames Valley police per thousand population was £37,864 in the financial year 1985-86, compared with the average of £45,135 for forces outside London in England and Wales and £54,352 for all forces in England and Wales. Both these averages exclude the Merseyside police, for whom no figures are available.

Prison Officers

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prison officers were on the payroll in (a) 1980, (b) 1981, (c) 1982, (d) 1983, (e) 1984, (f) 1985 and (g) 1986, respectively;

(2) what was the percentage change in the number of prison officers during each year from 1980.

Mr. Mellor: The number of staff of the prison officer class in post at Prison Department outstations on 1 April each year from 1980, with year-on-year percentage changes, is as follows:

Staff in Post and Percentage Change over Previous Year

		Staff	Percentage
(a)	1 April 1980	16,123	—
(b)	1 April 1981	17,065	+5·84
(c)	1 April 1982	17,025	−0·23
(d)	1 April 1983	17,538	+3·01
(e)	1 April 1984	18,100	+3·20
(f)	1 April 1985	18,409	+1·71
(g)	1 April 1986	18,887	+2·60

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new entry prison officers attended and completed courses through the central training organisation in each of the years from 1980.

Mr. Mellor: The figures are as follows:

	Joined for training	Completed training
1980	1,319	1,345
1981	504	627
1982	677	464
1983	1,319	1,189
*1984-85	1,065	1,235
1985-86	1,016	†713

* The figures for 1984-85 cover a 15-month period following a change from calendar to financial year monitoring.

† Excludes 204 officers still undergoing training at the end of the year.

Licensing (Dorset)

Viscount Cranborne asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the number of applications that have been received by Dorset licensing magistrates since 1981 for changing existing residential and restaurant licences into justices on licences; and how many of those applications have been granted.

Mr. Mellor: Information in this form is not collected centrally.

Police Manpower (West Midlands)

Mr. John Mark. Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands on the comparative police manpower figures expressed as head of population per officer for (i) the Solihull sub-division and (ii) the Chelmsley Wood sub-division of West Midlands L division; and if he will publish the figures.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands that the population per police officer in these sub-divisions is as follows:

	Numbers
Solihull sub-division	1:954
Chelmsley Wood sub-division	1:694

These ratios leave out of account the police officers currently at L division headquarters, which covers both sub-divisions, and the police officers responsible for policing Birmingham airport, which is a responsibility of L division.

Parole

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were granted parole in 1984 and 1985 who qualified for consideration at that point only because of the reduction in the qualifying period from 12 to six months; and what percentage this was of the total number of prisoners paroled in each of these years.

Mr. Mellor: It is estimated that about 7,900, or 66 per cent. of the 11,886 who were granted parole in 1984 had qualified for earlier consideration because of the reduction in the qualifying period from 12 to six months. The corresponding figures for 1985 were about 9,500, 66 per cent. and 14,395.

Northeye Prison

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the annual report to him by the board of visitors of Her Majesty's prison, Northeye, dated February 1986.

Mr. Mellor: My noble Friend is considering the report. He will shortly be writing to the chairman of the board about the matters of concern which the board has raised.

Mr. Peter Harvey

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 May, Official Report, column 126, what duties Mr. Harvey carried out whilst working in the legal adviser's branch in both of these periods.

Mr. Hurd: Both between 15 July 1948 and 17 April 1977 and since 1 October 1983 Mr. Harvey's duties have been to give legal advice, to assist in the preparation of legislation and to draft subordinate legislation, on a range of topics arising from my Department's responsibilities.

Prisons (Surgical Units)

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the available beds in each of the surgical units in Her Majesty's prisons were occupied during each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I regret that the occupancy of beds in surgical wards is not recorded separately from that of other hospital beds at the establishments concerned.

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table indicating, for the surgical units at Parkhurst, Liverpool and Wormwood Scrubs prisons, the number of operations performed in each unit in each of the last five years, broken down by appropriate categories of surgery.

Mr. Mellor: The following table provides the information requested.

	General	ENT	Eye	Plastic	Orthopaedic	Total
1981
Parkhurst	56	29	2	—	20	107
Liverpool	297	70	24	30	37	458
Wormwood Scrubs	252	38	26	35	30	381

1985
Parkhurst	103	34	—	1	31	169
Liverpool	36	2	4	—	—	42
Wormwood Scrubs	—	—	—	—	—	—

The Wormwood Scrubs unit closed in December 1981 and the Liverpool unit was closed for most of 1985 for refurbishing.

BBC (News Reporting)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when arrangements were made between his Department and the British Broadcasting Corporation in respect of news in times of national crisis; what were the terms of the arrangement; what arrangements exist with other broadcasting authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In 1962 the BBC and the Government of that time reached an agreement about the handling of news and other information in a time of war emergency. The agreement applied only to the BBC because of the small size of the commercial broadasting sector at that time. Under the terms of the agreement the BBC restated that the corporation preserved its independence and the right to reach its own judgment on whether any particular item of news, or any other information, might if broadcast be prejudicial to the national interest. The BBC agreed that it would not reject any authoritative request purely on the ground that other broadcasters and publishers, whether at home or abroad, might not accept it; and the board of mangement of the corporation gave a formal assurance that it would act in these conditions with a full sense of responsiblitly and in close consultation with Her Majesty's Government.

Since 1980 the Government have been reviewing all emergency plans, many of which had remained unchanged since the early 1960s with a view to bringing them up to date with modern circumstances. The arrangements described above have never been used and their continued relevance is being considered as part of the development of Government policy towards all parts of the media in time of war along the lines described in the Government's response to the Beach report (Cmnd. 9499, April 1985).

Shoplifting (Suicides)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people charged with shoplifting have committed suicide (a) before and (b) after their cases were heard in each of the last 10 years for which records are available.

Mr. Mellor: The information available to me relates to court proceedings reported to have been discontinued because the defendant committed suicide, which for magistrates' courts is published annually for all types of offence in "Criminal Statistics, in England and Wales, Supplementary Tables, Volume I" (table S1.1(a)(i) of the publication for 1984). No proceedings for shoplifting were reported to have been discontinued for this reason in 1984; the corresponding numbers were three in 1982 and one in 1978. Corresponding numbers for other previous years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information is not collected centrally on suicides before court proceedings begin or after the court has made its decision.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in view of the death by suicide of Mrs. Mary Wilcox, he will now issue guidelines to all police forces to ensure that, before a person who is elderly or very young or ill is charged with shoplifting, special consideration is given as to whether or not prosecution is the best way to deal with the matter, with particular regard to the risks of suicide.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Decisions whether to institute proceedings in individual cases are the responsibility of chief officers of police and my right hon. Friend has no authority to issue instructions to them in this. Home Office circular 14/1985 on the cautioning of offenders, issued in February 1985, provided guidance to chief officers on the circumstances in which a course of action other than prosecution, such as cautioning, might be appropriate. It drew particular attention to the suitability of cautioning in respect of juveniles, the elderly and infirm, and persons suffering physical or mental illness, mental impairment or emotional distress. Home Office circular 26/1983, issued in February 1983, drew the attention of chief officers of police to the Attorney-General's guidelines on prosecution practice, which also provided guidance on the decision to prosecute in cases involving the elderly, or infirm, or persons suffering from mental illness or stress. Copies of both circulars are in the Library.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in view of the death by suicide of Mrs. Mary Wilcox, he will hold an inquiry into the law on theft from shops and on the way in which it operates in practice.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans to do so.

Terrorism

Mr. George asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report the date and nature of terrorist incidents in the United Kingdom, showing Northern Ireland separately for each of the last three years.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 27 March 1986, c. 541]: Statistics of terrorist incidents which occurred in Great Britain in the years 1983-85 are as follows. These do not include incidents apparently caused by extremist nationalist or anarchist groups based in Great Britain, or by extremist animal rights activists.

Statistics of terrorist activity in Northern Ireland in the years 1971 to 1985 were given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 27 February 1986, at columns 636-42.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Family Credit Scheme

8. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he hopes to publish his consultation paper for employers about the family credit scheme.

Mr. Newton: We are currently undertaking the further discussions promised by my right hon. Friend during the Report stage of the Social Security Bill.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services for what purposes he gives grant-aid to the Medical Research Council; and what was the level of grant for the year ended 31 March.

Mr. Whitney: We do not give an annual grant to the Medical Research Council. We have given the MRC support for specific individual projects and commissions for research in important policy areas on an ad hoc basis. In the financial year 1985-86 the total cost of this project support and commissioned research was £255,185.

Consultant Surgeons

19. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the percentage of an average National Health Service consultant surgeon's time spent per week on (a) operations and (b) consultations with patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the information requested is not collected centrally. It is for consultants and health authorities to determine how much time should be allocated to particular clinical duties.

Heating Costs

20. Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for single payments towards extra heating costs incurred by claimants during the exceptionally cold weather last winter have been submitted to his Department; how many payments have been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Information on the total number of claims for a single payment in respect of extra fuel used during the exceptionally severe weather last winter is not available, but approximately 336,000 such payments had been made by 6 May. Details of the total number of payments will be collected later in the year, when the period during which such claims could be made is over.

Residential Care and Nursing Homes

21. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if there are any plans to increase the number of inspectors of residential care homes and nursing homes.

Mr Whitney: The duty to register and inspect residential care homes and nursing homes under the Registered Homes Act 1984 is placed on local social service authorities and district health authorities respectively. It is for each registering authority to decide the staff required to enable it to discharge its statutory duty.

Primary Health Care Services

22. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding his Green Paper on "Primary Health Care Services."

Mr. Hayhoe: About 50 representations have been received from individual practitioners and members of the public.

Portman Clinic

23. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what representations he has received concerning the future and funding of the Portman clinic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Records show that, since October 1985, only two representations including this inquiry had been received at 19 May 1986 about the future and funding of the Portman clinic.

The Government are acting to bring to an end uncertainty that has surrounded the future and funding of both the Portman and Tavistock clinics. An independent group has now reported on the role of the clinics. A second report has looked at how resources are currently used. Both reports have recently been consulted upon. Ministers will shortly be considering the results of consultations and how best to resolve outstanding issues over the future and funding of the clinics.

Benefits (Students)

24. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received in respect of the proposal to restrict student eligibility for benefits.

Mr. Newton: Since publication of the White Paper we have received approximately 1,230 written representations and inquiries on these proposals.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those elements of the mandatory student grant, other than the £181 for books and equipment, which are deductible for the calculation of the student's entitlement to supplementary benefit during term-time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The other grant elements which are deducted when calculating any entitlement to supplementary benefit during term time are any grant paid to a disabled student in respect of his additional expenditure by reason of his disability; any grant paid in respect of any dependent child or spouse outside the United Kingdom; any sum which is intended and used for meeting expenses reasonably incurred by a student while living in accommodation away from his home for the purpose of attending his course; any sum which is intended and used for travelling expenses; any sum awarded in respect of special equipment requirements.

Supplementary Benefit

25. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are presently in receipt of supplementary benefit in Coventry; and what was the comparable figure in May 1979.

Mr. Major: 39,769 people are in receipt of supplementary benefit at the two Coventry local offices compared with 22,088 in May 1979.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) since the introduction of the Supplementary Benefits (Requirements) Amendment Regulations in November 1985 (a) how many requests local offices of his Department have received under schedule 2A, paragraph 5(4)(m) of those regulations for him to use his discretion in order to avoid exceptional hardship being suffered, (b) how many such requests have been referred on to the section dealing with them in headquarters and (c) in how many cases he has used his discretionary power;

(2) since the introduction of the Supplementary Benefits (Requirements) Amendment Regulations in November 1985 (a) how many requests have been received by each of the Stockton, Middlesbrough, Redcar, Eston and Hartlepool offices of his Department under schedule 2A, paragraph 5(4)(m) of those regulations for him to use his discretion in order to avoid exceptional hardship being suffered, (b) how many such requests from each of the above local offices have been referred on to the section dealing with them in headquarters and (c) in how many cases for each of the above local offices he has used his discretionary power.

Mr. Major: Requests to local social security offices under schedule 2A, paragraph 5(4)(m) of the Supplementary Benefit Requirements Regulations are referred to headquarters. In respect of the individual offices mentioned by the hon. Member, four requests have been forwarded, all from the local office in Middlesbrough, of which one was successful. Overall, 94 requests have been received, of which 21 were successful.

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were in receipt of supplementary benefit in (a) the northern region and (b) Sunderland for each year since 1979.

Mr. Major: Sunderland is covered for social security purposes by the Department's offices at Sunderland (South) and Sunderland (North) and is situated in the Department's north-eastern region. North-eastern region was formed in 1982 by the amalgamation of the former Yorkshire and Humberside region with the major part of the former northern region. The table shows the total number of people receiving supplementary benefit in (a) both Sunderland local offices and (b) Northern and Yorkshire Humberside regions together for 1979-81 and north-eastern region from 1982 onwards. Figures given show the position at 6 May 1986, the latest available, and at comparable dates for each of the years since 1979.

Year	Sunderland	Region
1979	22,859	489,380
1980	23,137	497,297
1981	26,456	524,270
1982	31,272	663,069
1983	33,490	710,426
1984	36,248	756,721
1985	37,572	791,634
1986	38,678	804,115

Research Trust for Metabolic Diseases in Children

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Research Trust for Metabolic Diseases in Children to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Newton: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 9 to 13 June 1986.

British Home for Incurables Hospital

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the financial consequences for the British Home for Incurables hospital in Crown Lane, London SW16 of changes in the payment of housing allowances for those admitted under the age of 65 years.

Mr. Newton: I presume the hon. Member is referring to changes in the supplementary benefit limits for residential care and nursing homes. Information on which to base the estimate requested is not available. However, prior to April 1985, when the new structure was introduced, the weekly supplementary benefit entitlement of residents in the home ranged from £136·15 to £164·75. The national limit for disabled residents below pension age in this type of home was £198·60 a week from April to November 1985 and has been £230 a week since then.

AIDS

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the Government will issue guidance to travellers from the United Kingdom to countries where the incidence of acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus is known to be high about the risks of infection and on precautions to avoid infection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department has any plans to advise travellers to Africa of the risks of contracting HTLV III virus infection.

Mr. Hayhoe: A reference to acquired immune deficiency syndrome was included this year for the first time in my Department's leaflet SA35 entitled "Protect your health abroad".

Fuller information for travellers about the risks of infection and on appropriate precautions is now being prepared.

Parliamentary Constituencies

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the 20 largest parliamentary constituencies by electorate, with their electorates; and what is the average constituency electorate on the current register.

Mr. Whitney: The 20 constituencies in the United Kingdom with the largest electorates, and the average electorates are:

Parliamentary Constituency	1986 Electorate
Isle of Wight	98,645
Milton Keynes	93,562
Eastleigh	87,416

Circulars (Cover Charge)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department has any plans to put a cover charge on indices of circulars issued by his Department.

Mr. Whitney: The Department publishes an index of health circulars, notices and other guidance material annually and this has a cover charge; copies are issued free to those authorities which receive the circulars as of right. The index is designed as an aid to the use of published material and the charge is made partially to cover the cost of production.

NHS (Disciplinary Inquiries)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 8 May, Official Report, column 231, he plans to collect information centrally on the cost and duration of National Health Service disciplinary inquiries.

Mr. Hayhoe: No.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received, and from which organisations or individuals, about the system of National Health Service disciplinary inquiries.

Mr. Hayhoe: Excluding representations about individual cases, three letters from individuals and a paper from the Trent regional health authority about the general system of disciplinary inquiry for hospital doctors have been received.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice his Department issues to regional health authorities and community health councils on staff appointments to community health councils.

Mr. Whitney: The Community Health Councils Regulations (S.I. 1985 No. 304) govern the appointment of staff for community health councils. In addition, regional health authorities are required to follow the relevant Whitley Council agreements on pay and conditions of service.

Patients (Statistics)

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of reductions in patients awaiting inpatient treatment can be ascribed to (a) patients dying, (b) patients moving from their district of residence, (c) patients indicating they no longer wish to be admitted to hospital and (d) patients not responding to inquiries about their continuation on waiting lists.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. It is not collected centrally.

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what reductions in patients awaiting inpatient treatment have resulted from Government initiatives in 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Whitney: It is not possible to estimate from information held centrally the reason for the fall in waiting lists which has been continuous from March 1983 to the latest date, 30 September 1985, for which figures are available. The reasons for the reduction are complex and would include both the increased number of patients treated and action which Ministers asked health authorities to take to ensure that all names on waiting lists actually relate to people still requiring treatment.

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) inpatients and (b) outpatients were treated in the northern region in 1983, 1984 and 1985; and what were the percentage changes in each year.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend all the information he seeks. Information on individual patients treated is not available centrally and figures for 1985 are not yet available. The available information is given in the table.

National Health Service Hospitals in Northern Regional Health Authority

All specialties	1983	1984	Percentage increase 1983-1984
In-patient cases	409,115	420,080	2·7
Day cases	66,093	68,658	3·9
Out-patient attendances:
New attendances	557,125	569,743	2·3
Total attendances	2,451,627	2,508,759	2·3

X-ray Radiation

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any estimation of the number of deaths caused by cancer resulting from radiation from medical X-rays.

Mr. Whitney: It is not possible from statistics available to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to estimate the number of deaths caused by cancer resulting from radiation from medical X-rays.

Pharmacists (Contract)

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what timing amendments are proposed to the transitional arrangements in the light of the delayed introduction of the proposed new contract for pharmacists.

Mr. Hayhoe: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to possible changes to the transitional arrangements pending the implementation of the pharmacists' new contract agreement as set out in the draft guidelines, copies of which have been placed in the Library. Until the NHS (Amendment) Bill completes its passage through Parliament, and a new date for implementation of the contract is known, no new transitional arrangements will be announced.

Pharmacy Practices Sub-committees

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost of setting up the proposed new pharmacy practices sub-committees.

Mr. Hayhoe: The cost of the pharmacy practices sub-committees will be borne from within family practitioner committees' allocated budget for administration.

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any pharmacy practices sub-committees have already been set up and persons nominated to serve.

Mr. Hayhoe: Not to my knowledge.

Rural Dispensing

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the annual cost of the rural dispensing national appeal machinery for the latest year available.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not held separately from other departmental expenditure.

Pharmacies (Practice Allowance)

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many current pharmacies do not receive the basic practice allowance.

Mr. Hayhoe: On 31 December 1985, there were approximately 335 pharmacies in England and Wales not in receipt of a basic practice allowance.

Pharmacies

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pharmacies there are per thousand population in Great Britain compared to France, Italy and West Germany, at the latest available date.

Mr. Hayhoe: Each of the countries quoted operates different primary health care schemes and comparisons of levels of pharmaceutical services based solely on the numbers of pharmacies are not necessarily valid. Apart from Great Britain, there are no official statistics on the numbers of pharmacies in these countries. But using information available, in 1982 there was approximately one pharmacy for every 5,100 persons in Great Britain compared with 3,750 in West Germany; 3,000 in France; and 4,000 in Italy.

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Government intend to ensure that all family practitioner committees shall publish the number of pharmacies per thousand population in their area compared to a national norm.

Mr. Hayhoe: There is no national norm. The ratio of pharmacies to population might be one of many items of information a family practitioner committee would need to collect to assess the adequacy of services provided to the public.

"Guide to Healthy Eating"

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide additional funding for the Health Education Council to enable wider circulation of its "Guide to Healthy Eating".

Mr. Whitney: The costs associated with this publication were included in the council's estimated expenditure for 1986-87. We would normally expect printing or distribution above the planned level to be contained within the council's resource allocation.

Disposal Certificate

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any proposals for re-titling the disposal certificate issued by the Registrars of Births, Marriages and Deaths; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Disposal certificates are issued in respect of stillbirths as well as deaths. From 1 January 1986 all disposal certificates relating to stillbirths bear the title "Certificate for Burial or Cremation" and future prints of disposal certificates for deaths are being similarly retitled.

NHS (Leeds, East)

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients have been treated by the National Heath Service within the Leeds, East district in each year since 1977; and what was the average size of the waiting list for treatment in each such year for people living within that district.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend information in precisely the form requested. The information available centrally is given in the tables.

Domestic Assistance Addition

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish, on the basis of his latest available information, the number of people who are in receipt of domestic assistance addition; if he will analyse the distribution of the weekly value of this payment by £10 bands; and if he will publish an analysis of the general categories of disablement in respect of these persons.

Mr. Newton: From information from the December 1983 annual statistical inquiry for supplementary benefit it is estimated that there were some 2,400 claimants receiving an additional requirement for domestic assistance with an average payment of £3·59. Provisional estimates from the December 1984 inquiry indicate about 3,150 cases with an average payment of £3·90. Because of the few claimants shown in the inquiries as receiving the addition, estimates are subject to the normal uncertainties implicit in a small sample size. A more detailed breakdown by range of payment is as follows:

Range of payment £	Estimated number of cases
10·00	3,000
10·00–19·99	100
20·00–29·99	—
30·00–39·99	—
40·00–49·99	50
50+	—
Total	3,150

Source: 1984 ASE provisional figures.

The information about ranges of payment should be regarded as giving only a broad indication of the numbers involved. In particular, the estimated numbers receiving additions over £10 is based on only three sample cases.

None the less, the estimates suggest that receipt of the additional requirement continues to be on a modest scale and, generally, for relatively small amounts. Information is not available about the type of disability.

Local Authority Expenditure

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures for 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86, showing local authority expenditure on personal social services, distinguishing between wages/salaries and administration.

Mr. Whitney: The available information is given in the table. The 1984-85 figures are still provisional. The 1985-86 gross current expenditure figure is based on local authorities' present estimates of expenditure in that year and cannot be broken down into employee costs, etc.

Pensions (Tax Expenditures)

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures comparing estimated tax expenditures on private pensions in 1985-86, in 2000-01 and on maturity of the state earnings-related pension scheme, as a result of pension changes in the Social Security Bill; and if he will show the extent to which these increased tax expenditures are expected to offset the savings in benefit expenditure.

Mr. Newton: Estimates of the costs in 1985-86 of tax allowances and reliefs for occupational pension schemes and retirement annuities are given in table 2.24 of volume two of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1986-87 to 1988-89" (Cmnd. 9702-II).

I regret that the forward projections requested are not available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost; such projections would depend on a number of subjective assumptions, including estimates of the future coverage of occupational and personal pension schemes.

Statutory Sick Pay

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total cost of statutory sick pay in each year since it was introduced.

Mr. Major: Statutory sick pay was introduced in April 1983 and the latest information available is that payments totalling £430 million and £509 million were made in 1983-84 and 1984-85 respectively.

Hip Operations

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the number of hip replacement operations which have taken place in England for each of the last 10 years; what is the latest estimate of the average waiting time between diagnosis and operation; and what is the average cost to the National Health Service of such operations.

Mr. Whitney: The available information for the 10 years up to 1984, the latest year for which information is held centrally, is given in the table.

Estimated number of operations for total hip replacement or other arthroplasty of hip, NHS hospitals in England

Year	Estimated number
1975	22,350
1976	25,400
1977	27,430
1978	28,090
1979	30,730
1980	33,420
1981	34,780
1982	33,730
1983	37,320
1984	37,970

The estimated median interval between the date a patient was placed on the waiting list and the date of admission to hospital for such operations in England in 1984 was 24 weeks.

The estimated average cost of a hip operation, based on average length of stay of 24 days, and costs in large acute hospitals, is £3,300 at 1986-87 prices, allowing for capital costs and the cost of the prosthesis.

Geriatric Beds

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any estimate of the number of people on the waiting list for geriatric beds in Leicester.

Mr. Whitney: On 31 March 1986 there were 61 people awaiting admission to beds in geriatric departments in Leicestershire district health authority.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those hospitals which have reduced their waiting lists most in the last three years; and if he will make a statement about Scunthorpe General Hospital's performance in this regard.

Mr. Whitney: Hospital waiting lists are usually managed on a district basis. Districts recording the biggest percentage decrease in total numbers of hospital in-patient waiting lists are shown in the tables. They show that Scunthorpe district health authority made the biggest reduction in total cases between 1984 and 1985 and the 19th biggest between 1982 and 1985.

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the change in waiting lists for inpatient hospital treatment for hospitals within the Bradford district health authority for each year from 1979 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: The requested information is given in the table.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide details of the waiting lists in the Basildon and Thurrock district health authority area in (i) gynaecology, (ii) orthopaedic and (iii) ear, nose and throat; and if he will state how these compare with the regional averages.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1986, c. 684]: The information requested is given in the table.

Medical Staff (Scunthorpe)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many doctors, nurses, paramedical staff and other staff there are at Scunthorpe general hospital; how these figures compare with 1979; and if he will make a statement;

(2) by what absolute amount spending at Scunthorpe general hospital has increased since 1979, expressed at constant prices; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement about the programme of improvements to catering facilities at Scunthorpe general hospital;

(4) if he will make a statement about hospital expenditure at Scunthorpe general hospital, identifying in which areas new or improved facilities have been provided, at what cost, and what the future programme is;

(5) what recent improvements have been made in patient care at Scunthorpe general hospital; what further improvements are proposed; and if he will make a statement;

(6) how many more beds will be available for the treatment of patients in Scunthorpe health district and Scunthorpe general hospital after the completion of the capital programme; how this figure compares with 1979; what will be the effect on patient care; and if he will make a statement;

(7) how many day cases were treated at Scunthorpe general hospital between April 1985 and December 1985 compared with the same period in 1984; and if he will express any increase in absolute and percentage terms;

(8) what is the anticipated increase in the number of doctors, nurses, paramedical staff and staff in all other departments of Scunthorpe general hospital and Scunthorpe health district upon completion of the capital programme.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not available centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to write to the chairman of the Scunthorpe health authority who may be able to provide the information requested.

Scunthorpe General Hospital

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) by how much as a percentage spending has increased in real terms at Scunthorpe general hospital since 1979; and if he will list those hospitals in the Yorkshire region where spending has increased in real terms since 1979 in order of priority;

(2) if he will make a statement about the operation of the resource allocation working party formula and its effects upon the Scunthorpe health authority.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not collected centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to write to the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority who may be able to provide the information requested.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many beds are available for the treatment of patients in Scunthorpe general hospital now; how this figure compares with 1979; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many patients, including inpatients and outpatients, were treated at Scunthorpe general hospital in the last year for which figures are available; how this compares with that for the year ended June 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend information in precisely the form he seeks. Hospital activity figures are collected centrally on a calendar year basis. The available information is given in the table.

Health Expenditure (Yorkshire)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the operation of the resource allocation working party formula as it affects the Yorkshire regional health authority.

Mr. Hayhoe: The principle underlying the resource allocation working party (RAWP) formula is to distribute resources more fairly across the country so as to promote equality of access to health care for people in equal need. RAWP seeks to determine each region's target share of the available resources according to the size of its population, weighted to take account of age, relative mortality (as a proxy for morbidity) and other factors. These criteria are now being reviewed.

In 1977-78, the first year in which the RAWP formula was applied, regions ranged from 11 per cent. below their RAWP target to 15 per cent. above target, with the Yorkshire region at 4·4 per cent. below target. By 1986-87, all except the two North Thames regions are within 4 per cent. of their target, with the Yorkshire region 2·2 per cent. below target. The rate of progress towards target is influenced by a number of factors. The highest increases in funding have generally been allocated to the regions furthest from target, but increases are constrained by the need to proceed at a manageable pace to allow regions time to adjust their plans. Population growth or decline also affects the extent to which funding increases effectively bring a region closer towards its target. Thus some regions with declining populations have moved towards their targets more rapidly than has the Yorkshire region.

A similar approach is used for the distribution of capital funding. An element of funding distributed on the basis of regions' capital stock is currently being phased out, and by 1991-92, capital will be distributed on the basis of weighted population only. In 1986-87, the RAWP element of Yorkshire region's £56 million capital allocation amounted to £49·5 million: this represents £13·38 per head of weighted population compared with a national average of £12·70.

Hospital Development

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will list the major hospital developments completed or under construction in the northern region in each year since 1979 and the estimated cost of each at current prices.

Mr. Whitney: The following table lists the major hospital schemes in the northern region each with a total cost of over £5 million at current prices which have either been completed since 1979 or are currently under construction.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what mileage was covered by ambulances run by the London ambulance service in 1985 and in the first quarter of 1986; and what is the estimate of that to be run in 1986.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is as follows:

	Emergency	Non-emergency	Total
Mileage in 1985	3,695,393	7,772,822	11,468,215
Mileage in first quarter of 1986	949,377	1,689,232	2,638,609
Estimated mileage in 1986	3,800,000	6,000,000	9,800,000

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the hours worked by the personnel of the London ambulance service and how many were employed by them full time in 1985; and what are his estimates of numbers of personnel and hours to be worked in 1986.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that I am unable to give the hon. Member precisely the information he requires. The number of hours worked by the London ambulance service is not available. However, a normal working week is 40 hours and applying that to the following staffing figures should give a reasonable approximation:

	Actual 1985	Target 1986
Average number of staff in post	2,062	2,328
Average weekly overtime (wte)* worked	491	116
Average weekly total (wte)*	2,553	2,444

* Whole-time equivalent.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the number of non-emergency cases carried by the London ambulance service in each of the years 1984 and 1985 and the numbers he expects to be carried in 1986.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that I am unable to give the hon. Member all the information he requires as the number of cases carried by the London ambulance service is not collected. However, the number of actual non-emergency journeys is as follows:

Number of non-emergency patient journeys

	Number
1984*	2,269,009
1985*	2,200,627
1986†	2,038,000

* Actual.
† Projected.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what requests have been made by the South-West Thames regional health authority to district health authorities in respect of use of the London ambulance service; what is the target of that authority's request of redirection in the number of "non-emergency" cases to be carried.

Mr. Whitney: In a letter dated 20 March 1986, the South-West Thames regional health authority asked district health authorities to reduce the demand for non-emergency ambulance transport for walking cases by 40 per cent.

Hospital Activity Returns

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of each health district's SH3 hospital activity return for each year since 1978.

Mr. Whitney: No. The very detailed information the hon. Member has asked for would consist of about 10,000 pages, and I do not consider its production would be an appropriate use of departmental resources.

Benefits

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the effect of increasing long-term national insurance benefits by £5 a week for a single person and £8 for a married couple and raising child benefit by £3 a week on the numbers claiming (a) supplementary benefit, (b housing benefit and (c) family income supplement, if no corresponding adjustments were made to the eligibility levels for income tested support.

Mr. Newton: Parts (a) and (b) cannot be answered without incurring disproportionate costs. Part (c) implies minimal reductions in the numbers claiming family income supplement.

Leukaemia

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of patients receiving treatment for leukaemia in each of the area health districts in west Yorkshire; and what were the numbers in each district in west Yorkshire in each of the last three years.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. It is not collected centrally. He may wish to write to the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority who may be able to provide the information requested.

Epilepsy

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if there are any plans to include epilepsy as a prescribed disease for exemption from prescription charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Epilepsy requiring continuous anti-convulsive therapy is included in the list of medical conditions which confer entitlement to exemption from prescription charges.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the prescribed diseases which confer exemption from prescription charges.

Mr. Hayhoe: The following medical conditions are those which confer entitlement to exemption from prescription charges.

(i) a permanent fistula (including caecostomy, colostomy, laryngostomy or ileostomy) requiring continuous surgical dressing or an appliance;
(ii) one of the following disorders for which specific substitution therapy is essential:
Addison's disease and other forms of hypoadrenalism, diabetes insipidus and other forms of hypopituitarism, diabetes mellitus,
hypoparathyroidism,
myastenia gravis,
myxoedema;
(iii) epilepsy requiring continuous anti-convulsive therapy;
(iv) a continuing physical disability which prevents the patient from leaving his residence without the help of another person.

Potassium Iodate Tablets

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many of the potassium iodate tablets held to counter possible ionising radiation have been in stock for more than 10, five, two and one years, respectively; (2) what is the shelf life of potassium iodate tablets.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many potassium iodate tablets would be required to prevent radioactive iodine collecting in the thyroid of five, 10 and 18-year-olds, respectively, at levels of radiation reported within five miles of Windscale in 1957 and within five, 10 and 20 miles of Chernobyl in 1986.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 23 May 1986, c. 385]: I am advised that there is no indication for taking potassium iodate tablets unless it is estimated that the radiation dose to the thyroid from exposure to radioactive iodine may reach 50 mSv or more and that the recommended dose of potassium iodate to anyone over four years old is 200 milligrams which is provided by two tablets.

I am also advised that the estimated dose to the thyroid for persons within five miles of the Windscale fire was always less than 50 mSv and that information is not available to estimate the radiation dose to the thyroid received by persons in the area surrounding Chernobyl.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to include Comfeel Ulcus and Granuflex on the limited list.

Mr. Hayhoe: These are two of a number of modern wound care products which the Department has been asked to consider for the list of prescribable dressings. The manufacturers have been advised that further evidence is needed from controlled clinical trials on the efficacy and cost-effectiveness of the products. This information should enable the claims made for the new dressings to be assessed.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will establish an inquiry into the need for speech therapists in the light of his policies on care in the community.

Mr. Whitney: District health authorities are responsible for the provision of speech therapy services for people both in hospital and in the community. We would expect that authorities are already taking proper account of our policies for care in the community in formulating their development plans for speech therapy services.

Child Benefit

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding the ineligibility for child benefit of parents with children aged over 16 years being educated at home; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Twelve letters have been received from hon. Members and 15 from the general public. A Government amendment has been made to the Social Security Bill to provide for child benefit to be paid for children who continue to be educated at home after reaching the age of 16 years, having been educated at home before reaching that age. Under the Child Benefit Act, at present, benefit is not paid in these circumstances.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out the number on the waiting lists for surgery in (a) the Yorkshire regional health authority and (b) the Harrogate health authority now and at approximately the same date in each of the last three years.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend precisely the information he seeks. The latest available information is given in the table. The number of surgical in-patient cases treated in Harrogate district health authority increased from 8,455 to 8,605 between 1982 and 1984.

Number of cases on in-patient waiting list for admission to surgical beds in NHS hospitals at 30 September

	1982	1983	1984	1985
Yorkshire Regional Health Authority	51,670	48,055	46,158	44,934
Harrogate District Health Authority	1,155	1,180	1,335	1,446

Hospital Closures

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to decline to approve any hospital closures in Burnley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Any proposal for permanent closure is subject to full local consultation in line with established procedures. If agreement cannot be reached locally and with the regional health authority, the proposal is referred to Ministers for final decision.

Benefits (Burnley)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total cost in Burnley of payments to the unemployed in each year since 1979 of (i) unemployment benefit, (ii) supplementary allowances and (iii) housing benefits, respectively.

Mr. Major: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the numbers of unemployed people in Burnley, by entitlement to benefit for each year since 1979 and distinguishing between the following (i) unemployment benefit only, (ii) unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit, (iii) supplementary benefit only, (iv) no benefit and (v) housing benefit.

Mr. Major: The following table shows the numbers of unemployed people in Burnley in November each year since 1979 receiving the following benefits (i) unemployment benefit only, (ii) unemployment and supplementary benefits, (iii) supplementary benefit only and (iv) no benefit. Similar information is not available for housing benefit.

Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of medical laboratory scientific officers who have ceased employment with the National Health Service in the past 18 months.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not available centrally. The number of medical laboratory scientific officers in post in each of the three years up to September 1984, the latest date for which information is available, varied only marginally.

Diabetics

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what steps are being taken in the National Health Service to seek to ensure that diabetic children carry out their blood tests correctly.

Mr. Whitney: Careful monitoring of the blood sugar levels of a diabetic child is part of the clinical management of the condition by the doctor responsible, who would normally be a hospital consultant. Education and training of the patient, and family if appropriate, are essential parts of this managment. In some areas specialist nurses are available to assist with this.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether plastic disposable syringes are available on National Health Service prescriptions to diabetics who require insulin injections.

Mr. Hayhoe: Disposable syringes are not included in the list of appliances which general practitioners may prescribe on the National Health Service. The prescribable list includes a range of reusable hypodermic equipment. If it is medically necessary for a diabetic, or any other patient, to use disposable syringes they may be supplied on the National Health Service through the hospital service.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many new cases of diabetes have been diagnosed in each of the last five years; what is the patient age distribution of diagnosis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: There are no centrally collected statistics on the incidence or age distribution of diabetes. It has been estimated that in the United Kingdom over a million people suffer from the condition and that some 30,000 new cases are diagnosed each year, of whom 1,500 are children. Diabetes can occur at any age but the incidence of non-insulin-dependent diabetes is more common after middle age. The peak years for the incidence of insulin-dependent diabetes occur in childhood.

Andersen Report

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to give any further consideration to the recommendations of the Andersen report.

Mr. Hayhoe: I presume the hon. Member is referring to the "Report of a study of family practitioner services administration and the use of computers" by management consultants Arthur Andersen and Co., which was published in July 1984. The programme of computerising the administration of the family practitioner services is now well under way and all the committees should be computerised by April 1988.

Primary Health Care

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if additional resources are to be allocated to the provision of primary health care for the over-75s in inner city practices.

Mr. Hayhoe: A major review of primary health care is under way: the Command Paper "Primary Health Care: An Agenda for Discussion" (Cmnd. 9771) issued in April includes a chapter on promoting primary health care in inner cities for people of all ages. Consultations on the paper will continue until the end of the year and I intend to await the outcome of the review before reaching conclusions.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what provision is made for the after-care of diabetics discharged from hospital.

Mr. Whitney: The after-care of a diabetic patient discharged from hospital is the responsibility of the general practitioner. Many diabetics, however, continue attending hospital clinics regularly. Specialist nursing, dietetic advice and chiropody services are also available.

Aspartame

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received about the possible side-effects of aspartame in low-calorie drinks on diabetics.

Mr. Whitney: We have received no recent representations on this subject. I am advised that there is no evidence to suggest that the artificial sweetener aspartame is unsafe for diabetics.

Cancer Units

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all applications received from district health authorities since the beginning of 1986 to close cancer units; which are currently under consideration; and which have to date been refused.

Mr. Hayhoe: Since the beginning of 1986 no proposals concerning the closure of cancer units have come before Ministers for consideration.

NHS Training Authority

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the role of and the budget provided for the National Health Service training authority.

Mr. Whitney: The role of the authority is to identify the training needs of National Health Service staff in England and Wales; to formulate, co-ordinate and develop national training policies and standards; to provide, or make arrangements for the provision of, training programmes, courses and research; to stimulate, monitor and review training activities; and to advise the Secretary of State and health authorities on all matters related to training. The authority covers the training needs of all National Health Service staff, except for those for whom another statutory body has responsibilities for training. The authority's budget for 1986-87 is £4·734 million.

Pay Beds

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average cost of a National Health Service pay bed, including all relevant overheads (a) nationally and (b) in the Yorkshire and Humberside Regional Health Authority.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not available in the form requested. Charges for National Health Service pay beds are set by reference to costs specific to classes of hospitals in which there are authorised pay beds. Nationally costs (and therefore charges) range from £54 to £256 per day according to the class of hospital. Five of the eight classes of hospital are represented in the Yorkshire region with charges—set at national rates—ranging from £54 to £133. In fact the range of costs at the specific classes of hospitals authorised to treat patients in Yorkshire is lower than the national average for those classes, ranging from £50 to £120.

Hospital Staff (Charges)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date board and lodging and meals charges for nurses and auxiliary staff in hospitals were last raised.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

NHS (Pay)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the minimum and maximum annual pay for each grade of nurses, midwives and health visitors at 1 April, the amounts they will receive after the recent pay awards and the percentage increase they will receive for the whole year; and what is the day in July from which the award will be operative.

Mr. Hayhoe: Salary rates for all grades as at 1 April and from 1 July are set out in appendix A to the review body report (Cmnd. 9782). The following table shows, for the main nursing pay grades and a number of the more senior grades, minimum and maximum basic annual salaries as at 1 April 1986 and 1 July 1986, the date from which the salaries recommended by the pay review body will be paid. It also shows the effective percentage increases payable in the financial year 1986-87. The percentage increases in salary points are higher.

Neasden Hospital (Ward Closure)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many extra district nurses and health visitors have been appointed by the Brent district health authority since November 1985 when the Minister's approval to close a ward in Neasden hospital was accompanied by a letter to the hon. Member for Brent, South stating that the resources released by this change would be accompanied by increased staff in these two specialties.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of the Brent district health authority who may be able to provide the information requested.

Chernobyl Accident

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the best estimate of immediate exposure to radiation from cloud gamma dose received by British students in (a) Minsk and (b) Kiev at the time of the Chernobyl incident; what assessment has been made for neutron dose; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the best estimate of the range of whole body dose received by those British students in (a) Minsk and (b) Kiev at the time of the Chernobyl incident and immediately afterwards; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what traces of alpha contamination were found on the clothes of the British students who were in Minsk and Kiev at the time of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant; what were the levels; and what were the different radionuclides; (4) if he will define the specific limit referred to by the National Radiological Protection Board in relation to its statement that those British students who have returned from the vicinity of the Chernobyl reactor accident had received an iodine dose to the thyroid gland of 10 per cent. of the International Commission on Radiological Protection limit; and what were the thyroid doses for (a) those students who had been in Minsk and (b) those students who had been in Kiev at the time of the accident and up to the day they left the Soviet Union.

Mr. Whitney: As the general information requested by the hon. Member is of a highly technical nature, I suggest that he write to the chairman of the National Radiological Protection Board. Information relating to individual students must be protected by the normal rules on disclosure of medical data.

Registered Homes

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to seek to amend the Registered Homes Act 1984, so as to increase the number of inspections of such homes.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 28 January at column 487 and that to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Spencer) on 29 April at column 383. An interim report on the two-year study by the Social Services Inspectorate dealing with the systems that local authorities are devising to implement the legislation has just been sent to directors of social services to assist them in the continuing development of registration work. A copy of the report is in the Library. There will be a further report by the inspectorate around the turn of the year. This will consider the impact of the changes on the quality of care provided in the homes themselves. This will include an examination of the standards being set locally by authorities and the degree to which the legislation is being implemented in ways that seek to develop constructive partnerships between statutory, voluntary and private sectors of residential care.

Meanwhile the inspectorate will be organising a programme of workshops for registration and inspection staff and their managers.

Spectacle Vouchers

Mrs. Viginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what the range of spectacle vouchers and their values will be on introduction of the scheme on 1 July.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Government's measures to end the opticians' monopoly on the supply of spectacles and to remove unjustified barriers to advertising have had their intended effect. Prices have come down, budget price spectacles are widely available and the standards of services have improved.

The voucher scheme being introduced on 1 July will allow children and those on low incomes to share in the advantage of consumer choice. They will no longer be restricted to the existing range of National Health Service frames, most of which have remained unchanged over many years.

Instead they will be provided with vouchers so that they can shop around for the best buy from the many low-price frames that will become increasingly available. They may, if they wish, use their vouchers towards the cost of more expensive frames that are on the market at more competitive prices than formerly. Sight-tests will, of course, remain free.

I am pleased to announce that the necessary financial help will be provided through a range of six vouchers. There will be three vouchers for single vision spectacles with values of £14·25, £22 and £33, depending on the complexity of the individual prescription. Similarly there will be three vouchers for bifocal spectacles with values of £27, £42 and £66. Certain additions will be made for clinically necessary prisms and tints. For those requiring complex lenses, but who do not qualify on income grounds, the help currently provided will be continued by means of vouchers intended as a contribution towards the cost of their spectacles. These will be priced at minimum values of £2 for complex single vision spectacles and £14 for complex bifocals but may be as high as £11 and £26 where both prisms and tints are required.

The Government are satisfied that in the currently more competitive spectacle market these vouchers will allow people to be assured of a basic pair of spectacles suitable for their clinical needs.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many general hospitals have accident and emergency departments without having the back-up facility of an intensive care unit within the hospital.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hopitals have accident and emergency departments without the back-up of an intensive care unit on the same site.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his replies, 24 March and 25 March 1986, c. 383-459]: In 1984, the latest year for which figures are available centrally, there were 462 National Health Service hospitals in England which recorded patient activity in accident and emergency departments and which did not have an intensive care unit.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EC (Export Rebates)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost per day in 1985 of European Economic Community payments of export rebates for food surpluses, storage of food surpluses and disposal through destruction or other internal disposal of surpluses, respectively, expressed in £ sterling; and what were the comparable totals for 1980.

Mr. Gummer: The table sets out Community expenditure on export refunds public storage and disposal of commodities which have been in structural surplus (cereals, sugar, milk products, beef and wine).

	1985	1980
Export Refunds (£/day)	9·4 million	8·2 million
Storage costs (£/day)	2·1 million	0·6 million
Disposal costs (£/day)	8·6 million	4·1 million

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to his reply of 27 February, to the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) Official Report, column 644, he is now able to announce further details of the economies and improvements in the efficiency of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have now revised our proposals for economies and improvements in the efficiency of ADAS, so as to save a total of 334 ADAS posts and 75 non-ADAS posts. These savings take account of independent market research on certain animal health schemes, which suggests that demand for these schemes justifies the retention of a number of posts which would otherwise have been lost. As a result, the post losses in the State Veterinary Service can be reduced from 141 to 108. The new figures also take account of 30 badger operator posts which are no longer needed, consequent on the recommendations of the report on badgers and bovine tuberculosis by Professor Dunnet's review team which was published on 7 April. The revised distribution of ADAS post losses is accordingly Agriculture Service, 107; Agricultural Science Service, 82; Land and Water Service, 37; and the State Veterinary Service, 108.

As part of the measures to improve efficiency and economy it is intended to make some changes in the local organisation of ADAS. In a number of cases, adjacent animal health offices will be amalgamated under one divisional veterinary officer, although veterinary services will continue to be provided from most of the offices affected. Analytical chemistry facilities will be withdrawn from Newcastle, Reading and Bristol to concentrate this discipline on one laboratory per region. The local offices at Chester and Brigg (Humberside) will close, with services being provided from the divisional offices at Crewe and Beverley respectively. The Ulverston (Cumbria) office will also close, except for market days, service at other times being provided from the Kendal area office.

I have placed in the Library of the House a more detailed statement of these economies.

Radiation

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the results of tests being carried out into the absorption of radioactive elements by sheep and cattle in the county of Cumbria.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 3 June 1986]: Results of tests issued by my Department on 30 May show that levels of Iodine 131 are now very low in milk and meat from sheep and cattle in Cumbria and continuing to fall. Levels of Caesium 137 and 134, which are more persistent radionuclides, are generally low, but higher readings have been found in the meat of some hill sheep and lambs in upland areas in Cumbria which were subject to high rainfall over the weekend of 2-3 May. These animals are not yet ready for slaughter and no specific action is required at present. My Department will continue to keep a close watch on levels in livestock in Cumbria and other areas of high deposition throughout the summer and as animals become ready for slaughter.

SOCIAL SERVICES

General Practice Finance Corporation

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to review the financing of the General Practice Finance Corporation.

Mr. Hayhoe: The corporation's net borrowing has been cash limited since 1 April 1985 and this seems an opportune time to review the corporation's financing in the light of the experience gained. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland and I propose to commission an independent study by consultants.

The terms of reference will be:

"To examine the scope for and means of reducing public sector involvement in funding loans to gmps for the provision of surgery premises and in particular to advise on the feasibility and cost effectiveness of sales from the General Practice Finance Corporation's loan portfolio."

Residential Care

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the Ernst and Whinney report on private and voluntary residential care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have now received the report from Ernst and Whinney and are considering whether and, if so, in what form it should be published.

National Insurance

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many instances have been recorded of employers' failure to pay national insurance contributions in full or in part (a) as a total nationally, (b) in the north-east of England, (c) within Cleveland county, (d) in Stockton-on-Tees and (e) broken down between major industries in line with standard Department of Trade and Industry classifications, in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: The Department does not keep records in the form requested, but the following table gives some relevant information.

Action in respect of employers who have failed to pay N.I. contributions

	Number of employers prosecuted	Number of employers sued	Number of employers where arrears were written off
Great Britain:—
April 1983 to April 1984	1,971	2,080	4,990
April 1984 to April 1985	1,326	1,570	6,310
April 1985 to April 1986	13	1,259	4,652
North East Region:—
April 1983 to April 1984	437	344	522
April 1984 to April 1985	235	145	469
April 1985 to April 1986	Nil	120	470

Numbers of employers who became insolvent owing arrears of N.I. contributions

	Company liquidations	Personal bankruptcies
April 1983 to April 1984	13,716	1,435
April 1984 to April 1985	13,980	1,876
April 1985 to April 1986	14,042	1,846

Note: No separate figures are available for the north east.

Number of employers involved in Inland Revenue actions to obtain payment of employees' N.I. contributions

	Number
November 1982 to November 1983	20,808
November 1983 to November 1984	22,642
November 1984 to November 1985	22,287

Note: No separate figures are available for the north east.

Notes:

(a) The marked reduction in the numbers of employers prosecuted in 1985-86 was due to the announcement on 12 November 1984 of the intention to repeal section 152(4) of the Social Security Act 1975. Previously a criminal conviction was sought under that section against a limited liability company before proceeding against the directors personally for recovery of outstanding arrears of NI contributions. The announcement resulted in the cessation of criminal proceedings under that section.

(b) Under section 152(4) (now repealed), the same employer will often have been both prosecuted and sued. The sum of the two figures does not therefore represent the number of employers involved.

(c) Some of the insolvent employers will be also included in the prosecution or civil action figures, because civil proceedings can result in petitions to make an employer insolvent, and most section 152(4) proceedings were instituted against limited companies in liquidation.

(d) The Inland Revenue initiate action against employers to recover unpaid NI contributions but if they are unsuccessful they transfer the outstanding debt to my Department for continuing action. Therefore the figures of Inland Revenue actions will include some employers included in the figures in the first two tables.

Benefits

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Slough are in receipt of (a) child benefit, (b) housing benefit, (c) additional heating allowance, (d) invalidity benefit, (e) mobility allowance, (f) special diet allowance and (g) sickness benefit.

Mr. Major: Separate records for the Slough area are not held detailing the numbers of claimants in receipt of child benefit, housing benefit, additional heating allowance, mobility allowance or special diet allowance. The number of claimants at the Department's local office at Slough in receipt of sickness and invalidity benefit as at 6 May 1986 (the latest date for which information is available) is 2,384. Separate records are not kept of the number of claimants in receipt of sickness and invalidity benefit.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in the London borough of Newham are in receipt of (a) child benefit, (b) housing benefit, (c) additional heating allowance, (d) invalidity benefit, (e) mobility allowance, (f) special diet allowance and (g) sickness benefit.

Mr. Major: The London borough of Newham is served by three of the Department's local offices, Canning town, Plaistow and Woodgrange park. Separate records are not kept by local office areas on the number of claimants who are in receipt of child benefit, housing benefit, additional heating allowance, mobility allowance or special diet allowance. The number of claimants in receipt of sickness and invalidity benefit at these offices as at 6 May 1986 (the latest date for which information is available) is as follows:

Sickness and Invalidity Benefit

	Number
Canning Town	748
Plaistow	1,632
Woodgrange Park	1,988

Separate records are not kept of the number of claimants in receipt of sickness and invalidity benefit.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many registered disabled persons there are in Slough.

Mr. Newton: This information is not available centrally for the area requested.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many registered disabled persons there are in the London borough of Newham.

Mr. Newton: The latest available data about the number of persons registered with the Newham social services department as physically or sensorily handicapped are set out in the table. There is no information held centrally about the numbers of registered mentally disordered persons.

Newham—Number of registered handicapped people

As at 31 March	Type of Register	Number of persons registered
1982	Blind and Partially Sighted*	880
1983	Deaf and Hard of Hearing*	334
1984	General Classes*†	5,416

* Includes persons multiply handicapped and therefore on other registers.
† But excludes persons on the Register of the Blind.

Supplementary Benefit (Blind People)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate the number of blind householders aged over 85 years now claiming supplementary benefit who will be entitled to less than their current income under the provisions of the Social Security Bill, disregarding the protection of the transitional arrangements; and if he will give the basis of his calculations;

(2) how many blind people claiming supplementary benefit now get a diet addition; and how many of these will be entitled to less than their current income under the provisions of the Social Security Bill, disregarding the protection of the transitional arrangements;

(3) how many blind people claiming supplementary benefit also get mobility and attendance allowance; and how many of these will be entitled to less than their current income under the provisions of the Social Security Bill, disregarding the protection of the transitional arrangements.

Mr. Newton: No such estimates can be made, since no decisions have yet been taken about either the benefit rates payable from April 1987 under the present system, or the benefit rates payable from April 1988 under the system proposed in the Social Security Bill.

Legionnaire's Disease (Stafford)

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the report of the public inquiry into the outbreak of legionnaire's disease at Stafford district general hospital.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer my hon. Friend to my statement earlier today.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate (a) the number of awards of the supplementary benefit non-householder housing addition to those aged 21 to 24 years, (b) the number of households receiving housing benefit containing non-dependants between the ages of 21 and 24 years, in respect of whom deductions from housing benefit are made and (c) the net annual saving in benefit expenditure he expects to make as a result of the proposed changes to the rules governing non-householders and non-dependants aged between 21 and 24 years in July 1986.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 12 May 1986, c. 381]: Precise information is not available. We estimate that there are 180,000 non-householders aged 21-24 in receipt of supplementary benefit who receive the non-householder addition. Information is not collected centrally on non-dependent deductions from housing benefit but we can make some estimates based on a computer simulation model of housing benefit entitlement. These suggest that some 180,000 households which receive housing benefit contain non-dependants between the ages of 21-24 in respect of whom deductions are made. Of these there are about 30,000 where the non-dependants receive supplementary benefit. The figures available would suggest a gross saving of about £8 million to £9 million in 1986-87 and £26 million in 1987-88. We estimate that the corresponding change to the arrangements for non-dependants might reduce the gross savings by around a tenth. The year 1987-88 is the only full year before the wider social security changes which are planned, and since the change applies to new claims it will not affect all claimants.

Westminster Hospital

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library copies of the correspondence he has exchanged with the Riverside health authority concerning the future of Westminster hospital.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 66]: In accordance with normal practice, I have placed in the Library a copy of my letter of 22 May 1986 to the chairman of the North-West Thames regional authority following the annual review meeting held with that authority. That letter briefly records the outcome of a discussion with the chairman of riverside health authority about the future provision of services in Riverside district.

Nursing Staff (Lodging Charges)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date board and lodging and meals charges for nurses and auxiliary staff in hospitals were last raised.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 3 June 1986]: Lodging charges for nursing and midwifery staff, including nursing auxiliaries, were last raised on 1 April 1985. The prices of most meals are set locally, but nursing staff are also entitled to standard meals at charges agreed nationally for ancillary staff by the ancillary staffs councils. These standard meal charges were last increased on 4 October 1985.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Animal Waste

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action has been taken on the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of animal waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: In his statement of 3 April 1985 my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Fletcher) the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for corporate and consumer affairs, set out the commission's findings and recommendations and said that the Government were arranging for discussions to be opened with Prosper De Mulder Limited about giving effect to the commission's recommendations.

Following discussions with the Office of Fair Trading, Prosper De Mulder has given undertakings not to offer for or enter into gut-room contracts without having first established a reasonable expectation that the operation of any particular gut-room, taken on its own, would be carried on at a profit or to engage in cross-subsidisation between the gut-room business and other parts of the company's business or between any individual gut-room operations. The company has undertaken to provide the Director General of Fair Trading with financial information to enable him to monitor these undertakings. In addition, the company has given assurances that it will not pursue a policy of conditional buying and that it will notify the Director General of Fair Trading in advance of any proposal to acquire any other rendering business.

The commission also expressed an interest in a suggestion made to it that a system of voluntary arbitration might be set up under which a member of the Institute of Environmental Health Officers and a member of the United Kingdom Renderers Associations would visit plants with odour problems and suggest remedies. My hon. Friend asked the Secretary of State for the Environment to consider the commission's suggestion, and I am pleased to say that, in response to this request, the commission's suggestion will be taken into account in a consultation paper discussing possible changes in the clean air legislation that the Government hope to publish in due course.

I welcome the undertakings given by Prosper De Mulder and the action being taken by the Department of the Environment. I consider them sufficient to remedy and prevent the adverse effects specified in the commission's report.

I have arranged for copies of the full text of the undertakings to be placed in the library of the House.

British Shipbuilders

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people were employed by British Shipbuilders in (a) the northern region and (b) Sunderland for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information, which reflects disposals and closures as well as reductions in employment, is as follows:

	(a) Northern Region	(b) Sunderland
June 1979	28,400	9,400
June 1980	25,600	8,500
March 1981	23,800	7,000
March 1982	22,800	7,000
March 1983	19,100	5,800
March 1984	14,800	4,600
March 1985	11,100	3,750
March 1986	5,400	3,500

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the terms of reference, membership and current budget of the city action team referred to in his statement of 14 May, Official Report, column 1705, on British Shipbuilders.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The main task of the city action team is to target and co-ordinate the range of Government programmes, to bring them to bear most effectively, and to further new initiatives, working with private sector interests and local authorities. This city action team, originally set up for Newcastle—Gateshead, comprises the regional directors of the Manpower Services Commission (chairman), the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment. It has no normal budget as such, since it draws on the resources available to the three Departments. It will however have available, for the region as a whole, the £1 million referred to in the statement on 14 May by my right hon. Friend.

South Africa

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guns have been imported from South Africa in each of the past five years.

Mr. Butcher: The information is not available.

Director General of Fair Trading

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to publish the report by the Director General of Fair Trading for the year 1985.

Mr. Channon: The 12th annual report by the Director General of Fair Trading, covering the period 1 January 1985 to 31 December 1985, is published today. Copies of the report have been laid before Parliament.

Regional Aid

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the number of firms in the northern region which have received regional development grant payments since 1979 and have subsequently closed down or announced redundancies; and if he will give an estimate of the number of jobs involved.

Mr. Peter Morrison: [pursuant to his reply 3 June 1986, c. 409]: As the hon. Gentleman will appreciate, the precise information requested is not available. To provide estimates could only be misleading.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Ex-gratia Payments

Mr. Portillo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to seek to amend the legislation for taxing ex-gratia lump sums paid to individuals on the termination of their employment.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Inland Revenue has been advised that the effect of the legislation governing the tax treatment of such payments where they exceed £50,000 is to give more relief than was originally intended when these rules were amended in 1982, or than the Revenue has hitherto believed the legislation permitted. The Government therefore propose to amend the rules for the future so that they accord with our original intentions. The necessary provision will be introduced at Committee stage of the Finance Bill and a new clause to that effect has been tabled. We propose that the corrected rules should apply to lump sums paid in respect of a termination of employment, or such other event which gives rise to a charge to tax under section 187 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1970, occurring on or after today's date—4 June 1986.

This also means that tax relief given on any lump sums exceeding £50,000 paid since 6 April 1982 will have been calculated incorrectly. As a result, anyone who has paid tax on such a lump sum may now be entitled to a repayment of tax. The Inland Revenue press release issued today, of which copies are available in the Library, explains fully what steps a taxpayer should now take to claim a repayment.

Charities

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the provisions on charities in the Finance Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lawson: In the Budget I announced important new tax reliefs to encourage charitable giving by individuals and businesses. These reliefs have been widely and warmly welcomed, and it is already clear that charities will be seeking to ensure that they are well used.

I also proposed measures to curb the growing misuse in some quarters of charity reliefs for tax avoidance purposes. In the light of consultations on these proposals, it is agreed that the provisions as drafted—in clause 29 and schedule 7 to the Finance Bill—were drawn too widely and would have unintended and undesirable effects on some genuine charities. I have decided, therefore, that they need to be substantially amended, in order to overcome the legitimate concerns.

The consultations have revealed a wide agreement that effective action should be taken to curb the most serious of the abuses in the interests of encouraging charitable giving and the good reputation of the vast majority of responsible charities, especially in the light of the generous extensions of relief this year, as well as to protect the revenue. I have concluded, therefore, that the right course is to concentrate this year on tackling situations where a charity: applies its funds for non-charitable purposes; or passes funds to an overseas body, without taking reasonable steps to satisfy itself that the funds will be applied for charitable purposes; or loans or invests funds in certain limited ways, for example by lending or returning them back to the original donor, or to those connected with him, in circumstances in which the charity cannot show that the loan or investment is made for genuine charitable purposes.

Accordingly, a charity will be subject to a restriction of its tax relief only if its funds are used in any of the above ways and, even then, only if its taxable income and gains exceed its allowable expenditure and certain specific reserves.

I propose to retain in the Bill provisions under which: grants paid by one charity to another are to be regarded as chargeable to tax, but eligible for exemption if applied to charitable purposes; covenant payments made by a subsidiary company to its parent charity are to be paid under deduction of tax. The tax will, however, be repayable to the parent, provided the charity satisfies the conditions for exemption; and in these cases arrangements will be made to ensure that the charity and its subsidiary do not suffer a cash-flow disadvantage; higher rate relief for covenanted donations may be withheld where, under the revised rules, the donee charity's own relief is restricted.

I am proposing generally to exclude from some aspects of the new provisions all charities whose taxable income and gains (including grants from other charities) do not exceed £10,000. Furthermore, for the vast majority of charities there will be little or no change in the extent (if any) to which they are required to supply information to the Inland Revenue.

On this basis, I do not propose to proceed in this year's Finance Bill with two particular features of the original proposals which caused nearly all of the concern: the distinction betwen "private indirect" and other charities; and the possible restriction of tax relief where the charity accumulates income.

I have concluded that action in these areas is not essential in the current Finance Bill, but rather that they are matters which should be considered further, over the coming months, in consultation with the charity movement, with a view to establishing as far as possible a consensus on whether any further legislation is needed here and, if so, what form it should take.

The Government will be bringing forward revised proposals accordingly, when we come to discuss clause 29 and schedule 7 to the Finance Bill in Committee. The Inland Revenue will be issuing a press notice giving the text of the amendments as soon as they are tabled.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Chapman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the total percentage tax liability, including national insurance contributions, of the gross wage of (a) a single person, (b) a married person, (c) a married person with one child, and (d) a married person with two children each earning £40, £60, £80, £100, £120, £140, £160, £180 and £200 per week, as a result of his 1986 Budget proposals and as compared with the 1984 Budget proposals and the 1978 Budget proposals.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

EC (Budget)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will propose at the next meeting of the Council of Finance Ministers that the budget of the European Assembly should be reduced by the sum which the European Court determined recently had been unlawfully granted by that Assembly to certain political parties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 22 May 1986, c. 308]: As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs stated in his answer on 22 May, at column 303, this is a matter for the Bureau of the European Parliament, which is still considering the implications of the judgment of the European Court of Justice.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Prime Minister if she will identify Government funds currently devoted to investigation of means of independent verification of nuclear weapon tests of other states; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The most important verification technology is seismology. Government expenditure on unclassified work in this area is currently £1·6 million. The Government also undertake classified work in related areas, details of which cannot be revealed on grounds of national security.

Republic of Ireland (Territorial Claims)

Mr. A. Cecil Walker asked the Prime Minister if, in the light of the obligations of the United Kingdom Government and the Irish Republic under the Helsinki agreement, Her Majesty's Government will raise with the Irish Government the future of their claim, in article 2 of their constitution, to part of the national territory of the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. The agreement between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland signed on 15 November 1985—in particular the joint affirmation that any change in the status of Northern Ireland would come about only with the consent of the majority of the people of Northern Ireland — is fully consistent with the commitments of the two Governments under the Helsinki accords in regard to the inviolability of frontiers, the territorial integrity of participating states and the right to self-determination of peoples.

Mr. A. Cecil Walker asked the Prime Minister if, in the light of the obligations of the United Kingdom Government and the Irish Republic under the Treaty of Rome, Her Majesty's Government will raise with the Irish Government the future of their claim, in Article 2 of their constitution, to part of the national territory of the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. The agreement between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland signed on 15 November 1985—in particular the joint affirmation that any change in the status of Northern Ireland would come about only with the consent of the majority of the people of Northern Ireland — is fully consistent with the obligations of the two Governments under the Treaty of Rome. Indeed, the preamble to the Anglo-Irish agreement begins by emphasising the wish of the two parties to develop the unique relationship between their peoples and the close co-operation between their countries as friendly neighbours and as partners in the European Community.

Nuclear Free Zones

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister (1) if she will list the local authorities which have notified Her Majesty's Government that they have declared a nuclear-free zone in their area;

(2) what response has been sent to local authorities which have notified Her Majesty's Government that they have declared a nuclear-free zone in their area.

The Prime Minister: Local authorities are not required to notify the Government of any decision to declare a so-called nuclear-free zone in their area, and there is no central list of local authorities which have done so.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fines (Non-payment)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many men and how many women, respectively, have been imprisoned for non-payment of fines during each of the last five years for which records are available;

(2) of those men and women, respectively, who have been imprisoned for non-payment of fines during each of the past five years for which records are available, what has been the minimum, the maximum and the average length of such sentences.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information on the numbers of male and female defaulters received into Prison Department establishments in each of the years 1980 to 1984 and the periods of imprisonment or detention imposed is published in table 7.3 of "Prison Statistics England and Wales 1984" (Cmnd. 9622). Data for 1985 are not yet available. For the longest period in default to be served by a male received in 1984, I would refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Kilroy-Silk) on 17 April 1986, at column 467. The rest of the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, of the men and women respectively who have been imprisoned for non-payment of fines during each of the past five years for which records are available, what has been the maximum, the minimum and the average amount of the unpaid fine in respect of which imprisonment has been imposed.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated average cost of keeping a person in prison in the United Kingdom; and what is the average cost of keeping in prison a person sentenced to one week for non-payment of a fine.

Mr. Mellor: The average weekly cost of keeping a person in prison in England and Wales in the financial year 1984-85—the latest year for which figures are available—was £256.

It is not possible to distinguish the costs of keeping different types of prisoner in prison. It is, however, likely that a person committed to prison for one week in default of payment of a fine would be held in a local prison, for which the average weekly cost per inmate in the financial year 1984-85 was £241.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total cost of keeping in prison persons sentenced to prison for non-payment of fines, during each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. Mellor: The information is not available.

Terminally Ill Prisoners

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) by what means a reminder will be given to prison medical officers of the need to give urgent and sympathetic consideration to cases of prisoners who are terminally ill and who seek early release on that ground;

(2) what was the frequency of review of first refusals of release to terminally ill patients seeking release on the grounds of their illness; and how frequent are the reviews now that such frequency has been increased;

(3) what was the frequency of review where there was a need for further information regarding terminally ill patients seeking release on the grounds of their illness and how frequent the reviews are now that such frequency has increased;

(4) by whom additional guidance will be given to prison medical officers in respect of the treatment of terminally ill patients and when; and whether he will place a copy in the Library;

(5) when he proposes undertaking a sample study of cases of all seriously ill prisoners, in order to check that merit worthy cases are not overlooked; by whom such sample study will be carried out and where; when he expects the results of that sample study to be available; and whether he will place a copy thereof in the Library;

(6) who is to conduct a study of cases to give him a better basis for whether further changes may be needed in the arrangements for deciding whether to grant early release to terminally ill prisoners; when such a study will be carried out; when he expects its findings to be completed; and whether he will then place a copy of the results thereof in the Library.

Mr. Mellor: The director of Prison Medical Services proposes to write to all prison medical officers in charge of medical arrangements at Prison Department establishments in England and Wales. The letter will remind medical officers of the need to give urgent and sympathetic consideration to cases of prisoners thought to be terminally ill, and will give further guidance on the consideration and reporting of these cases. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Officials dealing with such cases in the criminal department have been reminded both orally and in writing by their line managers of the need to take particular and urgent care in the consideration of cases of prisoners whose illnesses may mean that their early release by special remission under the royal prerogative of mercy is justified.

There is and can be no fixed period for review of decisions not to recommend special remission. The period of review must be determined by the circumstances of each case. All officials concerned with these cases have been instructed to ensure that no undue delay in reviewing cases is allowed to occur.

We intend to start a monitoring exercise relating to cases of seriously ill prisoners this month. Prison medical officers are required by the prison standing orders to submit reports on seriously ill prisoners to the governor. For a limited period they will be asked to send copies of such reports to the directorate of Prison Medical Services and to the criminal department which will consider whether the cases thus presented call for consideration of the grant of special remission. We expect to be able to make the results of this exercise known to the hon. and learned Member and the House later this year.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received from hon. Members concerning the failure to release prisoners alleged to be suffering from terminal illnesses, during each of the last seven years for which records are available.

Mr. Mellor: Records of such representations are not kept in a form which enables precise information to be provided without disproportionate cost. However, I can say that apart from the hon. and learned Member's own, I can recall representations on this matter from only one hon. Member in the last three years.

Mr. Karman Zahoor

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will order a full investigation as to what took place on Wednesday 23 April when police and immigration officers went to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Naqvi of 7 Park Lodge, Olive Road, London NW2, looking for Mr. Karman Zahoor, a visitor to the United Kingdom, Home Office reference number Z 68597.

Mr. Waddington: Inquiries are being made and I shall write to the right hon. Member as soon as they are completed.

Football Hooliganism

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the recent trends in the incidents of football hooliganism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The Association of Chief Police Officers for England and Wales has now collected figures which show that the numbers of arrests at Football League Division 1 games fell from 3,752 in the 1984-85 season to 2,005 in 1985-86, and at Division 2 games from 1,765 in 1984-85 to 1,086 in 1985-86. This represents a general reduction of 44 per cent., and is a clear and welcome indication of the progress which has been made in combating football hooliganism.

The package of measures agreed between the Government and the football authorities, the unremitting efforts of the police and the co-operation of clubs have helped to bring about this improvement. The new controls on alcohol and the use of closed circuit television have made an important contribution. The Government remain determined to achieve further progress next season, in partnership with the football authorities, through agreed measures, including, for example, the wider adoption of membership card schemes and the use of exclusion orders.

ENVIRONMENT

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many nuclear reactors are situated within 250 miles of the United Kingdom; in which countries; and what intergovernmental machinery exists for consultation on their environmental impact and for notification of accidents.

Mrs. Rumbold: According to "Nuclear Power in Western Europe; Status Report for 1986" published by FORATOM, there are 12 foreign nuclear power stations within 250 miles of the coast of the United Kingdom (excluding research reactors). Seven are in France, two in Belgium, two in the Netherlands and one in West Germany. An Anglo-French "Nuclear Emergency Information Exchange Agreement" was made on 18 July 1983 (Cmnd. 9041).

Water Prices

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the average increase in water prices for the domestic user in real terms for each of the last six years, in each of the English water authorities.

Mr. John Patten: Increases in average household bills for unmeasured consumers, deflated by RPI, for the past six years are as follows:

Water Authority	1980-81 per cent.	1981-82 per cent.	1982-83 per cent.	1983-84 per cent.	1984-85 per cent.	1985-86 per cent.
North West	6·2	4·9	2·1	0·8	2·9	8·3
Northumbrian	6·3	5·3	7·8	8·5	11·0	1·8
Severn Trent	4·0	4·1	2·5	−1·1	0·0	6·9
Yorkshire	7·1	4·7	6·4	0·7	0·5	7·9
Anglian	10·9	7·0	2·7	1·5	1·9	7·4
Thames	6·5	2·3	4·0	5·0	4·7	4·8
Southern	11·1	6·3	3·5	0·7	0·0	6·1
Wessex	−1·7	0·0	0·4	−0·7	−0·1	6·1
South West	5·1	1·2	0·7	3·5	1·2	6·6
English Averages:	6·5	3·9	3·5	2·7	1·8	6·3

Firm figures for 1986-87 cannot yet be given, as inflation for the year is not yet known. if the increase in RPI is 3½ per cent., in line with FSBR forecasts for 1986 Q4 and 1987 Q2, the average real increase will be about 4·3 per cent.

Tower Blocks (Rochester and Strood)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his consent has been sought by the district of Rochester upon Medway for the sale or demolition of 360 units of accommodation in tower blocks at Rochester and Strood.

Sir George Young: While there have been some discussions with my Department, it was Rochester upon Medway district council which took the decision to demolish these properties. My right hon. Friend's consent was not required.

Domestic Rates

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the overall average unrebated domestic bill paid by householders in England in each year since 1966-67 on a constant price basis.

Mrs. Rumbold: The estimated figures are as follows:

*Average (unrebated) domestic rate bills in England at 1986-87 prices

1966-67	260
1967-68	256
1968-69	250
1969-70	249
1970-71	249
1971-72	262
1972-73	277
1973-74	278
1974-75†	278
1975-76	281
1976-77	257
1977-78	254
1978-79	259
1979-80	280
1980-81	294
1981-82	322
1982-83	340
1983-84	351
1984-85	356
1985-86	362
1986-87	400

* Estimated average rate bills have been inflated to 1986-87 prices by using the retail prices index for April of each year.

† Figures up to 1973-74 are not comparable with those for 1974-75 and later years. This is due to the change in local authorities' responsibilities in 1974, in particular the transfer of water and sewerage services from local authorities to water authorities.

Leicester (Empty Houses)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to (a) how many and (b) what percentage of houses in (i) the public and (ii) the private sectors in the city of Leicester are now empty.

Sir George Young: The latest information available is from the city council's housing investment programme return for 1985, a copy of which is available in the Library. This return showed that 1,096, or 2·8 per cent. of the dwellings owned by the council and housing associations were vacant at 1 April 1985 and 3,851, or 5·6 per cent., of the privately owned dwellings. The council was unable to supply an estimate of how many of the 325 public sector dwellings other than those owned by the council and housing associations were vacant.

Land Use

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the land area of England and Wales covered by (a) national parks, (b) green belt areas, (c) areas of outstanding natural beauty and high landscape value, (d) heritage coasts, (e) conservation areas and (f) sites of special scientific interest.

Mrs. Rumbold: Estimates of land area are as follows:

	Million hectares
National parks	1·36
Green belts	1·8
Areas of outstanding natural beauty	1·71
Sites of special scientific interest	0·82

Heritage coasts are measured by length rather than area. The latest estimate is that 1,260 kilometres of the coast of England and Wales are covered.

No figures are available of the amount of land area covered by conservation areas, of which however there are some 5,500. There is some overlap between the categories — for example, there are extensive SSSIs in national parks and AsONB.

Departmental Telephone and Telex Charges

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was spent by his Department on telephone calls and telex charges; and what was the total cost of telephone rental for each year since 1979.

Mr. Ridley: The costs to my Department of British Telecom telephone calls, telex charges and telephone rental since 1979-80 were:

£ Thousands (cash)

	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	*1985-86

Landowners (Footpaths and Bridleways)

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to pay a subsidy to landowners for footpaths and bridleways which cross their land.

Mrs. Rumbold: This is one of a number of propositions on which views are currently being canvassed by the Countryside Commission in its "Recreation 2000" discussion paper, and I would wish to await any recommendation the commission might make following its consultations.

Joint Manpower Watch

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding the joint manpower watch arrangements.

Mrs. Rumbold: The joint manpower watch has been in operation, in England and Wales, since 1975. The figures are published each quarter and are discussed within the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance. We are now incorporating the new authorities—bodies in the survey following the Local Government Act 1985. Although the arrangements are under constant review by the joint manpower watch working group, which has both central and local government representation, there are currently no plans to make major changes. In the main, the arrangements have worked well.

World Conservation

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he is making to the world conservation strategy document.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government welcomed and endorsed the principles of the world conservation strategy when it was published in 1980. My hon. Friend the Minister for Environment, Countryside and Local Government is attending a conference in Ottawa called by the authors of the strategy to assess it six years after its publication.

The Government have published a report — "Conservation and Development; The British Approach" — setting out the ways in which the United Kingdom has approached the issues raised by the strategy. Copies have been made available in the Vote office.

Radiochemical Inspectorate (Annual Report)

Mr. Couchman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the annual report by Her Majesty's radiochemical inspectorate for 1984-85 will be published.

Mr. Waldegrave: The report has now been published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

Housing (Land Release)

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards proposals in development plans for phasing the release of land for housing and other development; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Paragraph 8 of my Department's circular on land for housing (15/84) refers to phasing the release of housing land. It recognises that the provision of infrastructure and other services may affect the programming of development, but advises that phasing should not be used as an arbitrary rationing process governing the release of land available for development. The purpose is to discourage the practice of specifying in development plans the precise number of acres or houses to be developed each year. Such precision is inappropriate in plans covering several years ahead. Room for flexibility is necessary to enable developers to respond to short-term changes in housing demand. Highly detailed phasing can impose unnecessary costs and constraints on orderly site development.

Where the plan extends over a long period and there are strong pressures for development which it is desirable to resist, it is reasonable for the planning authority to indicate in its plan, in reasonably broad terms, how it intends development to be programmed over the period of the plan. In the absence of such broad phasing, it would be impossible to prevent planning provision from being exhausted in the early years of the plan. The key requirement is that such proposals for phasing should be explained and justified.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are made by the LDDC over opening its files to the public in respect of planning applications.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 3 June 1986]: The London Docklands Development Corporation makes open to the public its planning committee meetings, officers' reports on applications, its planning register, and it publishes a weekly list of applications received. Like other local planning authorities, it has no arrangements for public inspection of its planning files.

Parking Fines

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount paid by his Department in 1985 in respect of parking fines incurred by Government Departments.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 3 June 1986]: The total amount paid in parking fines by the Department in 1985 was £4,334·50.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department became responsible for paying parking fines on behalf of Government Departments.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 3 June 1986]: The Department became responsible for paying parking fines on behalf of GCS vehicles used by Government Departments in 1973.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide an analysis of the parking fines incurred by each of the Government Departments as listed in his answer of 15 May, at column 554, excluding the Scottish Office and the Department of Energy; and how many of the fines were in respect of ministerial vehicles in each case.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 3 June 1986]: All but six of the 106 parking fines incurred by Government Departments listed in the answer of 15 May were in respect of ministerial vehicles. These were incurred at the following locations.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what departmental business took a ministerial car to Greek Street, W1 in 1985 which led to a parking ticket being issued.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 3 June 1986]: I regret that in my reply of 23 May, at column 369, this offence was wrongly attributed to the Scottish Office. The fine was in respect of a Government car service pool vehicle ordered by the Management and Personnel Office to collect an official from No. 10 attending an official lunch-time engagement in the area.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa (Sharpeville Six)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of South Africa concerning the prisoners known as the Sharpeville Six; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The South African Government are well aware of our views: the British ambassador at Cape Town has made representations about the Sharpeville Six to the South African Deputy Foreign Minister. The six were recently granted leave to appeal against their convictions. In the circumstances, I do not believe that it would be appropriate for us to make further representations at this stage.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Council of Ministers

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Eggar: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. Heads of State and Government will meet at The Hague on 26, 27 and 28 June. At present 13 meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for June.

The Energy Council met on 3 June. The Council was to consider the new Community energy objectives. Further consideration was also expected to be given to the coal dossiers—coal state aids and coal social measures—and to Commission papers on new and renewable sources of energy, the oil market and refinery industry, rational use of energy in industry, and on peat and lignite. It was proposed that nuclear issues would be discussed over lunch.

The Labour and Social Affairs Council will meet on 5 June to consider directives on occupational social security equal treatment for self-employed women and the proscription of certain specified carcinogens, a recommendation on the employment of the disabled and an action programme for women. Ministers are also expected to debate long-term unemployment and give preliminary consideration to a discussion paper put forward jointly by the UK, Italy and Ireland on "Employment Growth into the 1990s: a strategy for the Labour Market."

The Industry Council will meet on 9 June and is expected to consider a Commission proposal for a directive concerning the first phase of the establishment of the mutual recognition of type approval for telecommunication terminal equipment. The Council is likely to discuss a proposal for a Council directive on the adoption of common standards for direct broadcasting by satellite. The Council may discuss the inter-institutional integrated services information system (INSIS). The Council is likely to consider a proposal on an action plan for standardisation in the field of information technology and telecommunications. It is expected that the Commission will, after discussions with member states, be in a position on 9 June to outline to Industry Ministers its proposals for the arrangements to follow the fifth directive on aid to shipbuilding. The Commission will submit an analysis of the factors which have affected the competitive performance of European industry and invite the Council to discuss the implications for industrial policy in the Community. The Council may also consider the progress of the Commission's proposed directive on the legal protection of original topographies of semiconductor products.

The Education Council is due to meet on 9 June. It will discuss the proposal for a European Community action scheme for the mobility of university students (ERASMUS) and a presidency paper on the medium-term activities in the field of education. It is expected that a resolution on consumer education will be adopted.

The Research Council will meet on 10 June. The Council is expected to discuss various aspects of the EC research and development framework programme for 1987-91.

The Environment Council will meet on 12 June. The Council will consider a draft directive on large combustion plants which aims to reduce emissions of sulphur dioxide, oxides of nitrogen and dust. It is expected that further consideration will be given to the Seveso directive on industrial handling of dangerous chemicals. The Council will look at proposals to amend the waste oils directive. In addition, it is expected that the Council will consider draft directives on sulphur content of gas oil, vehicle emissions, titanium dioxide and animal experimentation.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 16 June. The Council is expected to discuss: monetary and financial relations between the European Community and Japan; the work of the high level group on tax approximation; and the liberalisation of capital movements within the Community. The Council may also continue its consideration of the Community's current budgetary situation; and may discuss the economic situation in preparation for the European Council later in the month.

The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 16-17 June. It is likely to discuss the new GATT round and in particular its overall approach towards a new round of multilateral trade negotiations with a view to reaching agreement on a broad strategy. The Council again may discuss the overall climate in EC-US relations. The Council is likely to consider two Commission proposals for community programmes under the ERDF main regulation. The first proposal (STAR) is to provide ERDF aid towards improving access to advanced telecommunications services and the other (VALOREN) towards the exploitation of indigenous energy potential, both in least-favoured regions of the Community, including Northern Ireland. The Council is also expected to consider a revised mandate for negotiations with Mediterranean third countries on the adaptation of their Co-operation-Association agreements to take account of enlargement; to fix a date for the EC-Turkey Association Council and review progress on the normalisation of relations; and to review relations between the EC and the Gulf Co-operation Council.

The Transport Council is due to meet on 18 and 19 June. The Council will discuss Community policy on shipping and civil aviation. The Council is also expected to give further consideration to transport issues and, in particular, to road haulage liberalisation.

The Internal Market Council will meet on 23 June. The Council is likely to discuss progress on the implementation of the Commission White Paper, including a report by the Commission and the report to be presented by the Dutch presidency to the European Council 26-27 June. The Council is likely to discuss a presidency report on public purchasing and in particular the Commission's proposals for improving the effectiveness of the supplies directive. The Council may discuss the proposed commercial agents directive which seeks to regulate the relationship between commercial agents and their principals. The industrial truck directive, which seeks to harmonise construction and safety standards, will be discussed. The Council is likely to discuss standards for simple pressure vessels. The Council will also discuss directives on frontier controls, noise of motor cycles, tractors (roll-over protection controls) and a right of residence.

The Consumer Council will meet on 24 June. The Council will discuss further the proposal for a directive on consumer credit. Following inconclusive discussions at an earlier Council meeting, the Consumer Council is also likely to discuss further proposals for unit pricing directives.

The Agriculture Council is expected to meet on 24 and 25 June to discuss the Commission's proposed socio-structural package, less-favoured areas in Germany, Spain and Portugal, flavourings, extraction solvents, quick frozen foodstuffs, animal feedingstuffs (Aflatoxin) and food harmonisation. The Fisheries Council is also expected to meet on 25 June to discuss technical conservation measures, fisheries structural policy, inspection and control and relations with third countries. An informal meeting of Ministers will be held on 8, 9 and 10 June to debate the effects on agricultural policy of developments in international markets.

The European Council will meet on 26 and 27 June in The Hague.

SCOTLAND

Less-favoured Area Status

12. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet the Scottish National Farmers Union to discuss the possibility of designation of the whole of Scotland as a less-favoured area within the common agricultural policy.

Mr. John MacKay: No. My right hon. and learned Friend has received no request for such a meeting from the National Farmers Union of Scotland.

Government Agencies (Aberdeen)

13. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about proposed closures and cutbacks of Government agencies and Government-funded institutions in Aberdeen.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations about this matter, including a request to meet a delegation from Grampian regional council, which he is considering.

Scottish Development Agency

14. Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the Scottish Development Agency budget was spent in each Scottish district other than Renfrew district.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is as follows:

Scottish Development Agency expenditure by district and islands council area

Notes:

1. Figures do not add up to 100 per cent. because of rounding.
2. The figures in the above table exclude expenditure on running costs. The unallocated entry is made up of categories of spend which the Agency does not allocate to districts. These are under the following headings:
   Maintenance—Dilapidations, estate land maintenance, security, land marketing signs, fire and engineering insurances.
   Land and Buildings—Plant and equipment, notice boards, owner controlled insurance, gas, water and electricity supplies, feasibility studies and surveys.
   Development Grants — Programme for Rural Initiatives and Development, Development of Rural Area Workshops, Better Business Services, Training and Employment Grants Scheme and Craft Grants.
3. Figure for Renfrew adjusted to take into account final settlements. (see Hansard 6 May 1986, column 13).

Notes:

1. Gross provision represents the gross grant-in-aid provision plus net provision for investment finance from the National Loans Fund and public dividend capital.
2. The excess of expenditure over provision in 1985-86 was financed by additional receipts.

Council House Sales

15. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is satisfied with the progress being made with the sale of council houses in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: Yes. Since 1979, over 78,000 public sector tenants have bought their houses, binding contracts of sale having been concluded in a further 3,300 cases, and there are approximately another 5,800 applications at an earlier point in the pipeline. Local authorities are also increasingly appreciating the need to process sales quickly. The average time to complete transactions continues to fall and is now approximately eight months.

Radiation

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the radiation levels recorded in Scotland as a consequence of the nuclear accident in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Ancram: I would refer the hon. Member to the replies which I gave to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes), on 8 May, at columns 217-19 and on 21 May, at columns 225-28, to the reply to the hon. Member for Gordon, (Mr. Bruce) on 9 May, at column 294 and to the hon. Member himself on 14 May at column 472.

These replies provided a broad range of information on the radiation levels in Scotland resulting from the nuclear accident at Chernobyl. In general levels have been raised above the normal background levels of radioactivity which are always present in the environment. With the exception of rainwater, where advice against continuous consumption of fresh rainwater was issued for the limited period from 5 May to 10 May, radioactivity levels in the environment and in food such as milk, milk products and vegetables have remained below the internationally recommended levels at which action would have been considered, and have now declined considerably. Monitoring will be continued as necessary and the results will be issued to the press.

Hill Farming Research Organisation

17. Mr. David Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce a decision about the future of the Hill Farming Research Organisation.

Mr. Rifkind: I hope to be able to announce a decision as soon as possible.

Local Government Finance

18. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he plans to increase local government expenditure in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend is presently considering the provision to be made for local authority current expenditure in 1987-88 and will be consulting the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

21. Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he plans to make any additional funds available to local authorities to defray the cost of the recent teachers' pay award; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: In respect of 1985-86, I have nothing to add to my answer on 29 April, at column 368. For 1986-87, the Government are awaiting the outcome of the main committee's inquiry into teachers' pay and conditions before deciding whether to provide additional resources for 1986-87.

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will extend the date for submissions from bodies other than local authorities on the Green paper, "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Ancram: I see no need to do so.

Football (World Cup)

19. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent consultations he has had with the Scottish Football Association about Scotland's participation in the World Cup in Mexico.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I have been in constant touch with the Scottish Football Association in the run-up to the World Cup, paying particulr attention to issues relating to the behaviour of Scottish football supporters in Mexico. I am confident that their record of good behaviour will be sustained.

Nuclear Development

20. Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received against nuclear development and reprocessing in the light of the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Rifkind: In addition to the right hon. Member's letter to me of 29 April, my Department has received, up to 22 May, 11 letters from right hon. and hon. Members concerning nuclear development or reprocessing in the light of the Chernobyl accident. A further 30 letters have been received from the general public.

Economic Trends

22. Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when next he expects to meet the new general secretary of the Scottish Trades Union Congress to discuss the Scottish economy.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Mr. Hamilton).

Annan Bypass and Carrutherstown Diversion

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he hopes to let the contract for the Annan bypass on the A75; and when he will announce the line for the Carrutherstown diversion on the A75.

Mr. Rifkind: I expect to let the contract for the Annan bypass in September. Discussions are still proceeding on the route of the Carrutherstown to Hetland diversion, but I hope to be in a position to announce the preferred line by about the same time.

Rating Relief (Disabled Persons)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland obtained rating relief under the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978 in the latest year for which figures are available: what was the total value of the relief; and what was the cost (a) to his Department and (b) to local authorities.

Mr. Rifkind: For 1984-85 total rebates granted by rating authorities under the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978 amounted to £12·328 million, of which £17,000 was not eligible for the 90 per cent. Government grant payable; the grant therefore was £11·080 million. It is estimated that some £11·976 million was in respect of 790 institutions for the disabled and £0·352 million for facilities for disabled persons in some 5,924 households.

Police Establishment

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has plans for the expansion of the authorised police establishment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: It is for police authorities in the first instance to determine what level of police manpower is required for the effective policing of their areas. Already this year I have approved applications involving a net increase of 99 posts in the authorised police establishment. No other applications for increases in authorised establishments are currently before me, though I am aware that manpower reviews are being conducted in some Scottish forces. I am ready to consider further modest increases in police manpower to meet proven needs.

Fine Enforcement Officers

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many fine enforcement officers are now in post in Scotland; in what sheriff court districts they are based; whether the percentage of fines unpaid in those districts as a percentage of total fines imposed has varied since their appointment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Following the completion of a successful experiment, fines officers are presently in post in Scotland based in the sheriff courts at Glasgow (three), Edinburgh (two), Airdrie (one) and Hamilton (one). The fines officers based at Edinburgh, Airdrie and Hamilton were appointed on 1 July 1985, and those based at Glasgow on 3 February 1986.

Given the relatively recent appointment of the seven fines officers, it is still too early to determine whether the percentage of fines unpaid in those districts as a percentage of total fines imposed has changed.

Arrangements are in hand for the appointment of an additional eight fines officers once consultation on their possible deployment has been completed.

Oil Prices

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the effect of falling oil prices on the Scottish economy.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Lower oil prices should generally be of benefit to consumers and to the non oil-related sector of industry in Scotland. For the oil-related sector we expect production from existing fields to be largely unaffected by lower prices. Some cutbacks in exploration and development activity have been announced. These could have adverse implications for parts of the Scottish economy.

Designated Land

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the land area of Scotland covered by (a) national scenic areas, (b) conservation areas and (c) sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Ancram: There are 40 national scenic areas with a total area of 1,001,800 hectares. Conservation areas designated under the Town and Country Amenities Act 1974 are generally small parts of built-up areas of architectural or historic importance; there are 527 areas in this category.. There were, at 31 December 1985, 1,075 sites of special scientific interest in Scotland with a total area of 604,330 hectares.

Longannet Power Station

Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the amount of radioactive material discharged by Longannet power station during the course of its operation and the component and sources of the discharge.

Mr. Ancram: Coal ash produced at Longannet generating station contains naturally occurring radioactive potassium, uranium and thorium and uranium and thorium decay products. Some 8 gigabecquerels of activity are normally discharged annually in ash in flue gases to atmosphere and 680 gigabecquerels to the ash lagoons. The concentrations of radioactive materials in the ash are smaller than those for which authorisation under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 is required.

Under an authorisation given to the Hunterston generating station to dispose of lubricating oil to Longannet for incineration, some 36 cu m of oil containing in aggregate some 9 gigabecquerels tritium, 1·7 gigabecquerels beta and 70 kilobecquerels alpha activity were disposed of in the years 1977 to 1979. No lubricating oil has been disposed of to Longannet since 1979.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of vacancies at each careers office in Scotland and the number of school leavers in each town served.

Mr. Allan Stewart: As at 4 April 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, the number of unfilled employment vacancies at each careers office in Scotland is as set out in the table.

Data on the number of school leavers are not available centrally in the form sought.

Radioactive Cargoes

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of the Chancellor of the Exchequer of 22 May, Official Report, columns 306-7, what levels of radioactivity were discovered on the cargoes arriving from Europe and the Eastern bloc at the Scottish ports listed.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Teachers (Pay)

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will report on progress that he has made in the inquiry into teachers' pay and conditions of service.

Mr. Allan Stewart: As I told the House on 6 March, the committee of inquiry has been asked to report by the end of the summer. The Government have submitted evidence to the committee. A copy of the Government's evidence has been placed in the Library.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Official Secrets Act

28. Mr. Wallace asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland on how many occasions since May 1979 the Lord Advocate has formally considered the bringing of prosecutions under the Official Secrets Act.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Three such cases were reported for the Lord Advocate's consideration.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Student Awards

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish figures for 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 showing expenditure in Northern Ireland on (a) student awards, distinguishing between awards for fees and awards for maintenance, and on (b) vocational training allowances, job creation allowances and similar outlays, which in the rest of the United Kingdom are administered by the Manpower Services Commission.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

£ million

	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86
(a) Awards
Fees	10·298	11·260	11·933

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of vacancies at each careers office in Northern Ireland and the number of school leavers in each town served.

Dr. Boyson: The numbers of unfilled vacancies for young people (aged under 18) at each Jobmarket in Northern Ireland is as follows:

Unfilled vacancies for young persons at 4 April 1986

Jobmarket	Number
Antrim	11
Armagh	19
Ballymena	16

Information is not available on the number of school leavers in each jobmarket area, but it is estimated that there will be about 20,000 people under age 18 leaving school in Northern Ireland in 1986. Not all of these will be available for employment as some 20 per cent. continue their education in full-time non-advanced courses in further education colleges. In the 12 months to 4 april 1986, 8,554 young persons were placed in employment by careers sections of Jobmarkets in Northern Ireland.

EMPLOYMENT

Restart Scheme

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Paymaster General what discussion the Manpower Services Commission has had with local education authorities and local education authority associations about rates of remuneration for colleges providing courses under the restart scheme.

Mr. Lang: Fee rates for colleges of further education in England and Wales were discussed and agreed with the Association of County Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities. Fee rates for colleges of further education in Scotland were agreed with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General how many job vacancies there were in the Burnley travel-to-work area at the last date for which figures are available; and what were the comparable figures in 1979 and subsequent years.

Mr. Lang: The table shows the numbers of unfilled vacancies at the Burnley and Padiham jobcentres, which cover an area closely corresponding to the Burnley travel-to-work area, for April of each year from 1979 to 1986. Vacancy figures before April 1982 exclude self-employed vacancies.

	Number
April 1979	409
April 1980	268
April1981	114
April 1982	215
April 1983	429
April1984	267
April 1985	249
April1986	250

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what was the level of long-term unemployment in Burnley at the latest date for which figures are available; and what were the comparable figures in 1979 and subsequent years.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. On 10 April 1986 the number of claimants in the Burnley travel-to-work area who had been unemployed for more than 12 months was 2,425. The corresponding figures for April 1984 and April 1985 were 2,360 and 2,411 respectively. This comparison is affected by the change in the timing of compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986. Larger discontinuities occurred in the local area statistics in 1982 and 1983, with the change in the basis of the count, the 1983 Budget provisions, the introduction of ward-based statistics and the revision to boundaries of travel-to-work areas. Therefore the figures for earlier years are not directly comparable.

Health and Safety

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General if he proposes to amend section 6 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act to ensure that (a) an element of reasonable foresight on the part of designers, manufacturers, importers and suppliers is clearly established as a legal requirement, (b) imports and domestic products are treated the same and (c) health and safety information reaches product users.

Mr. Trippier: Yes. Changes to secure these effects are included in the proposals referred to in the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 29 January 1986.

Tourism

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General whether he will seek the agreement of those responsible for the "Programmes Analysis Review on Tourism" in 1974 to make the study papers available.

Mr. Trippier: I understand that the programmes analysis review on tourism was submitted to the then Government in 1974. It has not been made public and in accordance with practice it has not been available to subsequent Governments. I do not intend to depart from this practice in this instance.

Unemployment (Slough)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General how many people in Slough are unemployed under the age of 25, between 25 and 40 and between 41 and 60 years.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library.

Unemployed claimants in the Slough local authority district on 10 April 1986

Age years	Number
Under 25	1,342
25 to 39	1,562
40 to 59	1,549

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General what is the number of people in Slough who have been unemployed for (a) less than six months, (b) six months to one year, (c) one year to two years and (d) more than two years for the latest date available.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library.

Unemployed Claimants in the Slough local authority district on 10 April 1986

	Numbers
Under six months	2,201
Six months to one year	894
One year to two years	633
Over two years	936

YTS Courses

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General if he will list the benefits, payments and education authority grants, where appropriate, to which young people on YTS courses are entitled.

Mr. Trippier: Young people on YTS courses receive training allowances. In general, this precludes their receiving any other payments from public funds. However where, exceptionally, the allowances paid fall short of a trainee's overall financial needs as assessed by the Department of Health and Social Security, the balance may be paid by that Department in the form of supplementary benefit.

YTS trainees do not themselves receive education authority grants for their off-the-job training, because the block grant paid to managing agents by the Manpower Services Commission makes provision for the necessary tuition fees.

Careers Offices (Vacancies)

Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General if he will list the number of vacancies currently on offer at each careers office and the number of school leavers in each town served.

Mr. Lang: The following table shows the numbers of unfilled vacancies at careers offices in England and Wales as at 4 April 1986. Data on the numbers of school leavers are not available centrally for areas smaller than local education authorities. I understand that my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Scotland, is replying in respect of vacancies at Scottish careers offices.

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Soames asked the Paymaster General what action the Government have taken with regard to the ratification of International Labour Convention No. 161 and acceptance of International Labour Recommendation No. 171, concerning occupational health services, adopted by the International Labour conference in June 1985.

Mr. Lang: The texts of the convention and recommendation were included in a White Paper (Cmnd. No. 9727) presented to Parliament on 31 January. Before reaching decisions on the action to be taken on these instruments, the Government have sought the advice of the Health and Safety Commission, and the commission issued a consultative document in February inviting the comments of all interested parties as a basis for considering its advice. The Government's decision on whether to ratify the Convention and accept the Recommendation will be taken when this advice has been received, and an announcement will be made to Parliament in due course.

ENERGY

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish (a) the total capital investment costs, in present-day prices, of the nuclear facilities at British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. Springfields, Capenhurst, and Sellafield, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority facilities at Atomic Energy Research Establishment Harwell, and the nuclear power development plant at Dounreay and (b) the percentage investment and upkeep cost of each of these establishments paid for by the Central Electricity Generating Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is as follows:

British Nuclear Fuels plc (BNFL)

Capital expenditure to 31 March 1986 on the facilities operated at Springfields is £260 million; at Capenhurst £610 million; and at Sellafield £1,980 million. These figures are in March 1986 prices. They exclude the Calder Hall reactors, but include expenditure prior to 1971, when BNFL was formed, on facilities which were inherited from the AEA and are still in use. Each of BNFL's sites renders services to a range of costomers and the cost allocations differ from year to year and site to site. However, in the financial year 1984-85 some 54 per cent. of total sales reflected services to the two generating boards.

The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (AEA)

Information on the AEA's facilities at Harwell and Dounreay is not readily available in this form. I am asking its chairman to write to the hon. Member.

NCB (Enterprise) Ltd.

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many jobs have been created in the northern region by NCB (Enterprise) Ltd. in each year since it was established; and how many are expected to be created in the current year.

Mr. David Hunt: By 26 April 1986 NCB (Enterprise) Ltd. had, since its foundation in October 1984, contributed to the creation of 920 job opportunities in the north-east. During 1986-87 the company intends to double its activities nationally and is aiming to support projects to create 10,000 new job opportunities.

Manoil Process

Sir Fergus Montogmery asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he is planning to investigate the viability of the Manoil process for producing oil from refuse.

Mr. David Hunt: The Manoil process for the liquefaction of rubbish to oil was looked at by the energy technology support unit (ETSU) at Harwell in 1985. The indications at that time were that although there appeared to be great potential in the process, a number of technical and economic factors still needed to be overcome. In particular, the process appeared to provide less energy, at considerably higher cost, than direct combustion of refuse.

In April this year my Department again considered the Manoil process and I personally discussed its prospects with our technical advisers at ETSU. As a result of this, I have decided that it would be useful to have an independent evaluation of the process carried out by a firm of consulting engineers. This assessment will be put in hand shortly and will provide an up-to-date appraisal of the technical and economic prospects and of the major problems that remain to be overcome.

Coal, Gas and Electricity Prices

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the changes in real terms for each of the previous six years in domestic coal, gas and electricity prices.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith The information requested is set out in the table.

	Coal per cent.	Gas per cent.	Electricity per cent.
1979 to 1980	+8·9	−0·6	+8·5
1980 to 1981	+5·9	+13·6	+8·3
1981 to 1982	−0·7	+15·2	+1·5
1982 to 1983	+2·1	+7·6	−0·3
1983 to 1984	+2·4	−1·6	−3·8
1984 to 1985	+0·4	−1·9	−2·8

North Sea Oil

Mr. William Shelton asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all those countries to which oil exporting companies have refused to export United Kingdom North sea oil, as a consequence of the Government's declared policy which limits the export of North sea oil to members of the European Economic Community, the international Energy Agency and according to established patterns of trade.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The information requested, which concerns the commercial activity of individual companies exporting North Sea oil, is not held by Her Majesty's Government. On the scope of the guidance given by Her Majesty's Government to these companies, however, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 22 April of this year, at column 117.

Mr. William Shelton asked the Secretary of State for Energy, in view of the Government's declared policy of restricting exports of United Kingdom North sea oil to members of the European Economic Community, the International Energy Agency and according to established patterns of trade, what information he has about North sea oil being exported in the last few years to a number of countries outside those permitted areas; and what penalties have been applied to the exporting companies.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I am aware of two instances since 1979 in which cargoes of North sea crude oil were by oversight exported to destinations outside the scope of the guidance given by Her Majesty s Government in that year to companies exporting such oil. I am satisfied that there was no intention on the part of the companies concerned to disregard the guidance, and they have taken steps to prevent any repetition.

National Coal Board (Recruitment)

Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of new recruits required by the National Coal Board between the ages of 16 and 19 years during the past two years have been rejected on medical grounds, both nationally and in the Nottinghamshire area.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall ask the chairman of British Coal to write to the hon. Member.

Magnox Reprocessing Plant, Sellafield

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether agreement has been reached on the introduction of an inspection regime by Euratom of the Magnox reprocessing plant at Sellafield; and if he will make a statement about the reprocessing of civil and non-civil spent fuel in the plant.

Mr. Peter Walker: Euratom safeguards inspectors have had access to all areas at Sellafield except the mixed civil/non-civil areas, because of the presence of non-civil material which has been co-processed with civil material.

Consultations on an inspection regime to cover the mixed areas have now been completed. Following meetings between Euratom, United Kingdom officials and BNFL, agreement has now been reached with Euratom to commence inspection on a routine basis of the civil material in the mixed Magnox reprocessing plant and associated process areas of the Sellafield site. The Government welcome the agreement enabling the inspectorate to verify all the civil material at Sellafield.

The co-processing of civil and non-civil material will phase out during 1986 and thereafter separate civil and non-civil reprocessing operations will be carried out sequentially, rather than simultaneously. During the transitional period Euratom will be enabled to verify the flows and inventories of the civil material.

Basic technical characteristics of plants involved have been provided to Euratom and its inspectors have visited the plant to verify that the data are correct. Euratom inspectors were also present at the plant at the end of March 1986 when the latest verification of stocks of civil nuclear material took place.

The safeguards procedures to be followed will meet the requirements of the treaty establishing the European Atomic Energy Community. They include:

(a) the keeping of records of the flow and stocks of civil nuclear material;

(b) the provision of monthly accountancy reports to Euratom;

(c) Inspector access to the records and to the civil nuclear material to verify the opening and closing physical holdings and all inventory changes to verify that there has been no net gain to the non-civil cycle in either quantity or quality. These verifications procedures will include the application of non-destructive measurement techniques and the taking of samples for analysis including the determination of the isotopic composition of the nuclear material.

Euratom inspectors will have access to all civil material at Sellafield on a continuing basis.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Walthamstow, East, Mr Deakins, Official Report, column 292, of 5 December 1985, he will (a) make an estimate of the cost of implementation of the full separation of civil and military facilities and activities at Sellafield and (b) state what proportions of the annual United Kingdom payment to the International Atomic Energy Agency such a safeguards system would require.

Mr. Goodlad: [pursuant to his reply, 3 June 1986]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend has given today to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and the Border (Mr. Maclean) in which he announced the agreement with Euratom of an inspection regime to cover the mixed civil-military areas at Sellafield. The co-processing of civil and defence material will phase out during 1986, and thereafter separate civil and defence operations will be carried out sequentially rather than simultaneously. The costs of the new inspection regime will be met by Euratom, which is funded from the European Community's resources.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Simon Fletcher

Mr. Ashdown asked the Attorney-General if he will publish the information which led him to apply for an order under section 42 of the Supreme Court Act 1981 in respect of Mr. Simon Fletcher.

The Attorney-General: No. All the evidence upon which I relied was served upon Mr. Simon Fletcher before the commencement of the section 42 proceedings. The documents may be inspected with leave of the court in accordance with order 63, rule 4 of the Rules of the Supreme Court.

Illegitimacy

Mr. Best asked the Attorney-General if he has given consideration to the cost implications of the recommendations made by the Law Commission in its 1982 report "Family Law: Illegitimacy" Law Commission (No. 118) to reform the law relating to illegitimacy; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Government have considered the cost implications of the recommendations made by the Law Commission in its report on illegitimacy. If and when the Family Law Reform Bill appended to that report is enacted, the cost implications will have to be considered again when determining the dates on which the provisions of the Bill should be brought into effect.

Mr. Best asked the Attorney-General what plans he has to implement the recommendations of the Law Commission (No. 118) report "Family Law: Illegitimacy."

The Attorney-General: The recommendations of the Law Commission in its report No. 118 on illegitimacy have been accepted by the Government and legislation will be introduced at the earliest possible opportunity.

Commons Registration Act 1965

Sir Peter Mills asked the Attorney-General what, over the last two years, has been the average interval between the close of a hearing by a Commons Commissioner under section 6 of the Commons Registration Act 1965 and the publication of his decision; what decisions currently outstanding have been outstanding for a longer period; and if he will in each such case give the date on which the hearing was concluded.

Mrs Rumbold: I have been asked to reply.

Over the past two years the average interval between the close of a hearing by a Commons Commissioner and the publication of the decision has been four months. This figure has been to some extent distorted by a series of very complex Dartmoor decisions, which involved hearings lasting for over 90 days, and over 8,000 applicants.

Currently outstanding for a longer period are 12 South Yorkshire cases which were heard on 2 December 1985 and one Devon case, West Anstey, which went to the Court of Appeal and was reheard on 8 October 1985.

Sir Peter Mills asked the Attorney-General how many disputed claims under the Commons Registration Act 1965 remain to be heard by a Commons Commissioner in accordance with section 6 of that Act; how long these hearings have been outstanding and when he expects all such hearings to be completed.

Mrs Rumbold: I have been asked to reply.

Seventeen local authorities have outstanding cases, but they are not all able to estimate the exact number. It is thus not possible to provide figures for the total number of disputed claims, nor how long it will take to resolve these.

TRANSPORT

M25 (Traffic Figures)

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are the latest traffic figures for the stretch of the M25 from Hunton bridge to the M40; and how they compare with the original forecast.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is as follows:

M25 Traffic Flows (Thousands)

Section	Junction Numbers	April 1986 Average 16-hour Weekday flow	Forecasts for 1987 Original	Forecasts for 1987 Updated (1984)
M40-A412	16-17	76	55-60	61-64
A412-A404	17-18	78	55-65	61-69
A404-A405	18-19	76	65-75	72-80
A405-A41	19-20	Opening late 1986	45-55	50-58

London Transport Works, Aldenham

Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with the chairman of London Regional Transport the future prospects of the London Transport Works at Aldenham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The future prospects of the Aldenham works are a management matter for LRT and its subsidiary BEL, and not something with which we would expect to interfere.

Air Services Agreements

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that the air service agreements between the United Kingdom and other European Economic Community member countries are compatible with the Treaty of Rome in the light of the recent judgment of the European Court in the Nouvelles Frontieres case.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We notified other member states in June 1984 that we would no longer require airlines to consult their competitors before submitting tariff proposals to us, even where the relevant air services agreement imposed such a requirement. To that extent we have anticipated the judgement. We are continuing our efforts to secure more liberal bilateral arrangements and, during our presidency of the EC council, will be giving high priority to securing an agreement to liberalise air transport in the Community.

Road Programme (London)

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the new road programmes in the Greater London area (a) under construction, (b) approved but awaiting the start of construction and (c) planned, but not yet approved.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's trunk road schemes over £1 million are as follows:

(a) under construction

(b) approved (ie statutory processes complete) but awaiting the start of construction

(c) proposed, but not yet approved (ie subject to completion of statutory processes)

Number	Trunk road
A20	Sidcup Bypass
A2	Rochester Way Relief Road
A406	South Woodford-Barking Relief Road
A406	Great Cambridge Road (A10) junction
A13	Hackney Wick-M11 link, Thames Avenue-Launders Lane
A13/A117	Junction improvement
A40	Ealing, Gipsy Corner junction
A40	Ealing, Western Circus junction
A40	Hillingdon, Swakeleys Road junction
A40	Hillingdon, Long Lane junction
A406	Chingford Road-Hale End Road
A406	Falloden Way-Finchley High Road
A406	Hanger Lane-Harrow Road
A406	Popes Lane-Western Avenue
A406	Bounds Green-Green Lane
A406	Dysons Road-Hall Lane
A406	East London River Crossing
A406	Golders Green Road junction
A406	Regents Park Road junction
A406	East of Silver Street-A1010

Schemes of London's other roads are the responsibility of the boroughs concerned.

British Airports Authority

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what restrictions are proposed on the ownership of shares in the privatised British Airports Authority.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A provision will be included in the articles of association of the privatised BAA restricting the shareholding of any individual, or of parties acting in concert, to 15 per cent. of the total issued share capital. The Secretary of State will retain a special share which will give him the right to veto any proposed change to this article.

Buses (Redundancy Compensation)

Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he proposes in respect of the liabilities for redundancy compensation which may fall on the passenger transport executives and district councils for their bus operations during 1986-87.

Mr. Moore: I am aware of the particular problems which the PTEs and those shire districts with municipal bus companies face in ensuring that their bus operations are in a position to be formed into companies by October 26 according to the statutory timetable under the Transport Act 1985. Where redundancies are involved, calculations of costs will have been made on the assumption that redundancy rebate would be payable until 31 October 1986: in the case of the PTEs calculations on this assumption were also made before determining in February this year the maximum precept which might be levied by the passenger transport authorities. However, the Government have announced that abolition of this rebate will take effect from 1 August. Accordingly, my Department has today written to all PTEs and to those shire districts with municipal bus companies, undertaking to reimburse them for additional costs resulting specifically from the effects which bringing forward the abolition of the redundancy rebate will have on the special circumstances of their bus operations. I understand that my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales will be giving similar undertakings to authorities in their areas.

WALES

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many young people are presently engaged in YTS courses in Wales; and if he will estimate the total for each year group in the two-year course beginning in 1986-87.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There were 16,395 YTS trainees in Wales at 31 March 1986. It is estimated that 18,407 16-year-olds will enter YTS2 in 1986-87; it is also estimated that 7,857 17-year-olds who complete 1 year YTS places during 1986-87 will take up continuation places. In addition there are 2,952 17-year-old entrants who will be eligible for one year's training.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many young people engaged in YTS courses in Wales presently qualify as part-time students.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not available. The question of student status primarily relates to the form of off-the-job training provided by managing agents on which information is not held centrally.

GCSE (Bilingual Syllabuses)

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to ensure that bilingual syllabuses for the new GCSE courses will be available for secondary schools in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The provision of bilingual syllabuses is a matter for the examining board. However, in view of the pressures on the Welsh joint education committee at this time, my right hon. Friend has offered, exceptionally, to provide the WJEC with Welsh translations of 24 syllabuses corresponding to the training manuals which have already been translated into Welsh.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Master of Business Administration Examination

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of students in the United Kingdom who have passed the master of business administration examination during the last 10 years; if he will list those business schools which offer full or full and part-time master of business administration courses; what measures the Government are taking to encourage this course; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The facts are set out in the tables below. The Government are keen to ensure that institutions providing post-graduate management education are more responsive to the needs of industry and commerce. The Department of Education and Science is contributing, with the Department of Trade and Industry, towards the cost of a study of management education sponsored by the British Institute of Management and the Confederation of British Industry. The purpose of this study is to obtain the views of companies and individuals on the quality or provision for business and management studies in higher education and on ways in which it might be improved. The project will provide market research on a number of issues, including the scope for increasing the amount of private sector funding for post-graduate and post-experience courses.

1. The London Business School offers a similar Course in Business Studies. Leading to the degree of Master of Science from the University of London.

Students

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what are the criteria for eligibility as a part-time student;

(2) what are the eligibility criteria for education authority payments to students, with particular reference to free meals, free travel and maintenance.

Mr. Dunn: Local education authorities are empowered to pay maintenance allowances in respect of full-time pupils or students over compulsory school age in schools or non-advanced further education. The powers are discretionary and it is for individual authorities to determine the qualifying circumstances and the rate of allowance. The Education Acts make separate specific provision for free school meals and for transport arrangements for pupils in schools irrespective of whether they are in receipt of education maintenance allowances. Allowances are not payable for part-time students.

School Curriculum

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will publish an account of local education authorities' responses to circular 8/83 on the school curriculum as promised in paragraph 40 of the White Paper "Better Schools"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have placed in the Library a copy of an account published today of LEAs' responses to DES Circular 8/83 which asked about their curricular policies. Many of the responses on which the paper is based were made as early as 1984—since when the effects of current Government initiatives have been fully experienced. The paper documents the extent to which, through partnership between central and local government, progress is being made towards the broad agreement about the objectives and content of the school curriculum envisaged in "Better Schools". It is now widely accepted that local education authorities should have a curricular policy in order to carry out their functions, and there is much common ground on the principles on which that policy should be based. As authorities themselves recognise, much still has to be done to give their policies practical effect, but I am encouraged by the substantial progress which has so far been achieved.

SCOTLAND

Residential Homes

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are at present resident in local authority homes; what was the comparable figure in 1979; and what is the present average occupancy of such residences.

Mr. John MacKay: On 31 March 1985, the latest date for which information is available, the number of residents in local authority homes was as follows:

	1979	1985	Occupancy Rate 1985 per cent.
Elderly	8,745	8,985	92
Children	2,659	1,720	73
Mentally handicapped	506	725	92
Mentally ill	117	129	71
Other	—	54	59
TOTAL	12,027	11,613	88

NHS (Land Sales)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the income to the Health Service in Scotland from the sale of land and properties owned by health authorities during each of the past five years.

Mr. John MacKay: Income from the sale of surplus NHS land and property is as follows:

	£ million
1981-82	0·454
1982-83	1·791
1983-84	1·750
1984-85	1·889
1985-86	2·432

Burglaries

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish homes have reported burglaries in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. John MacKay: The available information relates to cases of housebreaking, in both residential and commercial property, recorded by the police, and is as follows:

Cases of housebreaking recorded by the police—Scotland

	Number
1976	79,820
1977	91,150
1978	75,710
1979	76,635

1985	100,698

Benefits (Crimes)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland in each of the past 10 years have been convicted of crimes related to the claiming of supplementary or unemployment benefit.

Mr. John MacKay: I regret that the information is not maintained in the form requested. The information that is available is set out in the table.

Persons against whom charges were proved Social Security and Supplementary Benefits Offences

	Number
1976	583
1977	593

Haemophiliacs

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money the Scottish Office makes available to centres run by health authorities in Scotland at which haemophiliacs are treated and supported in counselling centres.

Mr. John MacKay: No specific funds have been made available for this purpose. It is for individual health boards to decide on the allocation of their resources, according to their priorities and their knowledge of local needs.

Social Services (Expenditure)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the amount spent in Scotland per head on personal social services in the last year for which figures are available; and what are the comparable figures for (a) England and Wales and (b) each of the English and Welsh regions.

Mr. John MacKay: The last financial year for which relevant figures are available for Scotland and Wales is 1984-85 and for England 1983-84. In 1984-85 the gross amount per head of the population spent in Scotland by local authorities in the discharge of the responsibilities arising directly from the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 or referred to therein was £63. The equivalent figure for Wales is £55. 1983-84 figures for Scotland, Wales and England and for areas in England corresponding approximately to those of regional health authorities are as follows:

Approximate Gross Amount Spent per Head on Personal Social Services in 1983-84 (rounded to the nearest £)

England (by regions)	£
Northern	55
Yorkshire	49
Trent	50
East Anglia	37
North West Thames	68
North East Thames	75
South East Thames	68
South West Thames	51
Wessex	37
Oxford	40
South Western	42
West Midlands	45
Mersey	53
North Western	57
Average for England	53
Wales	53
Scotland	59

The figures are not directly comparable because those relating to Scotland include expenditure on probation and other services for offenders which are as integral part of the social work programme for Scotland but not in England and Wales.

Commonwealth Games

Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the exchange of letters between himself and the chairman of the Commonwealth Games Committee regarding the anticipated shortfall in financing the Commonwealth Games in Edinburgh: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: No. The chairman of the Commonwealth Games Organising Committee and I agree that our correspondence is confidential. I am confident that the Edinburgh Games will be a resounding success.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the numbers of British fishing vessels engaged in monofilament net fishing in (a) North sea fishing grounds north of the Scottish border and (b) Scottish waters in each of the last three years: and what is his estimate of the value and volume of the catch landed in Scotland from such vessels.

Mr. John Mackay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Transport Grants

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he proposes for the operation in Scotland of the grants provided for by section 108 of the Transport Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have provided £170,000 for these grants in 1986/87. The grant scheme will be used to assist in the establishment, continuance or improvement of any public passenger transport project for the benefit of persons residing in rural areas of Scotland. The particular conditions of the scheme, which has been established after consultation with local authorities and interested organisations, are set out in the explanatory note which accompanies application forms. I have placed copies in the Library of the House.

ENERGY

Coal Prices

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he is now in a position to make a statement on the agreement on coal prices reached between the Central Electricity Generating Board and the National Coal Board.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government have encouraged British Coal and the CEGB in their efforts to reach a commercial agreement covering the supply of coal, which takes due account of the recent fall in the price of oil. I am pleased to be able to announce that agreement has been reached. The agreement is firm for the first two years, from 1 April 1986, and it is the clear intention of the industries to continue it for a further three years. In the first year it will result in a reduction of some £300 million in the cost of coal to the CEGB and there will be a similar decrease in the second year. The Government have endorsed the agreement during the first two years when it is firm.

Electricity prices will fall as a result of this agreement. The Electricity Council is today recommending to the area boards an immediate reduction. I understand that this will mean a reduction of some 3·5 per cent. on the unit rate, with consumers on Economy 7 benefiting even more. The average reduction for industrial consumers is likely to be 5 per cent. (7 per cent. to 8 per cent. for those on contracted load terms). Monthly-billed industrial and commercial consumers will begin to benefit at once as a result of the fuel price adjustment clause in their tariff. The area boards expect to announce shortly the reduction in their prices to quarterly-billed, including domestic, consumers.

Euratom Budget

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much of the current Euratom budget is allocated to (a) promoting nuclear energy and (b) safety.

Mr. Gooodlad: There is no seperate Euratom budget. Community research into nuclear fission is funded through the overall Community budget. Some 80 per cent. of the current nuclear fission programme of around £275 million is safety-related with sub-programmes on reactor safety, the management and storage of radioactive waste and the safeguarding of fissile materials. The remainder of the programme is devoted to research into nuclear fuels and decommissioning of nuclear installations. Euratom does not devote resources to promoting nuclear energy.

Electricity Industry (Investment Capital)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will give the latest available information held by his Department on the comparative availability of investment capital for Electricité de France in France and the Central Electricity Generating Board's external financing limits;

(2) if he will set out his Department's latest information on the size and composition of Electricité de France's investment debt arising from the French nuclear energy programme's reactor construction schedule.

Mr. Goodlad: The CEGB conducts its capital investment in accordance with a programme for which it is required to obtain my right hon. Friend's approval. My right hon. Friend has agreed that the board may spend £640 million on its capital programme in 1986/87. I cannot comment on the comparative availability of investment capital for Electricité de France or on the size of its debts.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those categories of questions on civil nuclear power and nuclear materials that are matters to be raised directly with the appropriate chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board.

Mr. Goodlad: Questions which relate specifically to matters within the management competence of the Central Electricity Generating Board or the South of Scotland Electricity Board, or where the answer requires detailed information not available in my Department or in the Scottish Office, are normally referred to the chairman of the board concerned.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give details of how he calculated the stated figure of a £1 billion advantage to French industry of its nuclear energy programme.

Mr. Goodlad: A reduction in the proportion of nuclear generation in the French electricity system from the present 65 per cent. to the 20 per cent. in Britain would add approximately 0.5p to the cost of a kilowatt hour of French electricity. This is broadly the difference between French and United Kingdom industrial electricity tariffs as detailed in the CBI report on "European industrial Energy Prices" published in February 1985. When multiplied by electricity consumption in French industrial and commercial concerns, this yields a saving close to £1 billion.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Review Board for Government Contracts

Mr. Soames asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the report on the second annual review by the Review Board for Government Contracts.

Mr. Brooke: The review board in its report on the fouth general review proposed that the triennial reviews of the target profit rate should be supplemented by limited annual reviews so that changes in the rate of return elsewhere in the economy and in other economic circumstances can be reflected more quickly in the profit rate. The review board submitted the second of these interim reviews to the Treasury in January.

The board recommended that the target rate of profit should be 13 per cent. on capital employed in semi-CCA terms, with an assumed average CP/CE ratio of 2·40 to 1. The semi-CCA basis of the profit formula allows for historic cost figures to be adjusted by the inclusion of current cost based depreciation and fixed asset values; and the average cost of production to capital employed (CP/CE) ratio is used in determining the components of the profit formula applicable to risk and non-risk work (that is the rates of return allowed on capital employed and cost).

In its first annual review the board found that, although there were not sufficient data to support the view that Government profit formula work generally required less capital than contractors' other work, there were some significant divergences in individual cases arising almost entirely from a small number of large and exceptional projects, both defence and non-defence. The board recommended that these divergences should be addressed by negotiating more relevant units for the calculation of contractors' individual CP/CE ratios rather than by adjusting the target rate of return in the profit formula. To avoid distortion by the exceptional projects until more relevant units are established and start to affect negotiations on individual CP/CE ratios, the board has again recommended, in its second annual review, that a transitional adjustment should be made to the average CP/CE ratio. Specifically, the board recommended that the observed ratio of 2·32 to 1 should be increased to 2·40 to 1.

Progress has been made with the introduction of more relevant units, but it is not certain that this action alone will eliminate the exceptional problems reported by the board. The Government and industry have therefore asked the board to conduct a further study of capital employed as part of the fifth general review which will take place later this year. Meanwhile, it is essential that the overstatement of capital employed already identified by the board should be reflected in the profit formula. Accordingly, after careful consideration, and following representations from industry, the Government have decided to leave unchanged the formula introduced on 1 May 1985. The target rate of profit will therefore remain at 12 per cent. on capital employed on a semi-CCA basis, and the components of the profit formula applicable to risk and non-risk work will also be unchanged.

Copies of the review board report have been placed in the Library.

Sick Leave

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the cost of sick leave in the public sector; and what would be the public expenditure savings if public sector employees were restricted to statutory sick pay, instead of the present arrangements.

Mr. Brooke: The information sought by the hon. Member is not held centrally and I regret that this information cannot be provided without a disproportionate expenditure of time and resources.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of total public expenditure, at current prices and real prices, using 1979 as 100, for each of the years 1978-79 to 1985-86.

Mr. MacGregor: The public expenditure planning total figures expressed in current prices and in real terms, using 1978-89 as 100, are as follows:

	Current prices	Real terms*
1978-79	100	100
1979-80	118	101
1980-81	141	102
1981-82	158	104
1982-83	172	106
1983-84	183	107
1984-85	197	111
1985-86	204	108

* Cash figures adjusted for general inflation as measured by the GDP deflator at market prices

Eastern Bloc Imports

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the reply, 22 May, Official Report, columns 306-7, what information he has about the nature of the cargoes imported from Europe and the Eastern bloc for each of the ports of entry in Scotland.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

National Insurance Contributions

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the additional cost in 1986-87 of income tax relief for class 4 National Insurance contributions if the upper annual limit were abolished.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many registrations his Department has made under the Data Protection Act; how many people are involved with implementing the legislation in his Department as a significant part of their job description; and how much he estimates it will cost to conform with the eight data protection principles.

Mr. Brooke: The Treasury made three registrations under the Data Protection Act. There are four people involved with implementing the legislation within the Department. The majority of the data protection principles echo good practice and were adhered to by the Treasury prior to the introduction of the Act. The only principle likely to cause extra cost in future is principle 7, referring to subject access. The Treasury does not envisage any significant expenditure on this, as most of the subjects are members of staff who see the information held on them as a matter of course.

Government Departments (Staff)

Mr. Cash asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 April 1986.

Mr. MacGregor: At 1 April 1986 there were 594,365 staff in post — 498,223 non-industrials and 96,142 industrials. The number of Civil Servants has fallen by 137,910, or 18·8 per cent, since 1 April 1979.

TRANSPORT

Plutonium (Liverpool-Dounreay)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the flying of plutonium fuel from Liverpool to Dounreay.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These shipments are made in full compliance with the national and international safety regulations, which require the containers to be so designed as to prevent any harmful effect, due to radioactive contents, even in event of a serious accident.

STATS 19 System

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in view of the current difficulties in extracting separate accident information from the national data base on minibuses, coaches and public service vehicles he will make the necessary arrangements to amend the STATS 19 system accordingly.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The STATS 19 system is currently under review and this is one of the aspects under consideration.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many Spanish fishing vessels have been registered as United Kingdom vessels in each year since 1980; and how many are currently on the United Kingdom registry.

Mr. Moore: The numbers of fishing vessels previously registered in Spain, and subsequently registered in the United Kingdom following their transfer to United Kingdom registered companies in which there is a controlling Spanish interest, in each year since 1980, have been:

	Number
1980	4
1981	20
1982	24
1983	1
1984	—
1985	2

Eleven of these vessels were subsequently removed from the United Kingdom register, but seven were later re-registered. In this period, too, a further 17 United Kingdom registered fishing vessels, not previously registered in Spain, were acquired by United Kingdom registered companies in which the controlling shareholding is Spanish. Eight of these vessels have since been removed from the United Kingdom register. Thus a total of 56 fishing vessels that are owned by United Kingdom registered companies with controlling Spanish shareholdings are currently on the United Kingdom register.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has proposals for legislation to confine British registration to fishing vessels beneficially owned in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moore: My Department is considering this difficult problem, in consultation with representatives of the fishing industry and the Departments that are directly concerned with fisheries matters. I shall consider what legislation might be appropriate in the light of the recommendations that are put to me.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Public Expenditure

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of gross domestic product has been spent on the education budget in each year since 1970.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The following table shows total public spending on education expressed as a percentage of the gross domestic product from 1970-71 to 1983-84.

United Kingdom—Financial Years

Local Authorities (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the level of local authority expenditure on education in each year since 1976 in cash and constant 1985-86 prices.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information requested is shown in the table.

Local authority capital expenditure on education

ENVIRONMENT

Trading Accounts

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place a copy of the Peat Marwick report in April 1985, "Ordnance Survey: Review of the Format and Design of Trading Accounts" in the Library.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 23 April last year my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State announced that an Executive summary of the Peat Marwick Mitchell report had been placed in the Library. The summary was prepared because the full report contained some information that is classified as commercial in confidence. The summary includes all recommendations of the full report.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any recent representations concerning a possible removal of ecclesiastical exemption for listed buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: Discussions continue with church bodies and some other interested organisations. My right hon. Friend will make a statement when it becomes appropriate to do so.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how he monitors the commercial activities of the Ordnance Survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Ordnance Survey management board monitors these activities against a financial target set by the Government. In addition, I also have regular meetings with the director general to discuss overall departmental performance.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase the grant-related expenditure assessments and provide additional rate support grant to boroughs and districts in order to facilitate greater expenditure on litter prevention, street cleaning, refuse collection, disposal and amenity services.

Mr. Ridley: I believe that local authorities are receiving fully adequate support from the Government through the grant-related expenditure and block grant arrangements to allow them to undertake all their services for 1986-87, including litter prevention, street cleaning, refuse collection, disposal and amenity services.

Consultations with the local authority associations on the level of relevant expenditure for all local government services, including environmental services, for 1987-88 are currently in progress.

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the total amount to date which has been withheld from (a) all local authorities, (b) local authorities in the northern region and (c) the borough of Sunderland in the form of penalties which were imposed on councils for spending in excess of required amounts.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to her reply, 3 June 1986]: The following are the amounts of grant holdback incurred by local authorities in England, in the northern region, and by the borough of Sunderland for the years 1981-82 to 1985-86; that is those years for which expenditure guidance and holdback of grant are applicable.

	England £ million	Northern region £ million	Sunderland £ million
1981-82	123·000	17·023	2·206
1982-83	232·000	28·246	3·303
1983-84	281·000	50·204	3·614
1984-85	276·020	26·257	2·938
1985-86	435·359	74·301	9·939

Figures for 1981-82 and 1982-83 are final entitlements; figures for 1983-84 onwards are latest estimates in the relevant supplementary rate support grant reports.
Northern region includes local authorities in the counties of Cleveland, Durham, Northumberland and Tyne and Wear.

National Clean-up Scheme

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what consultations have taken place or are proposed between his Department and the local authority associations and organisations representing the voluntary sector about the national clean-up scheme;

(2) if he will make a statement giving details of the national clean-up scheme;

(3) if he will list those organisations consulted before Mr. Richard Branson was invited to chair the national clean-up scheme; what resources are being made available to the campaign; and from what areas they have been transferred.

Mr. Ridley: I expect to make an announcement about the details of the scheme shortly.

Conservation Orders

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he proposes to take pursuant to recommendation 12 of the first report from the House of Commons Environment Committee, Session 1984-85.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's reply to that report (Cmnd. 9522) indicated that further consideration would be given to the introduction of legislation to enable national park authorities to apply for landscape conservation orders to be made as a power of last resort. We now propose, as an essential step in this process, to publish a consultation paper later this year to seek public views. The paper will include the details of a possible approach to an order-making scheme, and will set out the circumstances in which the Government believe that legislation for this purpose might be justified.

Housing

Mr. Knowles asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be approving any further proposals submitted to his urban housing renewal unit; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I am pleased to announce my right hon. Friend's favourable response to proposals for a further five schemes submitted by the London boroughs of Haringey and Wandsworth, Nottingham city council and Newcastle city council. All these schemes, which have been worked up in close collaboration with the Department's urban housing renewal unit and regional offices, involve improved housing management from local estate-based offices.

The estates which will benefit from today's decisions and resources to be made available in 1986-87, which have been agreed in principle, are:

Borough	Estate	Targetted UHRU HIP allocation £	Description of works
Haringey	Broadwater Farm (1,063 dwellings)	505,000	Security and anti-vandal measures; refurbishment of community facilities; environmental improvements.
Haringey	Tiverton (938 dwellings)	515,000	Security measures; provision of neighbourhood office.
Wandsworth	Doddington (964 dwellings)	1,609,000	Physical restructuring; provision of 183 dwellings for sale; refurbishment and provision of community rooms; environmental and security improvements.
Nottingham	Radford and Clifton flats (525 dwellings)	238,000	Security and anti vandal measures.
Newcastle	McCutcheons Court (200 dwellings)	285,000	Security measures; provision of community facilities and estate office; environmental improvements.

These five schemes bring the total number of schemes so far approved in principle to 23 with UHRU targetted HIP resources of £12·137 million.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

BSC (Industry) Ltd

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many jobs have been created in the northern region by BSC (Industry) Ltd. in each year since it was established; and how many are expected to be created in the current year.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information is not available in the form requested. I shall write to my hon. Friend when I have the information.

Shipbuilding Intervention Fund

Mr. Trotter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to which corporation or companies payments have been made from the shipbuilding intervention fund in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Companies to which payments were made from the shipbuilding intervention fund between:

(i) 1 April 1983—31 March 1984

Competition Policy

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to review competition policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The Government believe that in general existing competition law has operated effectively and served the economy well. However, mergers policy has attracted attention in recent months, particularly in the light of the present high level of merger activity. In addition, the restrictive trade practices legislation has now been in operation for 30 years, and it has been criticised on a number of grounds, such as its inflexibility and its limited effectiveness in controlling seriously anti-competitive agreements between firms. I therefore believe it would now be right to undertake a review of these areas. The review will investigate both the scope for changes in policy under existing legislation and the desirability of changes in the law.

I am anxious that the review should be open to wide public debate and should benefit from all the expert knowledge available, whether inside or outside Government. I therefore intend to invite a number of outside experts to act as consultants on particular issues. In addition, I invite all interested organisations and individuals to contribute their view in writing, in the first instance no later than the end of July.

I shall keep the House informed as conclusions are reached.

BSC and BS (Grants and Loans)

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has of the total amount of aid in grants and loans provided to (a) the British Steel Corporation and (b) British Shipbuilders in respect of their operations in the northern region (i) since 1979 and (ii) since 1983.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 3 June 1986, c. 406]: The following is the information for British Shipbuilders in the northern region and the British Steel Corporation in the north-east. Information from British Steel Corporation in Cumbria is not readily available.

	1979-80 to 1984-85 £ million	1983-84 to 1984-85 £ million
British Shipbuilders
Regional Development Grants	9	2·5
Intervention Fund*	123	20
Public Dividend Capital‡	374	160
British Steel Corporation
Regional Development Grants	25	11
Subscription of Capital‡	455	112

* To May 1986.

‡ Estimated: public dividend capital for British Shipbuilders (provided under section 16 of the Aircraft and Shipbuilding Regulations 1977) and capital subscribed for the British Steel Corporation (under section 18 of the Iron and Steel Acts 1975 and 1982) is general finance, for instance, for capital investment and operating losses in subsidiary companies. It is not, in the main, allocated for specific purposes or areas. The British Shipbuilders public dividend capital estimate does, however, include £58 million towards the construction of the submarine facilities project at Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd. at Barrow.

Other funding for working capital and to meet redundancy and closure costs has been provided by British Shipbuilders and British Steel Corporation in the northern region, but is not recorded on a regional basis.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Child Benefit

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if child benefit will be regarded as income for the purpose of calculating family credit under the terms of the Social Security Bill.

Mr. Newton: The intention is that child benefit will be taken into account in setting the level of the child credit rates, and it will therefore not be counted as income in the calculation of family credit in individual cases.

Oriel Lodge, Sudbury

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the circumstances surrounding the closure of Oriel Lodge Sudbury; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Registered Homes Act 1984 places responsibility for registering and inspecting residential care homes on local social services authorities. I would suggest therefore that my hon. Friend pursues his inquiries about the situation at Oriel Lodge with the Suffolk county council.

Residential Homes

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce a system of minimum and maximum charges for the provision of services by private residential care homes and nursing homes: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: No. Provided that services and facilities appropriate to the care the resident or patient needs are available, the type of accommodation that is occupied and the charges paid are a matter between those running the homes and the person, or his relatives meeting the charges. The charges could be expected to reflect the services and facilities available as determined by market forces.

Students (Benefits)

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will publish his Department's response to the Social Security Advisory Committee's report on the Social Security White Paper's proposals on student entitlement to social security and housing benefit.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 3 June, at column 718.

National Insurance contributions

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the increased revenue from class 1, 2 and 4 national insurance contributions in a full year at the rates ruling in 1986-87 resulting from the abolition of the upper earnings limit for employee contributions and of the annual upper limit for class 4 contributions.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Benefits (Foreign Nationals)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services under what conditions foreign nationals are entitled to supplementary benefit or unemployment benefit.

Mr. Major: Foreign nationals living in Great Britain who have paid the relevant contributions are entitled to unemployment benefit subject to the normal rules. Some foreign nationals are helped to qualify under the European social security regulations and the reciprocal arrangements on social security with certain other countries. Supplementary benefit has no residence, nationality or contribution test and the entitlement of foreign nationals is dependent upon their immigration status.

Benefits (Fraud)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his best estimate of the numbers drawing unemployment or supplementary benefit who are also working without disclosing their work.

Mr. Major: It is a criminal offence for any claimant to draw unemployment benefit or supplementary benefit without declaring that he is working. In 1981, in his report on payments of benefits to unemployed people, Sir Derek Rayner estimated that a minimum of around 8 per cent. of claimants are working while claiming benefit. The Department is making substantial efforts to reduce the level of fraud in this area and the Secretary of State has recently announced the allocation of 500 additional fraud staff to augment the Department's overall anti-fraud effort.

Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide figures indicating the amount of Government grant given to agencies working to combat alcohol abuse for the years 1980-1985 inclusive.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1986, c. 604]: I regret that my reply to my hon. Friend understated the amounts of Government grant made available. The corrected information is as follows:

1980-81	1,245,018
1981-82	927,821
1982-83	899,221
1983-84	908,908
1984-85	795,379
1985-86	*825,876

* Estimated figure.

NHS (General Services)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the manner of the answer to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North of 21 December 1984, at columns 412-14, he will provide figures for expenditure by the family practitioner services, the Dental Estimates Board, the Prescription Pricing Authority and other special health authorities providing National Health Service central services for 1983-84; and if he will also publish comparable figures, at current and at 1983-84 prices, and comparable percentages for 1960 and 1970, for the above categories and those in the original answer.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1986, c. 533]: The figures for 1983-84, and those for the earlier years at 1983-84 prices, were given in my predecessor's reply to my hon. Friend on 19 March 1985, at columns 452-58. I assume that my hon. Friend requires the equivalent information for 1984-85. This is given in the tables.

The figures for 1960-61 and 1970-71 at 1984-85 prices are calculated from the base year's figures by adjusting for general inflation as measured by the gross domestic product deflator at market prices.

Comparisons over this long period cannot be entirely reliable because of changes in the structure of GDP and in the organisation of the National Health Service.

1. The figures for 1960-61 and 1970-71 do not include expenditure on community health and ambulance services which prior to NHS re-organisation on 1 April 1974 were the responsibility of local government authorities.

2. The administrative expenses of executive councils which were responsible for the administration of family practitioner services are included in the table as such costs are reflected in the annual accounts of health authorities from 1974-75. For 1960-61 an apportionment of composite England and Wales figures was necessary to derive figures for England only.

3. For years prior to 1974-75 the analyses of expenditure by type provided by the annual accounts are less detailed than those for later years.

4. "Other expenses" for 1960-61 and 1970-71 includes the total non-pay expenditure on the blood transfusion and mass radiography services for which component details are not readily available—£1·0 million 1960-61 and £1·8 million 1970-71 (£7·3 million ad £8·6 million at 1984-85 prices).

5. Total capital expenditure by the authorities whose current expenditure is included in the table was £25·1 million in 1960-61, £119·2 million in 1970-71 (£184·3 million and £572·4 million at 1984-85 prices) and £795·4 million in 1984-85.

1. The table shows payments made to doctors, pharmacists, dentists, opticians and others contracted to the NHS to provide family practitioner services (FPS).
2. Annual accounts of health authorities (and their predecessor executive councils) provide one analysis only of such expenditure which assigns it functionally to service.
3. The table shows 1960-61 and 1970-71 FPS expenditure categorised as far as practicable in the same format as that of the annual white papers on the summarised accounts of health authorities since 1974-75. Thus, charges to patients retained by pharmacists, dentists and opticians are reflected in the table but other items of FPS income collected by health authorities (or executive councils) such as charges to patients for dental treatment at heath centres and receipts from the sale of prescription charge pre-payment certificates, are excluded.
4. For 1960-61 the accounts provide separate services totals for England and similar totals for Wales with detailed analyses of only the composite England and Wales totals. It has therefore been necessary to derive the detailed figures for England prorata.
5. All spending on FPS is regarded as current expenditure. Some relatively insignificant costs strictly of a capital nature (relating only to certain payments made to general medical practitioners for practice accommodation) are however included.

Notes to table 3

1. The table shows summaries of the detailed accounts of the Dental Estimates Board (DEB), the Prescription Pricing Authority (PPA) and its predecessor Joint Pricing Committee for England (JPC); together with a composite summary of the accounts for 1984-85 only of other special health authorities providing NHS central services.

2. (a) Other special health authorities providing NHS central services comprise:
   (i) the Central Blood Laboratories Authority (CBLA)—established 1 December 1982.
   (ii) the Mental Health Act Commission—established 1 September 1983.
   (iii) the Rampton Hospital Review Board—established 11 June 1981.
   (iv) the Rural Dispensing Committee—established 1 April 1983.
   (v) the National Health Service Training Authority—established 1 October 1983.
   (b) The expenses of the Health Service Supply Council (established on 14 July 1980) which are met in full from charges made to regional health authorities are excluded.
   (c) The functions of all these special health authorities are either new or were devolved by the Department and comparable figures for 1960-61 and 1970-71 are consequently not available.

3. Capital expenditure by the DEB and the JPC was not separately identifiable and is included in the totals for 1960-61 and 1970-71. The amounts are known to be insignificant except that there was substantial capital expenditure by the DEB in 1970-71.

For 1984-85 the PPA and the CBLA recorded capital expenditure of £2·3 million and £16·6 million. These sums are excluded from the table.

Special Claims (Staff)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the 5,000 additional staff at the Department of Health and Social Security local offices will be posted to the special claims section; and if he will break this down by region.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 63]: The 500 extra staff for fraud work are separate from the 5,000 additional local office staff for general work. None of the 5,000 will be used on fraud work. As regards the disposition of the 500, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Albans (Mr. Lilley) on 15 May, at column 533.

EMPLOYMENT

Parental and Family Leave

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General what response Her Majesty's Government will make at the European Commission of the Council of Ministers meeting in June on the European Economic Community parental and family leave directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The draft directive is not on the agenda for discussion at the June meeting of the EC Council of Labour and Social Affairs Ministers. The Government's opposition in principle to the draft directive is well known and in the event of it being raised for discussion at the Council the Government's response would, of course, be based on this position.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Paymaster General how many (a) men and (b) women over the age of 50 years have been unemployed for over one, two, three, four, five and more than five years, respectively.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. Figures are given showing the numbers of male and female claimants aged over 50 years in the United Kingdom who, on 10 April 1986, had been unemployed for the durations requested.

	Males	Females
Over one year	252,745	83,640
Over two years	180,579	58,364
Over three years	129,596	40,291
Over four years	89,822	25,489
Over five years*	58,214	14,881

* These figures are affected by industrial action in 1981 and consequent emergency computer procedures.

Tourism

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General what is his Department's estimate of the relationship between the sterling exchange rate with the dollar and the number of United States visitors to the United Kingdom; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the percentage change in the number of United States visitors to the United Kingdom since 1970.

Mr. Trippier: Movements in exchange rates are only one of a number of complex factors which affect the decisions of tourists, and no attempt to quantify the relationship has been made.

The number of visits by United States residents to the United Kingdom increased by 109 per cent. between 1970 and 1985 to 3,166,000 in 1985.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General what evidence he has as to the effectiveness of expenditure by the British Tourist Authority on promotion in the United States in increasing the number of visitors to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: It is not possible to quantify the effects of the British Tourist Authority's expenditure. A number of factors influence international tourism flows, but the level of growth in traffic from the United States to the United Kingdom over a number of years in comparison with other European destinations suggests that the British Tourist Authority's sustained efforts in promoting the United Kingdom have been to good effect. The BTA enjoys a high standing in the tourism industry and the substantial contribution which the industry makes to the cost of the BTA's activities abroad shows that its effectiveness is recognised.

Job Release Allowance

Mr. Straw asked the Paymaster General what was the job release allowance in 1980 and in each subsequent year up to the present date.

Mr. Lang: The following table gives the weekly job release allowances for each year since 1980.

	Taxfree		Taxable
	Higher £	Lower £	Higher £	Lower £
1980	45·50	36·00	53·00	43·00
1981	50·50	40·00	59·00	47·50
1982	55·00	43·50	64·00	52·00
1983	57·75	45·70	67·20	54·60
1984	60·65	48·00	70·55	57·35
1985	63·00	49·95	71·15	58·35
1986	65·50	51·95	74·00	60·65

Mr. Straw asked the Paymaster General what has been the percentage increase in the level of the job release allowance for each year since 1980; and what were the percentage increases in the retail prices index for the corresponding years.

Mr. Lang: The following table gives the information requested.

Percentage Increases

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Raoul Wallenberg

Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg at the United Nations General Assembly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: As I said in answer to a question from my hon. Friend on 12 February, we will continue to assist the Swedish Government in any way which may be appropriate in their efforts to establish the fate of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg.

South African Embassy

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek the removal of the military attachés from the South African embassy.

Mr. Eggar: As my hon. Frind the Minister of State, the Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker), told the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 5 March, we agreed with our European partners to withdraw our military attachés from Pretoria and not to grant accreditation to military attachés from South Africa. The continued presence of South African military attachés in Britain remains under review.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Southall Horse Market

Mr. Greenway asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent inspections have been made of Southall horse market; what their results have been; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: My veterinary staff have inspected this market several times this year, most recently on 14 May, when it was noted that 18 new partitioned stalls had been erected for the separation of shod horses. Efforts have been made by the auctioneers to improve handling and prevent unauthorised access to the sale ring. Veterinary staff will continue to attend the market regularly to monitor and encourage compliance with the voluntary code of practice on horse markets.

Fishing Vessels (Registration)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about restrictions existing in France and Denmark on foreign fishing vessels registering as French or Danish; and what rights such vessels have to participate in French and Danish fishing quotas.

Mr. Jopling: I understand that for a fishing vessel to be registered in France it must be at least 50 per cent. owned by French nationals resident in a territory of the French Republic for a minimum of six months a year. Where the vessel is company-owned, 51 per cent. of the shares must be held by French nationals; and personnel, for example the president of the board of directors, the majority of directors and all the general managers, must also be French nationals. Once a vessel is registered it is entitled to fish against the French quota.

In the case of Denmark, I understand that the entitlement to register a fishing vessel is confined to owners who are Danish nationals or are foreign nationals resident in Denmark. Where the owner is a body corporate, two thirds of the shares must be held by such persons. In order to fish against the national quota, a fishing vessel owner must also be registered and as a prerequisite to such registration he must be a Danish national or have lived in Denmark for at least two years and his income in the previous year must have been wholly earned from fishing.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Property Sales

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners (1) whether diocesan officers consult the commissioners as to the choice of estate agents to handle the proposed sale of diocesan property;

(2) whether, in decisions as to whether to approve sales of property proposed by individual diocesan parsonage boards, the commissioners take account of the estate agent whom the board proposes to use for the disposal of the property; and if he will make a statement.

Sir William van Straubenzee: No.

PRIME MINISTER

Rochester-upon-Medway

Q86. Mr. Rowe asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit the city of Rochester-upon-Medway.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 June.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 June.

Mr. Sayeed asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the Prime Minister of New Zealand.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Private Bill Procedure

Sir Paul Bryan asked the Lord Privy Seal whether he has any plans to institute a review of private Bill procedure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: Following consultations with the Chairman of Ways and Means, with my noble Friend the Lord President of the Council and the Lord Chairman of Committees, as well as discussions through the usual channels, I propose that there should be a general review of private Bill procedure to be carried out by a Joint Committee of both Houses. The Committee would examine the processes of enacting private legislation and consider whether:

(a) there are any matters of a kind at present dealt with by private Bill which could more appropriately be dealt with some other way, taking account of the interests both of promoters and other affected parties;

(b) any changes are desirable in private Bill procedure; and

(c) any amendments are desirable to the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act 1936 and the procedure thereunder.

It would also consider whether any amendments are desirable to the Statutory Orders (Special Procedure) Act 1945.

I shall be tabling the appropriate motion later today.

THE ARTS

Sadler's Wells Theatre

Mr. Greenway asked the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on the funding of Sadler's Wells theatre: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have received numerous representations about Sadler's Wells during my time as Minister for the Arts, but I am confident that the plurality of funding being provided by the Arts Council, private sponsorship and other sources will enable Sadler's Wells to continue as a receiving theatre in London.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mortgage Arrears (Possession Orders)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Attorney-General, for each of the years for which figures are available since 1980 (a) how many possession orders have been sought and (b) how many possession orders have been granted, in respect of mortgage arrears in the county courts of Middlesbrough, Stockton and Hartlepool.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is available only for individual county courts for years since 1982. Figures for 1982 to 1985 are given in the table.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, of those prisoners who died from natural causes in each of the years 1981 to 1985, respectively, how many applied for early release on the grounds of such illness; how many such applications were granted and refused, respectively; and how many of such refusals were referred to him for futher consideration.

Mr. Mellor: Information about the number of cases in which the royal prerogative of mercy was exercised to allow a terminally-ill prisoner to be released early was given in answer to the hon. and learned Member's question of 12 March, at columns 466-67. The other information requested is not immediately available, but I will see what relevant information can be obtained and I shall write to the hon. and learned Member.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) by what methods he is making sure that cases of terminally-ill prisoners needing urgent consideration are clearly identified;

(2) by whom case workers in the criminal department have been reminded of the need to give cases of prisoners who are terminally-ill urgent and sympathetic consideration; and whether he will place a copy of such reminder in the Library;

(3) when he proposes to give a reminder to prison department establishments of the need to give urgent and sympathetic consideration to cases involving the release of terminally-ill prisoners on similar lines to the reminder given to case workers in the criminal department.

Mr. Mellor: I would refer the hon. and learned Member to the answer given yesterday to his related questions on the subject of terminally-ill prisoners.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the estimated population of untried prisoners in Prison Department establishments in England and Wales on 19 April, or the latest date for which figures are available, by length of time since initial reception into custody.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 28 April 1986, c. 304]: The information is given in the table.

Estimated population of untried prisoners in Prison Department Establishments in England and Wales on 28 February 1986. Length of time since initial remand in custody.†*

	Estimated number‡
Up to 3 months	5,250
Over 3, up to 6 months	1,800
Over 6, up to 9 months	600
Over 9, up to 12 months	200
Over 12 months	60
Total	7,920

* Based on records held centrally which are approximate, detailed checking of individual cases would involve disproportionate cost.

† Including any time which may have been spent on bail after the initial remand in custody.

‡ Rounded estimates; the components do not add to the total because they have been rounded independently.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims have been dealt with by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the latest available date in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: The provisional figure for the number of applications in respect of injuries incurred in England and Wales resolved by the board from 1 August 1964 to 31 March 1986 is 262,907.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board are pending at the latest date.

Mr. Mellor: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Sir E. Griffiths) on 23 April 1986, at columns 149.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board have been successful in England and Wales at the latest date.

Mr. Mellor: The provisional figure for the number of awards made by the board in respect of injuries incurred in England and Wales from 1 August 1964 to 31 March 1986 is 212,757.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the highest settlement made by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in England and Wales to the latest available date.

Mr. Mellor: The highest award made to date amounted to £303,500, in the financial year 1984-85.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many claims have been made to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside at the latest date;

(2) what is the highest award made by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside to date;

(3) how many claims to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board have been (a) successful and (b) rejected in Liverpool and Merseyside to date.

Mr. Mellor: Stastistics are not available on the place of residence of applicants to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the longest waiting time to date for a claim to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. Mellor: Of applications currently outstanding, the longest waiting time is for one submitted to the board in August 1970. Regular interim awards have been paid, including one in May 1986, but the applicant's medical condition has not yet stabilised sufficiently for a final award to be made.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the current waiting time for appeals to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the latest date;

(2) how many appeals are outstanding to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the latest date.

Mr. Mellor: At 30 April 1986 about 5,000 applications were awaiting hearing by the board. The length of time between an applicant refusing a single member's adjudication and a hearing varies between six and 18 months.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the total cost to date of the running of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board;

(2) if he will list the cost of the running of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board on an annual basis to the latest date.

Mr. Mellor: Following is the information:

† Provisional.

Northeye Prison

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners evacuated from Northeye prison are currently at Send; what changes have been made in security; and what plans he has for the dispersal of these prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: On 3 June 1986 there were 86 ex-Northeye prisoners at Her Majesty's prison Send. Security improvements at Send since 1 May consist of the provision of a UHF radio net, the fitting of grilles to the windows of the visits room and an increase of 12 in the authorised staffing level. The ex-Northeye population at Send will be gradually depleted by discharges and by transfers to other establishments. It is provisionally proposed that they will all have been discharged or removed by the end of August.

Detention Centre Regime

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his latest assessment of the detention centre regime introduced four years ago.

Mr. Mellor: Following the evaluation of the experimental tougher regime in selected detention centres between 1980 and 1984, a consistent detention centre regime was introduced in March 1985. We are satisfied that the regime, which is kept under routine review, is being positively developed along lines suitable for those young offenders on whom the courts impose short custodial sentences.

Public Order

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he has any plans to seek to amend the Public Order Bill (a) to make mass trespass on to farmland a criminal offence or (b) to make trepass on to residential premises a criminal offence; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will call for reports from the chief constables of Avon and Somerset, Dorset and Wiltshire on the recent incidents involving a hippy convoy in their areas, and as to the extra costs of policing which have arisen.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a private notice question by my hon. Friend the Member for the New Forest (Mr. McNair Wilson) on 3 June, at columns 733-34. On the separate issue of trespass on residential premises, we have no plans to bring forward legislation to amend the criminal law.

I shall write to my hon. Friend about the cost of the police operations.

Police—Immigration Operations

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements there are in the Metropolitan area for keeping records, both locally and centrally, of joint police-immigration operations.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that he holds central records of all joint operations. The immigration service holds local records of all joint operations; additionally, central records are maintained of all major joint operations.

Southall Horse Market

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many successful prosecutions for breaches of animal protection laws there have been since 1979 of horse and pony vendors at Southall horse market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not separately available from the information collected centrally.

Road Traffic Offences

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take during European Road Safety Year 1986 to increase vehicle users' perception of the risk of being detected for road traffic offences.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The enforcement of road traffic law is the responsibility of individual chief officers of police. The Government's rolling programme of publicity on road safety includes the theme of police enforcement.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Tourism

12. Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the estimated number of non-United Kingdom visitors to Northern Ireland in 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board's estimate of non-United Kingdom visitors to Northern Ireland in 1985 is 444,000. This was a drop of 59,000 compared with the 1984 figure, largely arising from a drop of 81,000 in the number of visitors from the Republic. Visitors from the rest of the world increased by 22,000.

Northern Ireland Assembly

13. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the outcome of his discussions with Northern Ireland political parties on the future of the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Mr. Tom King: The leaders of the Ulster Unionist Party and the Democratic Unionist Party declined my invitation of 27 May to the parties participating in the Northern Ireland Assembly to discuss its future. I met the Leader of the Alliance party on Monday to hear his views. I also saw yesterday the Leader of the Social Democratic and Labour party with some of his colleagues and discussed among other matters the prospects for devolved government. I shall consider the position of the present Assembly.

Small Firms

14. Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he plans any change in Government support for small firms in Northern Ireland, following the recent launch of a loan fund for small firms by Shell United Kingdom.

Dr. Boyson: I commend the initiative of Shell United Kingdom, in arranging for these funds to be made available. The provision of 18 per cent. of total fund to Northern Ireland — a total of £90,000 — is a vote of confidence in the Province and in the enterprise of its young people. I have no immediate plans for adding to the existing comprehensive range of support for small firms in the Province.

Labour Statistics

15. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many vacancies are currently on offer at careers offices in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: At 4 April 1986, there were 576 unfilled vacancies for young people aged under 18 at employment service jobmarkets in Northern Ireland. On the same date there were also 2,206 unfilled vacancies for adults.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

16. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what have been the effects on Northern Ireland industry arising from the Anglo-Irish agreement.

Dr. Boyson: We hope that the agreement, which was widely welcomed abroad, will lead to increased investment. Investment is, however, less likely to take place if there is further disruption such as that which took place on 3 March.

21. Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what have been the economic and social benefits for the people of Northern Ireland arising from the first six months of the Anglo-Irish agreement.

Mr. Tom King: Within the framework of the Intergovernmental conference the Irish Government have put forward views on matters of significant or special interest to the minority community in relation to economic and social policy, as well as in the fields of education, health and housing, as has been reported in the communiqués. We are now considering these further. The conference has also discussed possible ways of enhancing co-operation in the promotion of tourism.

Rothmans Factory, Carrickfergus

17. Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps the Government are taking to alleviate the effect on the work force in view of the announcement of redundancies at Rothmans factory in Carrickfergus.

Dr. Boyson: As I announced on 6 May I have asked a group of officials to examine the situation with a view to alleviating the effects of the redundancies at Carrickfergus. We have already provided on the spot information about job vacancies and offered job and new business development counselling to those who wish to avail themselves of it.

I have also decided to increase from 45 per cent. to 50 per cent. the rate of industrial development grant available in the Carrickfergus area.

Trade Missions

18. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the outcome of trade missions arranged by the Industrial Development Board in 1985-86.

Dr. Boyson: During 1985-86 the industrial development board arranged five trade missions to Europe and north America. Orders received by companies participating in these missions amounted to £1·5 million, and further orders with an anticipated value of around £8 million are expected.

Job Clubs

19. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the outcome of the job clubs experiment in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: Job clubs have been operating in Belfast and Londonderry job markets since 6 January on a trial basis. To date 122 long-term unemployed persons have joined and of this number 63 have obtained jobs or places on training schemes.

Security

20. Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on cross-border security.

Mr. Tom King: Recently there has been a number of serious terrorist incidents close to the Border in Northern Ireland. These emphasise the importance of the steady development of closer co-operation between the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Garda Siochana which has been set in hand under the Anglo-Irish agreement.

Financial Services

22. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next intends to meet the Irish Justice Minister to discuss financial services between the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: It is not our normal practice to give advance notice of meetings with Irish Ministers.

Political Parties (Talks)

23. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had recently with representatives of Northern Ireland political parties.

Mr. Tom King I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to his question on 1 May. The leaders of the Ulster Unionist Party and the Democratic Unionist Party declined my invitation of 27 May to the parties participating in the Northern Ireland Assembly to discuss its future. I met the Leader of the Alliance Party on Monday to hear his views. I also saw yesterday the Leader of the Social Democratic and Labour Party with some of his colleagues and discussed among other matters the prospects for devolved government.

Prison Officers

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prison officers have been (a) injured and (b murdered in each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Information on staff injuries is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The number of staff murdered in each of the past 10 years is as follows:

	Number
1976	3
1977	3
1978	2
1979	9
1980	2
1981	0
1982	2
1983	1
1984	1
1986*	0

*To date.

Protection of prison staff is a matter of high priority and much emphasis has been put on the provision of appropriate security arrangements, both at and way from the prison establishments.

DEFENCE

SA-80

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence if there will be any limits placed on the prime contractor for the SA-80 as to how much of the order may be subcontracted abroad.

Mr. Lee: Yes. While United Kingdom prime contractors will be permitted to include overseas sub-components with the exception of any deemed essential to the maintenance of a United Kingdom small arms manufacturing capability, potential tenderers have been informed that United Kingdom content will be an important factor in assessing the overall value for money which determines our procurement policies.

Small Arms and Ammunition

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of his Department's small arms and ammunitions requirement he intends to open to competition in 1986-87, 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90, respectively.

Mr. Lee: Our intention is that small arms requirements in the period in question will wherever practicable be open to competition, and this is expected to encompass the bulk of such purchases. With regard to small arms ammunition for 1986-87 I have nothing to add to my answer of 16 May 1986, at column 565. Future decisions will be taken and announced in due course.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis he decided the specific percentages of small arms and ammunition requirements which would be open to competition in 1986 and 1987, respectively.

Mr. Lee: Such decisions are taken on the basis of the policy stated by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 13 January, at column 517.

Challenger Tank

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates and numbers of orders placed for the Challenger main battle tank; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Production orders for Challenger MBT have been as follows:

Date
April 1982 November 1982	To equip four regiments
June 1984	To equip fifth regiment
July 1985	To equip sixth regiment

In addition to the operational requirements, these orders have included tanks to meet repair and training needs.

Multi-launch Rocket System

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence to what he attributes the delay in the placing of a contract by the pilot nation for the multi-launch rocket system phase 1 system; when he now expects this contract to be placed; what are the implications of the delay for the planned procurement of this system for the United Kingdom regiments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: As reflected in the reply to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 30 January 1986, at column 630, the contract award was planned for May this year. As I announced last week, the contract was duly awarded by Germany, the pilot nation, on behalf of the European partners, to the Europaische Produktions Gesellschaft mbH (EPG) on Tuesday 27 May 1986.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES — VOLUME 98

SESSION 1985–86

19th May 6th June 1986

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
